In Foxe's account of Walter Brute, we have an extract from a document of 1391, containing these words: "Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost" (vol. iii., modern edition, p. 137).

In Spenser's Hymne of Heavenly Love, we read:—

"Moved in its self by love."

Is this a misprint, or is it a genuine instance of the use of its? H.

HORNECK FAMILY (3rd S. vi. 38, 92, 112.)—I have lately obtained a letter, written by Capt. William Horneck, July 27, 1733, to the Board of Ordnance, respecting the building of a new curtain in brick to the fortifications at Portsmouth. Perhaps M. S. R. would like to see it. Lieut.-Gen.

Charles Horneck was elected a member of the Cornish Club before 1780, and he died in 1804.

Did "Castle-Horneck," near Penzance, now the property of Mr. Borlase, once belong to the Horneck family. It is probable that they held property in Cornwall, as one of the rules of the Cornish Club was, that the person proposed for election should be a native of the county, or the possessor of property there. TRENTAN.

"THE RUGBY MAGAZINE" (3rd S. viii. 190.)—1. "Xantippe," &c.—B. stands for Burbidge, now the Rev. Thomas Burbidge, D.D., formerly of Leamington. 2. "Chirpings," &c.—N. is now the Rev. John Nassau Simpkinson, rector of Great Brington, Northamptonshire. 3. "Two autumn Days at Athens."—T. Y. C. stands for the late Arthur Hugh Clough. Old Rugbeians, his contemporaries in the school, will remember the nicknames suggested by the initials T. Y. JAYDER.

ETHER AND CHLOROFORM (3rd S. viii. 187.)—It is observed by your correspondent J. Y. that the practice of rendering patients insensible to pain previous to the performance of a difficult surgical operation was not unknown to the ancients; and, in proof of this assertion, he gives an interesting extract from Middleton's tragedy of Women beware of Women. I believe the most extraordinary, as well as the oldest illustration of such a practice will be found incidentally referred to in the venerable if not very veracious pages of the Greek naturalist and historian Ælian. I append an extract from Ælian's marvellous story:—

"In the absence of Æsculapius his attendants undertook the care of a woman, who was afflicted with a worm in her bowels. Their mode of proceeding was as follows: To put her to sleep, to cut off her head, and then one of them extracted from her bowels an enormous worm (an ελμυς.) So far they were successful; but they had not the skill to replace properly the amputated head on its owner's shoulders. Meanwhile Æsculapius returned, and finding fault with the operators for attempting what was beyond human skill, he 'in a manner alike divine and ineffable,' readjusted the head, and restored the woman to life."—De Animal. lib. ix. c. 83, pp. 541, 542. Cologne, 1616.

W. B. MAC CARR.

Dinan, Cotes du Nord, France.

QUOTATION (3rd S. viii. 228.)—The lines beginning

"Continuous as the stars that shine" will be found in Wordsworth. They form the second stanza of a short poem, called "The Daffodils," which commences—

"I wandered lonely as a cloud," &c.

G. W. TOMLINSON.

Huddersfield.

PLYMOUTH (3rd S. viii. 87, 137.)—The print of Plymouth Royal Hospital, referred to by Mr. PRIDEAUX, is taken from The State of the Prison reader of the fact. I contend for the moral obligation of the prefatory note in all such cases. Before all things, in the fellowship of Book-world, let us have mutual frankness and candour! MR. CLULOW's second work I shall be happy to receive, and to read as attentively and pleasantly as I have read his first.

D. BLAIR.

Melbourne.

THE GUELPHS AND GIBELINES (3rd S. viii. 227.)—There is no authority, I believe, superior to Sismondi on this subject. The family of Welf (Guelph) became extinct with Cunegunda, a female; and the family of D'Este succeeded to their estate, from which house our Royal family is descended.

The Ghibelines were so named from Weibelingen, a castle in the diocese of Augsburg.

"Conrad fut élevé au trône, maison qu'on désignoit, tantôt par le nom de Salique, et tantôt par celui de Guelphinga, ou Waiblinga, château du diocèse d'Augsbourg, dans les montagnes de Hertfeld. . . . Ses partisans furent ensuite appelés Gibelins. Une autre maison puissante, originaire d'Altdorf, possédoit, à cette époque, la Bavière; comme elle eut à sa tête, successivement, plusieurs princes qui portoient le nom de Guelph ou Welf, elle fut elle-même, ainsi que ses partisans, désignée par celui de Guelph. Ces noms y furent pour cri de guerre." (Sismondi, Rep. Ital. ii. 22.)

The same author refers to Henry the Proud, heir to the house of Guelph, Duke of Saxony and of Bavaria, and Marquis of Tuscany as distinguished from the Ghibeline house, or that of Hohenstauffen. (Id. ii. 38.)

Raumer's work on the Hohenstauffen should also be referred to, and generally all the authorities cited by Sismondi in his great work.

T. J. BUCKTON.

Your correspondent MR. DALTON may be interested in the following quotation from a very useful little volume, which forms one of a series published in Paris by L. Hachette et Cie, Histoire du Moyen Age, par V. Duruy:—

"Dans l'empire, Lothaire se trouva pressé entre deux puissantes maisons: celle de Souabe, qu'il combattit sans la pouvoir abattre; celle de Bavière, qu'il agrandit en faisant épouser sa fille au duc Henri le Superbe qui, à la mort de Lothaire, hérita de tous ses domaines, le duché de Saxe en Allemagne et, en Italie, les fiefs de la grande Comtesse. La domination de Henri le Superbe s'étendit alors de la Baltique jusqu'au Tibre, mais ses fiefs étaient séparés, et cette division l'affaiblissait. Ceux de Hohenstauffen, au contraire, se touchaient: c'étaient les duchés de Souabe et de Franconie.

"Quand Lothaire mourut (1137), il fut évident que la couronne passerait dans l'une de ces deux grandes maisons. Celle de Saxe paraissait assurée de l'obtenir, mais beaucoup de vassaux allemands commencèrent à songer qu'il ne fallait pas se donner un trop puissant maître, et, presque subrepticement, firent nommer, dans une diète convoquée à Mayence, en l'absence des députés saxons et bavarois, Conrad de Hohenstauffen, Seigneur de Weiblingen. Henri le Superbe protesta. Il était chef de la maison des Welfs. Leurs partisans s'appelèrent Guelphes et Gibelins, noms qui passèrent les Alpes et s'établirent en Italie. Comme la maison de Souabe fut l'ennemi du saint-siège, la faction favorable à l'empereur fut celle des Gibelins; les amis de l'indépendance de l'Italie et de la papauté furent les Guelphes."—P. 255.

The bearing of these contests upon the Church of Rome may be seen in Prof. Döllinger's History of the Church, vol. v. pp. 1 seqq. (edit. 1842).

There is an interesting note on the subject of MR. DALTON's twofold query in the late Mr. Cary's translation of Dante (Paradise, canto vi. number 10), which, if not within reach of MR. DALTON, it will give me pleasure to transcribe and forward to him. See further Muratori, Dissert. de G. et G. in Antiq. Ital. Med. Ævi, tom. iv. p. 606.

H. W. T.

"I maladetti nomi di parte Guelfa e Ghibellina si dice che si crearono prima in Alamagna, per cagione che due grandi baroni di là avevano guerra insieme, e ciascuno aveva una forte castello, l'uno incontro all'altro: l'uno si chiamava Guelfo, e l'altro Ghibellino."—Bocc. Nov. 15, 11. (Tramater, Vocab. Ital. t. iii.; see also Chronicon Weingartense de Guelphis Princip. apud Leibnitz, t. i. p. 71.)

"D'après une Chronique de Bavière, citée par Masco-vius, l. iii. p. 141, ces noms commencèrent à être donnés aux partis après la bataille de Winsberg, entre Conrad III et Guelfo, le 21 Décembre, 1140. Ces noms y furent donnés pour cri de guerre."

See for the Factions, &c., Sismondi, Histoire des Républiques Italiennes.

J. MACRAY.

Oxford.

"A NATION OF SHOPKEEPERS" (3rd S. viii. 191.)—This phrase, repeated a few millions of times every year by the newspapers, is invariably credited to the first Napoleon. Now, that renowned general may have flung the phrase full in the face of John Bull, in a moment of insuppressible Anglophobia; but if he did, he first borrowed it from our own Adam Smith. As witness the following extract from The Wealth of Nations, Book iv. Chap. vii. part 3:—

"To found a great empire for the sole purpose of raising up a people of customers, may at first sight appear a project fit only for a nation of shopkeepers. It is, however, a project altogether unfit for a nation of shopkeepers, but extremely fit for a nation whose government is influenced by shopkeepers."

D. BLAIR.

Melbourne.

CURIOUS NAMES (3rd S. viii. 236.)—At the end of 1861 or early in 1862, appeared an advertisement in a London paper, either the Times or Morning Advertiser, for the next of kin to Blastus Godley. At school I knew a boy of the name of Orson, so called because one of his relations was named Valentine, after the celebrated Valentine Greatrakes. In San Francisco de las Montañas, near Panama, resides a family of the name of Feo (Anglicè Ugly); there are ten sons, named successively Francesco Primero, Francesco Secundo, &c., up to Francesco Decimo. The father's name is also Francesco, and the mother Francesca.

JOHN POWER.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 197.

NOTES:— Temple Lands, 281 — Devonshire Household Tales, 282 — Duke de Longueville: the Battle of the Spurs, 283 — Capt. Ralph Grestorex, Mathematical Instrument Maker, 284 — Autographs in Books, ib. — Memorial of Bishop Ken — "Nobbler" and "Belltopper" — Grymes' Monument — Incised Monumental Crosses — Pseudonyms of American Writers — "Bohira and the Church at Bosrah" — Yeoman — Anecdote of Arkwright — Royal Licence, 285.

QUERIES:— Anonymous — Beckford's "Lives of the Painters" — Biographical Queries — Braes See — Wm. Cartwright's "Royal Slave" — Coventry Bowlers — Dobbie or Dobie of Stonyhill, or Berwickshire, and Rattray of Leith — English Medals — English Poet — Fishes and Fleas — Florus — Generals commanding the Enemy's Forces — The Gypsies — Jacques Haute — Hour — Rowland Jones — Death of the Earl of Kingston — Lawrence — "Liber Munerum, Publicorum Hibernie" — Mrs. Mee — Milton — Orkney and Zetland — Lady Packington — James Price, M.D., the last of the Alchemists — Quotations Wanted — Roman Inscription at Lincoln, &c., 287.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:— Dr. Mayne — Pie Corner — Sir Henry Bishop — Luskus — Obermayr's "Picture Gallery of Catholic Abuses" — Canning's Latin Poems, 291.

REPLIES:— Browne, Viscount Montague, of Cowdray Park, co. Sussex, 292 — Chartulary of Whalley Abbey, 294 — Coach, ib. — "The Black Dwarf," 295 — Facings of Regiments, ib. — Hard Tack: Black Bread of Dauphiné — Atlantic Cable Telegraph — 85th and 88th Regiments — Epitaphs Abroad — Foreign Heraldic Works — Roman Catholic Gentry in Lancashire — Macmore — Wasps — Biblical Versifications in English — Mary Clare Warner — Salmon and Apprentices — Marshal Soult and the Battle of Toulouse, &c., 296.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

TEMPLE LANDS.

Before the suppression of the Order of Knights Templars in Scotland, they had large possessions in that kingdom. In every royal burgh there were one or more Temple tenements, which possessed, among other privileges, that of sanctuary. This right, after the transference of the Temple lands to the Johannites, or Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, still continued; and there is among the Acta Dominorum a suit, at the instance of Sir Walter Lindesay, the Head of the Order—and as such sitting in Parliament as Lord St. John's—against the Provost and magistrates of Stirling for taking one Thomas Bynny out of a Temple land in that royal burgh, and "yair through brek and the privilege of Sanct John," Nov. 23, 1509.

It is a remarkable instance of the permanence of local traditions that, although the Reformation brought with it a suppression of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, the belief that Temple lands had an inherent and absolute right of sanctuary continued down to a recent period. Thus, in the county of Fife, in the village of Aberdour, in the year 1820, two Temple tenements there were known by the denomination of Houses of Refuge. And in the royal burgh of Kinghorn, the privilege had been claimed and actually respected shortly before that time. It appears that, for some offence or other, a female had come under the ban of the civil authorities, who dispatched a constable to apprehend her. She fled, and took refuge in a Temple house in the burgh; and rushing up-stairs, threw open the window above the door, and roared out with all her might, "Touch me now, if you dare, ye blackguards!" Strange to say, the right was in this instance respected. The title-deeds of this house were afterwards examined carefully, and, upon inspection, it was found that it was undoubtedly a Temple land; the last charter of which was from the first Baron of Torphichen. The tenement in question had, therefore, been in non-entry for upwards of two hundred years.

The proceedings against the Templars in Scotland are to be found in Wilkins's Concilia, and have been recently reprinted in the second volume of the Spottiswood Miscellany—a work of great interest, little known in England. The Templars, it is believed, suffered more on account of their wealth and power than for their vices. Their possessions were transferred to the Johannites, or Knights of St. John of Jerusalem.

The head of the united Orders had a seat in Parliament, originally, as Preceptor of Torphichen; but latterly, as Lord St. John's—a title which the various Preceptors enjoyed until the Reformation, when Sir James Sandilands, of Calder, obtained a crown charter from Queen Mary conferring upon him in absolute property the entire possessions of the Order. For this grant he paid the large price of ten thousand crowns of the sun, with a yearly feu-duty of five hundred marks. By this charter, the territorial barony of Torphichen was created; under which, without any other creation, Sir James, who had previously sat as Lord St. John's, became Lord Torphichen in the Scottish Parliament. Upon his demise, by virtue of the same charter, his grand nephew took his title and place in Parliament. Probably this may be the latest instance of a peerage strictly territorial being recognised, and its succession regulated, by the destination in the dispositive clause. In order to pay the price, the first Lord alienated from time to time vast portions of his estate.

The second lord was a grand nephew of Sir James. He conveyed, upon the 9th November, 1599, the greater part of his remaining possessions to Robert Williamson, writer in Edinburgh, and James Tennent of Linthouse. From these individuals Lord Binning, subsequently Earl of Melros—a title he latterly exchanged for that of Haddington—became purchaser; and a new charter of creation was granted, incorporating the Temple lands into a new barony, called the Barony of Drem. In this way almost the whole of the first two Lords Torphichen's landed possessions, under Queen Mary's charter, were gradually alienated; leaving very little Temple property excepting the fortalice, or Tower of Torphichen, in the county of Linlithgow, which is still held by the present baron. This did not touch the territorial peerage, which has been recognised subsequently in every possible way. In the investigation as to precedence, by order of the crown in the reign of James VI., the original territorial charter by Mary was admitted as conclusive evidence of a peerage, although there was no special creation; and the barons, ever since then, have uniformly taken their place and voted in Parliament.

From a statement made by Lord Torphichen to the Commissioners appointed by King Charles I., "for trial of the rights and securities of the Kirk lands," a fact is disclosed which might have astonished Lord Campbell when so hastily disposing of the claim of barony by tenure, advanced by the present Lord Fitzhardinge. The Preceptors had a right to nominate their successors, provided their nomination was confirmed by the Grand Master at Rhodes. Thus Sir Walter Dundas, Preceptor of Torphichen, elected and sent Sir William Knowles, or Knollis, to Rhodes to be confirmed as his successor. This having been done, he became Lord St. John's without any charter or summons to that effect. This noble gentleman became Treasurer of James IV., and was killed with his master at Flodden.

Sir William having executed a nomination in favour of Sir Walter Lindsay, upon its confirmation at Rhodes, he again was received as Lord St. John's; and the same form was resorted to when Sir James Sandilands, the last Preceptor, was appointed. It will be kept in mind this was no ecclesiastical peerage, such as bishop or abbot; but a proper feudal title, in virtue of which the successive lords, as proved by the Rolls of Parliament, sat and voted with the "Domini Parliamenti."

Thus, the Temple peerage originally depended on the Grand Master of the Knights of St. John at Rhodes: for if he chose to reject the Scottish nominee, it was his right so to do. But this power, so far as is known, was never exercised; and the election of Lords St. John, without the intervention of the Scottish monarchs, continued till the Reformation — when under the charter of Mary, erecting the grants and superiorities into a temporal barony, the Lord St. John's, without any further trouble, was converted into Lord Torphichen — there not being one word, from beginning to the end of the instrument, as to any new creation. In the subsequent proceedings in the ranking, the Lords Torphichen have precedence only from the date of the charter; thus showing that the lawyers, of the time of James VI., held the peerage to be absolutely a territorial one. Had the old sittings been referred to and admitted, the precedence would have gone more than a century back. This important charter is printed in the second volume of the Spottiswood Miscellany.

The Haddington family retained the Barony of Drem for considerably more than a century, when it was sold; and in more modern times broken up in parcels, and purchased by various persons; that is to say, the right of superiority only, and many properties in Scotland still hold of a Temple Superior. The Earls of Haddington retained Drem (a farm of some extent, a few miles from Dunbar,) both in superiority and property; and this seat of the Templars and Johannites is now best known as one of the stations, in the county of Haddington, of the North British Railway. J. M.

DEVONSHIRE HOUSEHOLD TALES.—No. III.

V. THE COW AND THE PIXIES.

There was a farmer, and he had three cows; fine fat beauties they were. One called Facey, the other Diamond, and the third Beauty. One morning he went into his cowshed, and there he found Facey so thin that the wind would have blown her away. Her skin hung loose about her, all her flesh was gone, and she stared out of her great eyes as though she'd seen a ghost; and what was more, the fireplace in the kitchen was one great pile of wood ash. Well, he was bothered with it; he could not see how this had come about.

Next morning his wife went out to the shed, and see! Diamond was for all the world as wist a looking creature as Facey; nothing but a bag of bones, all the flesh gone, and half a rick of wood was gone too; but the fireplace was piled up three feet high with white wood ashes. The farmer determined to watch the third night; so he hid in a closet which opened out of the parlour, and he left the door just ajar, that he might see what passed.

Tick, tick, went the clock, and the farmer was nearly tired of waiting; and he had to bite his little finger to keep himself awake, when suddenly the door of his house flew open, and in rushed maybe a thousand pixies laughing and dancing, and dragging at the halter of Beauty till they had brought the cow into the middle of the room. The farmer thought he would have died of fright; and so perhaps he would have, had not curiosity kept him alive.

Tick, tick, went the clock, but he did not hear it now. He was too intent staring at the pixies and his last beautiful cow. He saw them throw her down, and fall on her, and kill her, and then with their knives they ripped her open, and flayed her as clean as a whistle. Then out ran some of the little people and brought in firewood, and made a roaring blaze on the hearth, and there they cooked the meat of the cow—they baked, and they boiled, they stewed and they fried.

"Take care," cried one, who seemed to be the king, "let no bone be broken."

Well, when they had all eaten, and had eaten up every scrap of beef on the cow, they began playing games with the bones, tossing them one to another. One little leg bone fell close to the closet door, and the farmer was so afraid lest the pixies should come there and find him in searching for the bone, that he put out his hand, and drew it in to him. Then he saw the king stand on the table, and say "Gather the bones!"

Round and round flew the imps, picking up the bones. "Arrange them!" said the king; and they placed them all in their proper positions in the hide of the cow. Then they folded the skin over them, and the king struck the heap of bone and skin with his rod. Whisht! up sprang the cow, and lowed dismally. It was alive again; but now, as the pixies dragged it back to its stall, it halted in the off fore foot, for a bone was missing.

"The cock crew, Away they flew,"

and the farmer crept trembling to bed.

This story is wide spread. Vobun relates the following tale picked up in the Vorarlberg. The night-folk came into a house, took the cow out of the stall, slaughtered it, and, along with the children of the house, ate it whilst the parents were at mass. One of the children broke a leg-bone. The night-folk collected the bones, wrapped them in the skin, said, "There is no help for it; the beast must be lame," and the cow rose up alive, but halted on one foot. (Vobun, Sagen aus Vorarlberg, p. 27.)

Similar stories are told in Switzerland, canton Bern, Aargau, and in Tirol (Kanton Bern, p. 243; Rocholz, Schweizersagen, p. 316; Drei Sommer in Tirol, p. 82; Bridel, Conservateur Suisse, 1826, No. 43). The same myth comes to us from Italy. (Wolf, Beiträge, i. 89.)

In the Legenda Aurea the story is told of St. Germanus, that the host of a house slaughtered his calf for the saint on his arrival as traveller; and after the meal, the saint collected the bones, wrapped them in the skin, prayed, and up rose the calf alive. A similar miracle is related of St. Garmon by Nennius, so that the myth must be Celtic as well as German. Another Celtic saint, Mochua, performed the same miracle on a stag. Abbot William at Villiers performed it on an ox. (Thomas Cantipratensis, Bonum Universale.)

An Irish legend relates:—

"Servan was a saint of approved prowess and great good nature: once when a hospitable poor man killed his only pig to entertain him and his religious companions, he supped upon the pork, and restored the pig to life next morning."—Bolland, i. 815, Jan. 13.

The same tale is found in Schleswig with variations. (Müllenhoff, Sagen, 324.)

The story originates among German and Scandinavian peoples from the Eddaic legend of Thor. One day the God Thor set out in his car drawn by two he-goats. He stopped the night at a peasant's cottage, when Thor killed the goats, and having flayed them, boiled and ate the flesh. One of the peasant's children took a leg-bone, and broke it to get at the marrow. On the morrow Thor collected all the bones, placed them in the skins, consecrated them with his mallet, and up rose the goats alive, but one of them was lame. (Edda-Snorro, 44.)

That a similar myth prevailed anciently in India is probable from the following passages in the Rigveda. Ribhus having restored a sacrificed ox to life, the hymn is sung—

"O Sons of Sudharvân, out of the hide have you made the cow to arise, by your songs the old have you made young, and from one horse have you made another horse."

"Ribhus, with the hide have ye clothed about the cow, and bound up again the mother with the calf; the aged fathers have ye restored to youth, O Sons of Sudharvân."

S. BARING-GOULD.

Horbury, Wakefield.

DUKE DE LONGUEVILLE: THE BATTLE OF THE SPURS.

In the reply of MELETES on the subject of the arms of a conquered knight being assumed by his conquerors (3rd S. vii. 164), an instance is given from Clark's Introduction to Heraldry, in which a canton, charged with the arms of the Duke de Longueville, is said to have been bestowed as a reward for his prowess, on Sir John Clarke, the captor of the duke at Therouenne. This statement, so far as I can discover, appears first in Guillim, where it is thus given:—

"He beareth, Argent, on a Bend Gules, between three Pellets, as many Swans Proper, rewarded with a canton sinister Azure, thereupon a Demy-Ram mounting Argent, armed Or, between two Flowers-de-lis of the last, over all, a Batune dexterways, as the second in the canton." . . . "This coat armour thus marshalled pertained to Sir William Clark, Knight, deceased, by hereditary descent from Sir John Clark, his Grandfather, who took in lawful wars, Lewis de Orleans, Duke of Longueville and Marquess of Rotueline prisoner, at the journey of Bonny by Terovane, the 16 day of August, An. Hen. VIII. 5. In memory of which service the coat armour of the Duke was given him, marshalled on a canton sinister, in this manner, by special commandment from the King, who sent his Warrant to the Herald, willing and requiring them to publish the same Authentically under their hands and seals, for continuance of the memory thereof to Posterity ensuing; which was performed accordingly: the substance and effect whereof, together with this coat, is expressed upon the Monument of the said Sir John Clark in the Church of Tame, in the County of Oxford."

described as "cancelled," but which seemed to me to be in a different type. W. CAREW HAZLITT.

Under this title appears in "N. & Q." of September 9th, an interesting article from MR. W. C. HAZLITT, to which I think this may be deemed pertinent.

In my library is a copy of Scobell's Acts, in very fine order and substantial binding. It is entitled—

"A Collection of Acts and Ordinances of general Use, made in the Parliament, begun and held at Westminster 8rd of Nov. 1640, and since to Sept. 1656. In two parts, &c. By Henry Scobell, Esq., Clerk of the Parliament. Examined by the original Records, and now printed by special order of Parliament. London, 1658."

On the above title-page are autographs; at head, "Ex libris Gulielmi Lynch, 1822," and lower down, that of Sir John Prestwich, Bart.

The first Act in the collection is dated "Anno 16 Car. Regis," and is intitled, "Parliaments to be held every third year"; and the several clauses of this Act are underlined at emphatic passages, as if these were directed to be italicised; sundry alterations are made, and proposed additions drafted. In fact this, and this only, in the whole book, seems to have been a proof sheet. At its foot is a striking memorandum: "The above was wrote by his Highness Oliver Cromwell, as per information to me, Sir John Prestwich, Baronet."

The first part extends over 186 pages, the second over 515 pages. The year in which it was printed was that in which Cromwell died.

JOHN D'ALTON.

48, Summer Hill, Dublin.

MEMORIAL OF BISHOP KEN.—The wish so often expressed, both by clergy and laity, that some public memorial of this great and good man should be erected within his diocese, is about to be realised. A bust from the original portrait of this model bishop, in the possession of the Marquess of Bath, will be set up in the Town Hall of Taunton as soon as sufficient funds can be procured. Subscriptions in aid of this good work may be paid to Messrs. Robarts, Curtis, & Co.; or to Arthur Kinglake, Esq., Weston-super-Mare, treasurer to the Ken Memorial Fund. T.

"NOBBLER" AND "BELLTOPPER."—Mr. J. C. Hotten's Slang Dictionary might easily be swelled in bulk by contributions of Australian argot. Our gold-seeking community has given the word "nugget" to literature and current conversation; and the two words at the head of this article are equally universal amongst us. The "nobbler" (derivation unknown and unimaginable) is a glass of strong liquor of any kind. "Have a nobbler?" is the invariable form of invitation to the grogshop counter. The "belltopper" (probably derived from a fantastic idea of its shape) is the ordinary black hat of the period. Our diggers affect the loose, easy style of hat—"wideawakes" and the like—and sharply stigmatise any person who wears a black hat as "the swell with the belltopper."

D. BLAIR.

Melbourne.

GRYMES' MONUMENT.—Many men die in foreign lands, dropped like stars out of their sphere. By a hundred casualties, links of a genealogical chain are thus lost. I have often thought of copying some that indicate circumstances of this kind, when sauntering sadly through the interesting and somewhat stately churchyards of Hackney and Clapton.

On this my first intrusion of the kind, however, I have selected one from that part of the Temple Yard thrown open at the late restoration of that venerable church. I allude to the piece of ground between the church and the Strand shops.

Not far from Mr. Selden's gravestone, and near to the raised memorial to Oliver Goldsmith, is a stone with this inscription:—

"The eldest son of John Grymes, Esq., of Virginia, America. June 20, 1740. Etat. 22. His remains are buried under this stone."

This young gentleman was, it is probable, a student of the celebrated Inn where he is interred; and in the lapse of 125 years, the remembrance of where the dust of one perhaps much sorrowed after in his day reposes may have escaped recollection, and this accidental revival may be acceptable.

Although the y frequently takes the place of i in many names, this is the first instance I have known in this one. All my own family connexions, near or remote, use the i. The brother-in-law of Dr. Donne (Sir Thomas Grimes) has his name so spelled by Walton, and by Mr. Collier in his Life of Alleyne; so also the Latin biographer of St. Thomas à Becket, but without this, as a correspondent of your own writes him.

J. A. G.

INCISED MONUMENTAL CROSSES.—The following I cut from a local newspaper, thinking that so rare a "find" is worth recording. A very similar lot was discovered at Bakewell, when that church was being restored some years since; but numbers were reburied there before their antiquarian value was ascertained.

If any correspondent of "N. & Q." can give a succinct account of this from personal observation, I for one should be glad to peruse it:—

CURIOUS DISCOVERY.—Helpston churchyard, near Stamford, is at the present time strewn with sepulchral slabs or coffin lids, and the Rev. J. A. L. Campbell, the Vicar, is inviting students in ecclesiology and archaeology from distant places to examine them, including the Rev.

English j, is very common—as the word George, which means, etymologically, “a worker of the soil:” the word yeoman meaning, strictly, rather the proprietor than the worker of it.

T. J. BUCKTON.

ANECDOTE OF ARKWRIGHT. — There is, I think, a story told of Arkwright, the inventor of the cotton loom, the exact tenour of which I forget, but it is to this effect: — Being one day reproachfully reminded that his father was a barber, he replied, “If your father had been a barber, you would be a barber now.” I almost remember having seen the same story told of some other person; but at any rate there are many of similar import, as for instance, that of Lord Chief Justice Tenterden, who gloried in being the son of a barber.

I do not know whether it ever occurred to any of your readers that an anecdote is told of Themistocles, in Plato, The Republic, bk. i. ch. iv., which, if not the original of the above, is precisely similar: — ‘Ἀλλὰ τὸ τοῦ Θεμιστοκλέους εὖ ἔχει, ὅς τῳ Σερφίῳ λοιδορουμένην καὶ λέγοντι, ὅτι οὐ δι’ αὐτὸν, ἀλλὰ διὰ τὴν πόλιν εὐδοκίμοι, ἀπεκρίνατο ὅτι οὐτ’ ἂν αὐτὸς Σερφίος ἂν ὀνομαστὸς ἐγένετο οὐτ’ ἐκείνος Ἀθηναῖος.

A. H. K. C. L.

ROYAL LICENCE. — The vulgar and unauthorised custom of changing names is justly censured. Suppose, however, the descendants of some of these foolish people repent of the error, and wish to have their real name, can they after several generations lay aside the assumed name without royal licence? If not, the issue of the royal licence would seem to countenance and legalise the assumption we now condemn. Thus, suppose Ashford assumes the name of Robins, and his descendants (no arms belonging to Robins, while Ashford has arms,) see the folly of it, what is their best course? Ashford, of course, is their name (so too the Ashford arms are theirs); but if they resumed it, they might be ridiculed: yet they have no right to Robins, for their ancestor unlawfully took it. A licence addressed to them as Robins, giving leave to change Robins for Ashford, would sanction a former illegal and unjustifiable act?

This is, I think, an important point in these days of change.

Any direction in the matter of the arms, or the name, or both, will be very grateful. H. S.

P.S. Supposing the descendants prefer the (illegal) name of Robins, (1) can they by royal licence use the name of Robins with the arms of Ashford? (2) Might not the licence be issued to the (deceased) ancestor for him and his heirs? Thereby legalising the existing use of Robins, and condoning the guilty act of which the descendants were not the authors.

Queries.

ANONYMOUS. — 1. Who is author of The Negro Slaves, a drama, translated from the German of Kotzebue, published at London, 1796; dedicated to Mr. Wilberforce? Mrs. E. Carter, in a letter addressed to Mrs. Montague, makes the following allusion to the translator: —

“Have you seen The Negro Slaves, a drama translated from the German by a Lady whom you know, and who has made herself mistress of that difficult language with astonishing rapidity?”

2. Who is author of Steam to India, or, the New Indian Guide, comprising an Oriental Fragment, in a series of evening entertainments, 8vo, 1835; London, Cochran? R. INGLIS.

BECKFORD'S “LIVES OF THE PAINTERS.” — I have been asked for a key to Beckford's Lives of the Painters, which is supposed here to be a severe personal satire. I remember hearing the same some years ago, when the author was much talked of. I cannot discover any personal application. Watersouchy represents the minute portion of the Dutch school, but in Og of Basan I find neither individual nor general satire. If any one knows more, I shall be glad to be told. * FITZHOPE. Paris.

BIOGRAPHICAL QUERIES. — Who were the following writers, whose dissertations are contained in the Thesaurus of Ugolinius (Venet. 1744-69)? G. F. Meinhard, F. Mayer, Z. B. Pocharus, C. G. Meyer, J. G. Borhnius, D. Millius, N. Polemanus, and — Maius. A. CHALLSTETH.

Gray's Inn.

BRAGA SEE. — What are the armorial bearings of the Archiepiscopal See of Braga, in the kingdom of Portugal? H. W. T.

WM. CARTWRIGHT'S “ROYAL SLAVE.” — In the Catalogue of the Heber MSS. (1043) The Royal Slave, W. Cartwright's play, which was acted before King Charles I. at Oxford in 1636 by the students of Christ Church, had the names of the actors. If it is in the hands of any of your readers, perhaps he would have the kindness to give the names of the academical performers. R. INGLIS.

COVENTRY BOWLERS. — “They are but as Coventry bowlers, who play their best at first.” Is anything known of the origin of this proverb? J.

DOBBIE OR DOBIE OF STONYHILL, OR BREWICKSHIRE, AND RATTRAY OF LEITH. — Information is sought as to the descent of Robert Dobie, who,

[* For the history of this singular production, see the Memoirs of William Beckford, 8vo, 1859, l. 96-127.—Ed.]

[† The query on Dover Court has been explained in our 1st S. viii. 9. See also Nares's Glossary.]

early in the eighteenth century, was factor to Mr. Francis Montgomery of Giffen-castle, Ayrshire, son of Robert Dobie, said to have been of Berwickshire, but in which county no account of the name is found. Robert Dobie, the factor, married Anne Rattray of Leith, and there is reason to suppose his descent was from the Dobies of Stonyhill, or Stainiehill, near Edinburgh, who appear frequently in the printed returns, and that the supposed connexion with Berwickshire is a mistake.

Information is also sought as to and from the family of Rattray, some members of which, in the present day, may have records of the Dobie family.

Address (if not to "N. & Q.") to F. J. J., box No. 62, Post Office, Derby.

ENGLISH MEDALS.—In Walpole's Anecdotes of Painting (ed. Dallaway and Wornum, vol. i. p. 187) is mentioned a medal by Stephen of Holland, inscribed "ANNA POINES VXOR THOMÆ HENEAGE, 1562," then belonging to Bryan Fairfax.

Can any of your readers inform me where this medal is to be found?

I should also be glad to know of an example of the following medals, viz., medal of Ferdinand Lord Fairfax, engraved in the Medallic History, pl. xxi. fig. 9, and in Vertue's Works of Simon, pl. xi. fig. 6. On the reverse it is inscribed "FERD : LO : FAIRFAX : L : GEN^{AL} : OF : THE : NORTH."

Medal of Colonel N. Fiennes, purchased at Brown's Sale, 1791, by Mr. Tyssen for 3*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, and sold at the sale of the latter for a few shillings.

Medal of Major John Lisle, purchased at Brown's sale by Mr. Tyssen for 5*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, and sold at the sale of the latter for 15*s.*

Medal of Sir Edward Nicholas by Simon, Medallic History, pl. xxv. fig. 10. An original was said to be in possession of a Mr. Compton. We have a copy. A. W. FRANKS.

British Museum.

ENGLISH POET.—To which English poet does M. Duruy refer in the following passage in his Histoire de France (1864), tome i. p. 263?—

"Part de la France dans les croisades.—Ce grand mouvement, qui se continua plus d'un siècle et demi, et qui entraîna tous les peuples de l'Europe, était parti de la France. 'On avait pleuré en Italie,' dit Voltaire, 'on sarma en France;' et la France fut ce que le grand poète Anglais est contraint de l'appeler: 'le vrai soldat de Dieu.'"

W. I. S. HORTON.

Rugeley.

FISHES AND FLEAS.—May I ask whether any reader of "N. & Q." can throw light on a fisherman's fancy to be met with on the Norfolk coast, to the effect that there is some sort of connexion between fish and fleas; and that a good year (or rather perhaps, from our point of view, a bad one) for the latter is always a good one for the former?

"Lawk, Sir!" said an old fellow near Cromer, "times is as you may look in my flannel-shirt and scarce see a flea, and then there aint but a werry few herrins; but times that 'ill be right alive with 'em, and then there's sartin to be a sight o' fish."

A fancy of this sort seldom becomes current among practical people without having a foundation of some sort, and it is just possible that a correct knowledge of the conditions of wind or weather likely to agree with fleas, might be found to hint the meaning of the unintelligible comings and goings of big shoals of herring and mackerel.

If you can spare a corner I should be glad to know whether the belief is peculiar to Norfolk or not. T. D. P.

Junior Carlton Club.

FLORUS.—I can ascertain nothing about the following:—

"L. A. Florus cum notis Cl. Salmasii, accessit et L. Ampelius. Neomagi, ex officina Andree ab Hoogerhuysen. An^o 1662."

This was a copy given to Robert Jas. Donne by Henry C. Boisragon, M.D., 1845. On the title-page is printed "Edmund Bohun." ELVT. Oxford.

GENERALS COMMANDING THE ENEMY'S FORCES. Who commanded the enemy at the attack and subsequent capture of Martinique by the British, Feb. 1809? Also at the capture of Guadaloupe, Jan. and Feb. 1810; Cuidad-Rodrigo, Jan. and Feb. 1812; Badajoz, March 11 and April 16, 1812; San-Sebastian, Aug. and Sept. 1813; Fort Detroit, N. America, Aug. 1813; and at Chateauguay, N. America, Oct. 26, 1813? Who was the British commanding officer, and who commanded the enemy?

The above are victories for which medals with clasps have been granted under the General Order, dated June 1, 1847. GIBSON. Liverpool.

THE GYPSIES.—May I ask, 1. Whether Roberts's work on The Gipsies has ever passed into a second edition? 2. Whether his opinions as to "who the gypsies were" has been generally received or otherwise? 3. Whether it has called forth any reply in favour of other opinions as to the origin of that extraordinary people? G. O. L.

JACQUES HAUTE is repeatedly mentioned in the Privy Purse expenses of Henry VII. in connection with the court entertainments called disguisings. His name also occurs in the Privy Purse Expenses of Elizabeth of York, but not after 1502. I am desirous of knowing more about him. S. Y. R.

[* The fifth edition of Mr. Roberts's work was published in 1842.—ED.]

HOOR.—Are your readers aware that the word hour does not occur in the Hebrew Scriptures? It is first found in the Book of Daniel in Chaldees. In that book it occurs four or five times. Can you tell me the date of its earliest use, and the earliest author by whom it is used. Can you also help me to conjecture why it is not found in the Hebrew Scriptures? H.

ROWLAND JONES.—In the drawing-room at Chirk Castle is a portrait, by Wilson, of Rowland Jones, a Welsh bard. Can any of your readers give further particulars respecting him?

S. Y. R.

DEATH OF THE EARL OF KINGSTON.—Robert Pierrepont, first Baron Pierrepont and Viscount Newark, was created Earl of Kingston-upon-Hull July 25, 1628. He espoused the cause of the king on the breaking out of the civil war, and was captured at the taking of Gainsborough. From that place "he was sent to Hull in a pinnace, which Sir Charles Cavendish pursued, demanding the earl, and when refused, shooting at the pinnace with a drake, it unfortunately killed him and his servant, July 30, 1643." (Colins's Peerage, edit. 1735, i. 278.)

This event must have happened on the river Trent, between Gainsborough and Burton-Stather. I am anxious to identify the locality.

K. P. D. E.

LAWRENCE.—In the various pedigrees of Lawrence made public by county historians and others, I have not been able to discover where the original sources of information are to be found for corroborating the following statements, and should be glad of assistance:—

1. That Sir Robert Lawrence of Ashton Hall (ob. 1440) had four, and as some say, sir sons. (Will, where?)

2. That the names of the latter are positively known. (Wills, where?)

3. That Sir John Lawrence of Aston Hall fell at Flodden, and was seized of thirty or thirty-three manors in Lancashire. (Inquisitions, where?)

4. That Edmund Lawrence was a brother of the last-named, and father of John Lawrence, Abbot of Ramsey, who ob. 1542. (Will, where?)

5. That Sir John Lawrence of St. Ives, who ob. in 1603, was great grandson of William Lawrence who died at Ramsey in 1538. (Wills and parish registers, where?)

6. That Henry Lawrence, president of Cromwell's council, maintained a friendly correspondence with the Queen of Bohemia, and that their letters exist. (Library, where?)

7. That John Lawrence, a younger son of the president, embarked from England, and touching at Barbadoes, sailed thence to Jamaica, where he landed in 1676, and that he was son of Henry, the president of Cromwell's council.*

8. That John Lawrence was the only brother of the president, and that he died in 1670. (Will, where?)

If John Lawrence, who died in 1670, or his grandnephew, Sir Edward, who died in 1749, left wills, where are they to be found? Sr.

"LIBER MUNERUM, PUBLICORUM HIBERNIAE"—I shall feel much obliged by any reader of "N. & Q.," who is possessed of a copy of the first issue of the Liber Munerum, &c., letting me know if his copy possesses any pages marked in manuscript "proof," and in what part the insertion occurs. A friend's copy (unique, so far as I know, after an examination of about a dozen copies) possesses several such insertions, of which I append a note:—

Part III. p. 44, usually ends abruptly with the word "appre-," the next page being 52*. My friend's copy has pp. 44*, 44*, 44*, 44*, 44*: the verso of which is blank, and would be 44* if numbered. 44* continues the entry from p. 44, above referred to: ["Proclamation for apprehending a pretended King of Ireland." This recital goes on to near the middle of page, both columns. Then follow extracts of memoranda, genealogical and historical, from the Rolls of Pleas from the Common Bench (taken from the collections of the Ulster King-at-Arms at the Birmingham Tower); then go on to middle of 44*, the rest of which, as well as verso, is blank. The same part, in ordinary copies, ends with p. 148. In the copy above referred to, it ends with p. 154. The list of sheriffs being continued, and marked, as in former case, "Proof." Aiken Irvine.

Kilbride Bray.

Mrs. MEE.—This lady, the daughter of John Foldson, once enjoyed reputation as a portrait-painter, and her own portrait, when Mrs. Mee, was engraved by White. Her Christian name, also the date of her decease, will oblige

S. Y. R.

MILTON.—MR. BOUTELL refers (3rd S. vii. 504) to a statement in the Journal of the Archaeological Institute, vol. vi. p. 199, accompanying a woodcut of a small silver seal used by Milton, and well authenticated as having been used by the great poet, of which there does not seem to have been any question; but he proceeds to say that Mr. Hunter is said to have traced out a connexion between Milton and Thame, in Oxfordshire. What is the bearing of this remark, and has it anything to do with the seal or its authentication? He next states that Sir Bernard Burke gives for Milton of Milton, near Thame, the coat as borne by John Milton, the poet; but upon what authority does Sir Bernard Burke give it other than that of Edmondson, Berry, or Robson?

* I do not think that licences to go abroad were continued up to this period, but there ought to be a record of the fact stated for the first time by the late Sir J. Lawrence. The archives of Jamaica throw no light on the subject. Whence then did Sir J. Lawrence derive his knowledge?

If there be anything now in the shape of evidence, it would be well to give it. Was there ever any doubt that Milton did use the arms, "Argent, an eagle displayed with two heads gules, beaked and legged sable"? A. B.

ORKNEY AND ZETLAND.—I have before me two quarto pamphlets, concerning which I can learn nothing. I am anxious to know whether they form parts of a series, or whether each is complete in itself:—

1. "Deeds relating to Orkney and Zetland, mccccxxxiii-mclxxxvi, pp. lxxxvii." [No place or printer's name.]

2. "Acts and Statutes of the Lawing, Sheriff, and Justice Courts within Orkney and Zetland, mdclii-mdcxliv, pp. xxxiv." [No place or printer's name.]

A. O. V. P.

LADY PACKINGTON.—Would you kindly repeat this question (1st S. ix. 551), which perhaps only needs prominence now to elicit a successful answer, viz., whether the copy of The Whole Duty of Man, in the handwriting of Lady Packington found at Westwood after her death, which, according to the English Baronetage, "remained with the family" about a century ago, is known to be in existence? Is there any member of the Packington family alive; if not, when did the last die?

E. P.

JAMES PRICE, M.D., THE LAST OF THE ALCHEMISTS.—Can any of your readers give me a satisfactory account of the birth, position, and death of this man? The accounts I find of him all vary. In the Book of Days (vol. i. p. 602) he is represented as living at Guildford, and having the degree of M.D. given to him by the University of Oxford, and dying on August 3, 1783.

An extract from a newspaper in a scrap-book which I possess made about 1821, quoting from a paper called The Chemist, says, "In 1784 he publicly proclaimed that he could make gold." And I also understand from this that he died in that year, which is one year later than stated by the Book of Days.

A writer in All the Year Round for June 13, 1863, makes the circumstance take place in the year 1787, which is four years later. He says that the discovery was made after years of experiments; whereas the Book of Days confines the experiments to three weeks. This writer also makes Mr. Price, Dean of Salisbury, although the other authorities I have mentioned merely state that he was a physician and F.R.S. This account altogether varies in many points from the other two.

Curiously enough Dr. Johnson, according to Boswell, attended a scientific meeting at Salisbury in 1783 to witness some chemical experiments by a physician. At this meeting (much to Dr. Johnson's displeasure) Dr. Priestley's name was often mentioned as an authority, he having written some works on chemistry. Now, Dr. Priestley succeeded Dr. Richard Price as minister at Hackney. This Dr. Price, according to the newspaper extract before referred to, was often confounded with the alchemist now under consideration. Has not the writer in All the Year Round mixed these facts together? I should like a satisfactory solution of these difficulties. If any of your readers possess The Chemist referred to above, it will perhaps help us a little.

W. C. B.

QUOTATIONS WANTED.—

1. "Tho' lost to sight, to memory dear."

This was once queried some thirteen years ago in your columns, but without result.

2. In Foote's celebrated letter to the Duchess of Kingston, he quotes:—

"So mourn'd the dame of Ephesus her love."

Whence the line, and what the allusion?†

W. T. M.

Government House, Hongkong.

"Orlando's helmet in Augustine's cowl."

Wanted the locality of the above. Fm.

Where is to be found the following lines?—

"The relish for the calm delight
Of rural fields and fountains bright;
Trees that nod on sloping hills,
And caves that echo tinkling rills."

They are quoted by Mr. Dunlop in his History of Roman Literature, published in 1824.

THOS. L'ESTRANGE.

3, Donegal Square East, Belfast.

ROMAN INSCRIPTION AT LINCOLN.—Whilst digging the foundation of a house about to be built in Lincoln, the workman found embedded in six feet of sand a tombstone, bearing the subjoined inscription:—

C. SAVFKIO.
C. F. FAB. HKR
MILITI. LEGIO
VIII
ANNOR. XXXX
STIP. . XXII.
H. S. E.

[* It is stated in The Chemist of Oct. 9, 1824, p. 36, that "in 1784 Dr. James Price publicly proclaimed that he could make gold;" but this date is clearly incorrect, as his death on August 3, 1783, is announced in the Genl. Mag. of that month, p. 716.—Ed.]

[† The story of the widow of Ephesus, whose inordinate grief for her husband was suddenly extinguished by her love for a young soldier, is told by Petronius; forms the subject of a French Fabliau, De la femme qui se flat putois sur la fosse de son Mari; and is alluded to by Jeremy Taylor, in his Rule and Exercise of Holy Dying.—Ed. "N. & Q."]

There is little difficulty in the inscription except in the second line, which seems somewhat obscure. Does it mean CAII . FILIO . FABTORVM . HEREDI . ? Perhaps some of the readers of "N. & Q." will give the matter their consideration.

GEORGE T. HARVEY.

Lincoln.

"DE SALE BUTTORUM."—In the Pipe Roll, 2 Richard I., are several entries concerning the New Forest, one of which is the payment of one mark "de Sale Buttorum," the meaning of which is obscure. Mr. Sanders remarks:—

"There was formerly a great quantity of salt made at Lymington and other places on the coast, and the old tracks made by the salt carts used for carrying it across the Forest still exist in the form of deep ruts, now hidden by the gorse and heather, with here and there an old station or resting-place; but there appears to be no connection between the salt and the word 'butts,' though Mr. Cumberbatch, of the King's House, at Lyndhurst, has kindly given all the information on the subject which his knowledge of the forest as ranger, suggested. There are butts still existing in name at Brockenhurst and elsewhere, but they have always been thought to be shooting butts; and there is no difficulty in giving that meaning to the second mention of the word, which occurs shortly after the first, unaccompanied by any allusion to salt."

PHILIP S. KING.

SEALS OF THE EMPERORS OF GERMANY: THE IMPERIAL EAGLE.—Beneath the fine series of full-length portraits of the German Emperors in the Kaiser-Saal of the Römer, at Frankfurt-on-the-Main, is arranged a collection of impressions from the great seals of the empire. Two years ago I carefully examined this series of seals, for the purpose of determining the reigns in which the Imperial eagle, and other armorial bearings, first found their way into the great seals. I think the seal of the Emperor Charles IV. was the first in which the eagle appeared; but I have unfortunately lost my memoranda, and should be glad if any of your correspondents could inform me if this is the case. The eagle was, I think, single and uncrowned; and on this point also I should be glad of information. Casts of some of the seals were on sale in the Kaiser-Saal. Are they to be procured in England?

JOHN WOODWARD.

New Shoreham.

HENRY SPURR, VICAR OF WORKSOP, NOTTS.—Can any of your readers give me any information in regard to Henry Spurr, Vicar of Worksop, and afterwards of East Bridgeford, both in Notts?

I find that Hunter (Founders of New Plymouth) says that Richard Bernard was presented to this living of Worksop in June, 1601; and left it in 1612, or 1613, for that of Batcombe, co. Somerset.

I wish to know if he preceded or succeeded Spurr, and any particulars about this latter: as his birth, marriage, issue, and death. Especially

I wish to learn if he was like Bernard, one of the Puritan party in the Church.

There is some reason to believe that Spurr was brother-in-law of the Rev. Francis Whitmore, of Kirkby-Wisake, co. York, and Bingham, co. Notts.

This latter clergyman died in 1698, and was buried in the chancel of the church at Bingham. I learn that the chancel floor has lately been covered with encaustic tiles. Among the numerous transcripts of monumental inscriptions, is there any copy of those which were presumably at Bingham?

W. H. WHITMORE.

Boston, U. S. A.

WIGTON PEERAGE.—Can any one kindly inform me as to the history of this dormant peerage? I know this—viz. that two generations back a connexion of my own family married Lady Jane Fleming, a daughter of, I believe, the last recognised earl, and within the last few days I have seen her portrait. The estates I understand passed to the Elphinstone family, and as to how this happened I also desire information. I am assured, upon authority, that the grandfather of the present Colonel Hamilton Fleming, late R.M.L.I., pursued his claim to the title with such success that he was styled Lord Wigton by his friends, and that further prosecution of the claim was interrupted by his death, his son, still living, not caring to take it up. The record of the proofs advanced in support of it is, I presume, to be found accessible in some public office or department; and information as to this will further oblige.

Address (if not to "N. & Q.") to F. J. J. box No. 62, Post Office, Derby.

Queries with Answers.

DR. MAYNE.—Some elegiac verses "in obitum Rev. viri D. Dⁿⁱ Mayne, Aedis Christi nuper Præbendarii," signed "Rob. Thynne," are now before me. Is anything recorded about Dr. Mayne, and when did he die? THOMAS E. WINNINGTON.

[Dr. Jasper Mayne, whose entertaining comedies have endeared his name to dramatic readers, was born at Hatherleigh in Devonshire in 1604, educated at Westminster, and afterwards at Christ Church, Oxford. Ejected by the parliamentary visitors from the vicarages of Fyrtton and Cassington, in Oxfordshire, he found an asylum under the roof of the Earl of Devonshire, where his learning and wit rendered him a proper advocate for religion against the famous Mr. Hobbes, then a tutor in that family. After the Restoration he was made Canon of Christ Church, and Archdeacon of Chichester. He died on Dec. 6, 1672, and is called by Wood "a quaint preacher and a noted poet." Though orthodox in his opinions, and severe in his manners, he was a facetious companion, and his propensity to mirth attended him in his last moments.]

He had an old servant, to whom he bequeathed an ancient family trunk, telling him that he would find something there which would make him drink after his death. The servant, full of expectation that his master, under this familiar expression, had left him a fair and comfortable competency, as soon as decency allowed, flew to the trunk, when to his great mortification he found the boasted legacy was nothing more than—a red herring!—Robert Thynne, the author of the verses, was also educated at Westminster, and afterwards at Oxford, and was instituted on June 21, 1694, Vicar of Flower, or Flore, in Northamptonshire, where he died at the age of sixty-four on Jan. 3, 1716-17. His epitaph is printed in Bridges' Northamptonshire, i. 509.]

PIE CORNER.—This was formerly the name of the street between Giltspur Street and Smithfield. May it possibly be derived from the French word pied cornier, used in our old forest nomenclature for a boundary tree? Some mark of that kind may have stood in ancient times as a limit of the space of Smithfield. J.

[We feel pleasure in suggesting that the ingenious derivation of "Pie Corner" from "Pied Cornier," proposed by our correspondent, would seem to be confirmed by the derivation of "Pie Powder." This court, held at fairs, to administer justice and to redress disorders, is stated in our Law Dictionaries (Cowel, Tomlins, Jacob), to have been properly the court of Pied Poudreux, or dusty-foot. Now, if Pie powder was Pied Poudreux, it seems all the more probable that Pie Corner was Pied Cornier. For some account of the Pie-poudre Court consult "N. & Q." 2nd S. vii. 217, 283, 498.]

SIR HENRY BISHOP.—There is no formal Life of this melodious composer. Where is it possible to gather any particulars respecting his most interesting and chequered career? Was any biographical sketch published in the periodicals at the time of his decease in 1855? There is a notice in the Annual Register for that year.

JUNTA TURRIM.

[For biographical particulars of Sir Henry Rowley Bishop, Mus. Doctor, consult the Genl. Mag. June, 1855, p. 652; The Athenæum, May 5, 1855, p. 520, and the Literary Gazette, May 5, 1855, p. 285.]

LUSKES.—In Brightman's Commentary on the Revelations I find an unusual word, luskex—"Let those men that set blinde and beetle-eyed luskex over Christe's people," p. 232, of the Leyden edition, 1616. What is the exact meaning of the word? Whence comes it? Is it from the Latin luscus, blind of an eye, or what? H.

[Luske is a lazy, lubberly fellow; or, as Mr. Halliwell explains the word, "A lazy, idle, good-for-nothing fellow." "Here is a great knave, a great lyther luske, or a stout ydell lubbar." (Palsgrave's Accolastus, 1540.) "What, thou great luske, said I, art thou so farre spent that thou hast no hope to recover?"—Terence in English, 1641.]

OBERMAYR'S "PICTURE GALLERY OF CATHOLIC ABUSES."—I have the catalogue of a private library collected from 1780 to 1810, and then dispersed on the death of the proprietor. To many of the titles he has added short remarks, which show reading and judgment. One book is "Pictures of Catholic Abuses, translated from the German of Francis Obermeier, with ten plates. Lond. 1786."

The note is, "Puritanical, earnest, weak; cut good." I cannot find this book in the British Museum. Any information as to it, or the German original, will oblige P. B. H.

[The title of the German original is given in Kayser's Index Librorum (1750-1832), theil iv. p. 235: "F. A. Obermayr (Jos. Richter) Picture Gallery of Catholic Abuses, with eight plates. Vienna, 1784."]

CANNING'S LATIN POEMS.—Have the Latin poems of the Right Hon. G. Canning ever been published? I possess in MS. two in hexameter verse called "Iter ad Meccam," and "Ochinus," with some elegiac stanzas.

THOMAS E. WINNINGTON.

[We are inclined to think that George Canning's Latin poems are only to be found in miscellaneous collections; as for instance, the "Iter ad Meccam Religionis causa Susceptum," is printed in Muse Oromense, or Poemata Præmiis Cancellarii Academicis Donata, et in Theatro Sheldoniano recitata, Oxon. 8vo, 1810, vol. ii. p. 1. This poem was recited by Mr. Canning in the theatre on June 26, 1789, on the occasion of Lord Crewe's anniversary commemoration of benefactors to the university. There are at least two English translations of it.]

Replies.

BROWNE, VISCOUNT MONTAGUE, OF COWDRAY PARK, CO. SUSSEX.

(3rd S. viii. 106.)

Will you kindly allow me to inform your correspondent MR. JUSTIN BROWNE, through your pages, that I have a copy of Henry Browne's claim, 4to, 1851, by H. Prater. The octavo work, 1849, referred to in Mr. Sims' Handbook for Genealogists, was the private case. A copy of it was given to my solicitor, Mr. Henry Karlake of Carlton Chambers, by Messrs. Begbie & White, who took up the case for Mr. Henry Browne on the death of his brother John Browne, the previous claimant in 1848. It was handed by me to Mr. Sims for his perusal, and in his possession I have allowed it to remain. If MR. J. BROWNE is desirous of seeing the work, application should be made to Mr. Sims at the British Museum.

With respect to the wish expressed for the continuation of the pedigree of "Browne of Steyning, or Storrington, co. Sussex, since 1820," I have no doubt these particulars could be got from Messrs. Jones & Arckoll, of 192, Tooley Street, the solicitors acting for Mr. H. Browne at the time his claim was set down for hearing in 1852. The material question, in the pedigree of the "Steyning and Storrington Brownes," is the connecting link between George Browne of Ripley, co. Surrey, second son of John, the second grandson of Sir Anthony Browne, first Viscount Montague; and Charles Browne, described as a porter living in Fishmonger Alley, Southwark, in 1680. The evidence adduced by the claimant Henry Browne, to prove that the Charles Browne referred to was the son of George Browne of Ripley, is an entry recorded in the Register of Baptisms at Storrington, in 1641, made in these terms:—

"1641. Charilus filius Hon^{ble} Georgius et Anne Browne de Parham, Febr."

The truth and genuineness of this entry is a matter of great doubt and suspicion. The objections raised to it previous to my petition to the House of Lords in 1853, to be permitted to oppose the claim of Henry Browne to the dignity of Viscount Montague, were (1), the occurrence of the word "Charilus" in it; (2) that no transcript of the registers of Storrington for 1641 is found among the bishop's transcripts of parochial registers at Chichester; (3) that the entry is not found in Sir William Burrell's MSS. of Sussex; and (4) that these ancient registers were for many years out of the custody and possession of the incumbents of Storrington, and in the hands of parties employed by John Browne, the father of Henry Browne; who presented a petition to the crown for the restoration of the dignity of Viscount Montague, to him the said John Browne, in the year 1815. During the years 1815, 1816, 1817, 1818, and 1819, Mr. Randle Lewis, a conveyancer, and a Mr. Pacy, a solicitor, were employed by John Browne in collecting evidence necessary to support the said claim. And on the 1st of September, 1822, the ancient registers referred to were taken to Storrington, and delivered to the Rev. H. Dixon by the said Randle Lewis. All the circumstances relating to this transaction have been given to me in writing by Mr. Dixon; and it has enabled me to get from other parties most important evidence and admissions, to disprove the authenticity of the entry of 1641, referred to in these registers.

Mr. Henry Prater, barrister-at-law, and the son-in-law of the claimant Henry Browne, has evinced the most unwearied research and industry in his printed case, which shows him to be a man of the highest ability in dealing with matters of this nature.

It is fair that I should also state, that Sir John Romilly's Report, dated the 27th March, 1851, is highly favourable to Henry Browne's claim; and refers it, with the statement in support of it as it then stood, to the adjudication of the House of Lords; but it is equally fair and desirable to add that, since my petition in 1853, no further proceedings have been taken in the matter.

The dignity to the Viscounty of Montague was created by Letters Patent, bearing date 1 & 2 Philip and Mary, A.D. 1554; and was limited to Sir Anthony Browne, K.G., Standard Bearer of England, and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten. The said Sir Anthony Browne married first, Jane, daughter of Sir Robert Ratchliffe, Earl of Sussex, by whom he had a son Anthony; and, secondly, Magdalen, daughter of Lord Dacres of Gilleland, by whom he had five sons—Philip, William, George, Thomas, and Henry. Anthony, the eldest son, married Mary Dormer, and died in the lifetime of his father, leaving three sons, viz. Anthony-Maria, John, and William. Anthony-Maria, the first grandson of the first Viscount, became second Viscount. The male descendants of Anthony-Maria terminated in George Samuel, eighth Viscount Montague, who was drowned at the falls of Schaffhausen on the Rhine, in 1793. And in the year in which he died, and only a few days previous to it, the fine old mansion at Cowdray, built in the reign of Hen. VIII., was burnt down.

John Browne, the second grandson, left by his wife Anne Giffard two sons—Stanialaus and George. The descendants of Stanialaus are believed to have terminated in Mark Anthony, ninth Viscount Montague, who died in 1797.

Assuming this to be so, the heir male of George would be next entitled to the dignity. George resided at Ripley, in Surrey. The early registers of baptism of Ripley have mysteriously disappeared. It is from this George that Henry Browne claims to be descended.

The first claimant was John Browne, a solicitor at Storrington, the father of Henry, who died in 1825.

The second claimant was John, the eldest son; who died suddenly in 1848.

Henry, the third claimant, is I believe still living.

A person of the name of Mitchell was for many years employed in collecting evidence for the two first claimants. He was a man of extensive antiquarian research; but there was always a strange mystery by what means he obtained his evidence. If any of the readers of "N. & Q." can give me any information of Mr. Mitchell, they will greatly oblige me.

THOMAS SELBY.

19, Westbourne Square, W.

Hyde (Lord Clarendon) as one in the coach on that occasion. He lived at Antwerp, and in 1657 was made (titular) Chancellor of England. At the Restoration the Seals of that high office were delivered to him by Charles II. He was also chosen Chancellor of Oxford, and advanced to the peerage by the title of Baron Hyde, of Hindon. In 1661 he was created Earl of Clarendon. Pepys was First Secretary to the Navy, and afterwards promoted to the same post in the Admiralty. "Dined in a deal of state, &c." Does this imply that he was included in the royal company in the coach May 28th? That Charles should have told him how he escaped from Worcester, as a circumstance deeply fixed in the royal memory, is corroborated by the historian:—

"After his restoration, the king sent for Richard Pendrell, and calling him 'Friend Richard,' made him give the courtiers an account of all their adventures together, and of the escape from Boscobel. This the old man did, to the great entertainment of all present, telling them, 'how he got a sorry jade for the king, with a bad saddle and bridle, and how his majesty complained of his steed; and how his brother Humphrey said the King should not find fault with the poor animal, for it had never before carried the weight of three kingdoms on its back,' &c."

Query: Was brother Humphrey the original author of this hackneyed pun, which has now become a stock witticism in all jest-books, from Joe Miller to Punch, with his dog Toby?

QUEEN'S GARDENS.

"THE BLACK DWARF."

(3rd S. viii. 249.)

The Black Dwarf was a weekly journal established by Thomas Jonathan Wooller. It was not a newspaper, being unstamped, and news then could not be published except on stamped paper. I think its date was anterior to that suggested by MR. INGLIS: probably it was 1817—that great year for political agitation. According to my recollection it was exclusively a political paper, and I am surprised to learn that dramatic pieces appeared in it; but perhaps they were written to serve a political purpose. Leigh Hunt followed at a later period with a Yellow Dwarf (the title borrowed from a Parisian publication), in which literature competed with politics. Wooller was originally a compositor in a printing-office. He was a remarkably fluent speaker—an accomplishment which, in those days of "public meetings," soon brought him into notice. He became a common councilman, and practised as an attorney. I presume he had a certificate. He succeeded Cobbett as editor of The Statesman, an evening paper once celebrated, but then fallen into the sere, and its last number was issued under his management. Then he produced The Black Dwarf.

I may as well make a note here, which may interest some of your readers. About the period above referred to, when the Stamp Act was in force, more daily newspapers were published in London than appear now. The morning papers then published were—The Times, Chronicle, Herald, Post, Advertiser, British Press, Public Ledger, and New Times, eight in all. There was, I believe, another called The Day, but being in doubt, I do not include it in the number. There are eight published now, including penny papers. The evening papers published then were—The Courier, Pilot, Sun, Star, Globe, Statesman, and Traveller, seven in all. At present six only are published. At the earlier period, the price of every daily paper was sevenpence. C. ROSS.

In "N. & Q." for last week the question is asked, who was the author of a political publication called The Black Dwarf, which appeared some time in the year 1819. The author was Thomas Jonathan Wooller, a printer. It was published on Sunday morning in Sun Street, Finsbury. Mr. Wooller studied the Common Law, and retired from the printing business, and was for some years employed by Samuel Harmer of Hatton Garden, the Old Bailey lawyer. WM. COTTERELL GEE.
4, Bouverie Street.

FACINGS OF REGIMENTS.

(3rd S. viii. 251.)

1. The facings worn by the infantry regiments at present are, with very few exceptions, identical with those they have had from their first embodiment. The 60th, "red, facings blue," were clothed in "green, facings red" when they became "Royal Rifles" instead of "Royal Americans." The 41st, raised as a regiment of Invalids in 1719, wore "red, facings blue," till they became a regiment of the line in 1787. All the commissions of the officers were re-dated Dec. 25, 1787, and they assumed the white facings when they received into their ranks the most renowned soldier that ever served in the regiment—"the Hon. Arthur Wesley," whose commission, as junior lieutenant, bears the same date. The heavy cavalry remain much the same: the 2nd Dragoon Guards have returned from black to the old buff; the 3rd Dragoon Guards have exchanged white for yellow. The light cavalry have changed considerably.

3. The first great disbandment dates in 1719, at the close of Marlborough's campaigns. No cavalry below the 8th, no infantry below the 89th, survived this period. A multitude of Marlborough's veterans still remained on the half-pay list in 1755, the date of the earliest army list I have met with, but their regiments were named after the colonels, and not numbered. The second great disbandment was at the close of the continental war in 1748-9. No cavalry below the 14th, no infantry below the 49th, survived it. The marines were raised at the opening of the seven years' war, and hence take rank after the 49th; and for a short time the "Royal Regiment of Artillery" was numbered as the 52nd, just as the rifle brigade was once the 95th. The third great disbandment at the close of the war in 1763, reached to the 18th cavalry and 70th infantry, each of those regiments surviving it. The 85th Royal Volunteers, and 88th Highland Volunteers were raised in 1759, and shared the fate of all the other corps. from the 71st to the 124th, in 1763. The next great disbandment was at the close of the American war, of the present regiments, after the 70th, the 71st and 72nd alone surviving it. Then came the great war with France; a vast number of regiments were raised in 1794, and numbered up to 135th; most of them being remodelled or reduced in 1795 and 1802. The York Light Infantry Volunteers, a foreign corps, was raised in 1803, served in the West Indies, and ceased to exist at the peace. They were rifles not fusiliers.

SIGNET.

1. There were several colours worn as facings in the army, which have now disappeared. For instance, the 35th had orange facings, but this being susceptible of misconception in Ireland was abolished. The 13th had "Philomel yellow," the 54th popinjay green, the 59th purple; all these colours have been supplanted by more simple hues.

2. Second lieutenants have existed in the army for a great length of time. I think the title was used in King Charles I.'s army, though I cannot remember where I have seen it.

3. The 85th and 88th, that existed in 1763, were disbanded the same year.

SEBASTIAN.

HARD TACK: BLACK BREAD OF DAUPHINÉ (3rd S. vii. 134.)—I can answer from personal experience the question concerning the black bread of Dauphiné. It is baked in large round flattish cakes, which are often kept for at least six months. It is not bad when soaked in milk; but when dry, it is about as pleasant food as a mouthful of mahogany chips and sawdust would be. The baking "with the refuse of the fields" no doubt refers to cow dung, which, in the upland districts where wood is scarce (pine forests being unfrequent in many parts of Dauphiné), is dried and used for fuel. I saw the walls of chalets covered with "pats" of dung drying for this purpose between the Col de Goleón and La Grave. I have mentioned this bread in Outline Sketches in the High Alps of Dauphiné, Longmans, 1865. See also Peaks, Passes, and Glaciers, Second Series, vol. ii. p. 217; and Forbes' Excursions in Dauphiné (Norway and its Glaciers, p. 294.) The use of this bread is not, however, confined to Dauphiné; it may be met with in most of the unfrequented districts of the Alps.

T. G. BONNER.

St. John's College, Cambridge.

ATLANTIC CABLE TELEGRAPH (3rd S. viii. 276.) Lest any of the readers of "N. & Q.," not having the means of ascertaining for themselves, may suspect that there is any basis of truth in Mr. PINKERTON's article, I take the liberty of stating, that at all events one message from St. John's was transmitted through the cable of 1858, viz. the announcement of a collision between the Europa and Canada, two of the R.M. steamers of the Cunard line, which was the means of preventing the alarm and anxiety that the consequent delay in the arrival of the homeward-bound steamer would have caused. I write from my own recollections of the occurrence, but any reader of "N. & Q." can ascertain the particulars by referring to the newspaper files of the period.

Perhaps MR. PINKERTON will give some of the "very best reasons" and "numerous facts" which confirmed his belief in the commission of a gross fraud.

R. M'C.

Liverpool.

85TH AND 88TH REGIMENTS (3rd S. viii. 251.) 85th Royal Volunteers, * raised 1759; served in Portugal 1762, disbanded 1763; again raised 1776, disbanded 1784. Raised as Bucks Volunteers 1793; served in Holland, at Flushing, in the Peninsula, at Bladenburgh, and New Orleans; Light Infantry, 1808; King's Light Infantry, 1821.

88th Campbell's Highlanders, raised 1759; served in Germany at the battles of Fellinghausen and Grabenstein 1761-1762; disbanded 1763; again raised 1780; disbanded 1783. Raised in Ireland 1793 by Col. the Hon. Thomas de Burgh (Earl of Clanricarde); assumed the name of Connaught Rangers; received for its number 88, when the new regiments were numbered from 78 upwards.

GIBSON.

Liverpool.

EPITAPHS ABROAD (3rd S. viii. 244, &c.)—There are, if I remember rightly, some rather curious epitaphs on members of British families, in the Münsterkirche at Aix-la-Chapelle.

Perhaps some tourist would be so good as to make copies of them for the benefit of the readers of "N. & Q." Copies of the inscriptions on the tombs of James, Duke of Douglas; and of the Earl of Angus, in the church of S. Germain des Prés, at Paris, would probably also be acceptable to others besides myself.

J. WOODWARD.

FOREIGN HERALDIC WORKS (3rd S. viii. 207.) The best works on the heraldry of Scandinavia which I know of are the following:—

* Vide Colburn's U. S. Mag. April, 1851.

Cedercrona, Sveriges Rikes Ridderskaps och Adels Wapen Bok, folio, Stockholm, 1746.

Lexicon over Adelige Familjer i Danmark, published early in the present century.

Magazin til den Danske Adels Historie, Kjöbenhavn. 1784, 1785.

The German heraldic books are legion; Spener's Opus Heraldicum. Folio. Frankfort-on-the-Main, 1714, &c.; and Siebmacher's Wappenbuch, 6 vols. folio, Nürnberg, 1734, probably contain all that is wanted.

None of the above are translated into English or French. J. WOODWARD.

ROMAN CATHOLIC GENTRY IN LANCASHIRE (3rd S. viii. 252.)—Your correspondent JAYTEE will find a copy of the "lords'" order of Dec. 16, 1580, in Peck's Desiderata Curiosa (lib. iii. no. xxvi.) with a more correct list of the names than he gives from Gregson's Fragments. Ornell should be Orrell; Firth is Forth. Thomson and Nelson are stated to be of Lancaster; Sherborne of Aughton; Chiswell should be Chiswall, &c. A large if not a complete list of Roman Catholic Gentry of Lancashire at different periods could be constructed from the following and other sources:—

"A Catalogue of the Lords, Knights, and Gentlemen that have compounded for their Estates" (Chester, 1633; London, 1655.) This is alphabetical, and to most of the names the residences are appended, e. g. "Gerrard, Tho^s of Ince, Lancashire, gentleman."

Then of the period of the great Civil War, there is "A Catalogue of those Catholics that died and suffered for their Loyalty." This is printed in The Catholique Apology, &c. (3rd edit. 1674.) It is in ranks—Nobles, Knights, Colonels, Lieut.-Colonels, Sergeant-Majors, Majors, Captains, inferior Officers and gentlemen volunteers. Another list is entitled "More Catholiques that died for their Loyalty."

A third, "Catholiques whose Estates, real and personal, were sold in pursuance of an Act made by the Rump, July 1651, for Delinquency."—"Other Estates sold under the Acts of Aug. 4, 1652 and Nov. 18, 1652."

Then after the Rebellion of 1715, the Roman Catholic gentry were required to register their estates, with the value thereof; and in Baines's History of Lancashire, vol. iv. p. 766, Appendix VI. s. a "List of Papists who registered their Estates, and the respective Values thereof, in Lancashire, in 1718] as reported to Parliament by the Commissioners appointed under the Act of 1st Geo. I." This is perhaps the most complete list of Lancashire Roman Gentry of that period, as it contains the names of about 460, but omits their residences. CRUX.

MAESMORRE (3rd S. vii. 67; viii. 258.)—By way of supplement to the answer of T. W. on this subject, let me observe, that many years ago I used to visit a place called Mass Mawr. It is situated in the parish of Guilsfield, in the county of Montgomery, and is now, according to Burke's History of the Landed Gentry, p. 284, the seat of Thomas Curling, Esq. Not being acquainted with the Welsh language I cannot give the meaning of the term, but I recollect as a boy being much impressed with the gloominess of the place, situated in a deep dingle, on the banks of a large deep pool, and fancying that the name was in some way or other derived from the situation. A "massy more" was, according to Scott, a pit, or prison vault, and many of your readers will recollect mention of it in the fine description of Orichtoun Castle, in Marmion:—

"And, shuddering, still may we explore,
Where oft whilom were captives pent,
The darkness of thy massy more;
Or, from thy grass-grown battlement,
May trace, in undulating line,
The sluggish mazes of the Tyne."

Canto iv. stanza xi.

OXONIENSIS.

WASPS (3rd S. viii. 226.)—Like MR. TRENCH I have observed the scarcity of wasps this summer, having seen only one. The following explanation, agreeing with MR. TRENCH's statement, is from Kirby and Spence's Entomology, i. 350, 7th edition:—

"It sometimes happens that when a large number of female wasps have been observed in the spring, and an abundance of workers have been expected in the summer and autumn, but few have appeared. . . . In this vicinity (Barham) numbers make their nests in the banks of the river. In the beginning of October (1816) there was an inundation, after which not a single wasp was to be seen. The continued wet that produces an inundation may also destroy those nests that are out of the reach of the waters."

I have curtailed this extract, but have given the substance, so as not to make it too lengthy. The heavy rains we had in the early part of last month (when the eggs would be in the nests unhatched), have no doubt operated as surmised by Mr. Kirby.

MR. TRENCH observes, that flies, in his neighbourhood, have not been more numerous than usual; but here it is the contrary. The enormous number of small flies, filling the air, renders it positively disagreeable to walk a short distance in the suburbs. I attribute their production in such quantities partly to the present exceedingly hot weather occurring immediately after several heavy rains.

W. C. B.

Hall.

BIBLICAL VERIFICATIONS IN ENGLISH (3rd S. viii. 201.)—MR. BARHAM does not mention in his article on this subject, William Hunnis, who was chapel-master to Queen Elizabeth, and a contemporary of Christopher Tye, whose verification of the Acts is referred to by MR. BARHAM. Hunnis versified several of the Psalms, part of Deuteronomy, and the Book of Genesis. I possess a versification of the whole Book of Daniel, by a presbyterian minister, Edinburgh; no date, pp. 72. I give the first verse as a specimen:—

“When Jehoiachin was king of the Jews,
Then Nebuchadnezzar did Salem attack;
And God gave him over to Babylon's king,
Who partly the city and temple did sack.”

As MR. BARHAM says, the versification of the Psalms are too numerous to mention, but I think those by Addison ought not to be forgotten. The paraphrase by Dr. Johnson of part of the fourth chapter of Proverbs; and by Thomson of part of the sixth chapter of St. Matthew might also be noticed. W. C. B.

MARY CLARE WARNER (3rd S. viii. 267.)—I beg leave to inform your correspondent, THUS, that Sister Mary Clare Warner was in the world Elizabeth Warner, and was sister-in-law to the Lady Warner, whose name in religion was Sister Clare of Jesus. F. C. II.

SALMON AND APPRENTICES (3rd S. viii. 107, 174.) There can be no doubt that indentures of apprenticeship do exist, in which clauses restricting the eating of salmon are to be found. In the town of Christchurch, Hants, there is a spot called Bargate, where anciently stood a small lazaret house, or hospital for lepers, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, but the building has long since been destroyed. The revenues of this foundation arise from small pieces of land, some cottages and garden ground, and amount to something like thirty pounds per annum, and are now applied to charitable uses. Frequent mention is recorded of the large quantity of salmon with which the rivers Stour and Avon abounded in former times. The prevalence of leprosy at that period may have been occasioned by partaking too freely of fish. A remarkable fact connected with this subject is the restriction imposed upon masters receiving apprentices in this town under its charities, by which the former were bound not to permit the youths entrusted to their care to eat “red fish” oftener than at stated times therein specified. I am not at this moment able to get access to the documents in the corporation chest of the town, but I will endeavour shortly to obtain an extract from one of the indentures with the exact words employed.

BENJ. FERREY.

MARSHAL SOULT AND THE BATTLE OF TOULOUSE (3rd S. viii. 252.)—Colonel Cook and Colonel St. Simon left Paris on the 7th of April, 1814, to inform Wellington and Soult of the proposed abdication. They were arrested, and detained on their way, and did not reach the contending armies till the 11th—the day after the battle was fought. Even after they had received the information, the French Marshals did not consider it sufficiently authentic, and did not lay down their arms for some days; in which period they took prisoner Sir John Hope. (See Baines's History of the Wars of the French Revolution, 1817, vol. ii. pp. 339, 340.) I have given these particulars towards elucidating this important point, in order to set the matter more fully before your readers. I should like to have Lord Wellington's justification of Marshal Soult; but at the same time, as the news was sent to each camp on the same day, and reached them also on the same day, part of the blame (if any) would attach to Lord Wellington. W. C. B.

SIR THOMAS SUTTON (3rd S. viii. 252.)—Sir Thomas Sutton, the founder of the Charter House, was born at Knaith, in Lincolnshire. His father was, I believe, steward of the Courts belonging to the corporation of the city of Lincoln. Will this in any way assist your correspondent LIAL-LAWG? A reference to the various registers of the city of Lincoln might perhaps be of use, or perhaps those of Knaith, if any such there be. W. C. B.

LIONEL, DUKE OF CLARENCE (3rd S. viii. 248.)—I do not write in answer to the first part of the query contained in the last number, respecting the sex of this Prince's child or children; but your correspondent also says—“Where was Campsey Abbey?” There is a place called Campsie, near Glasgow; but whether there is or was an abbey there, I do not know. It is a place of some antiquity. Allow me to ask, in connection with this subject—How many children had Edward III.? Some say twelve, others thirteen. All admit that two sons died young, and that he had five daughters. W. C. B.

INN SIGNS: “DRY LODGINGS” (3rd S. viii. 176.)—An impression has obtained for many years, on the part of tourists and others who visit the “sister isle” and see “Dry Lodgings” and “Good Dry Lodgings” advertised at the entrances to underground apartments, and on the windows of ground floors, in the old back streets of Dublin, Cork, and other places, that the announcement includes the certainty of a well-aired bed. This, however, is as it may be, for no such guarantee is intended. “Mine host” merely intends to intimate that he does not supply malt drink or spirits. WILLIAM BLOOD.

Liverpool.

“THE CHRISTIAN YEAR” (3rd S. viii. 249.)—In answer to your correspondent, I may state that I have in my possession a letter from an eminent London publisher to the following effect. The Christian Year was offered to Messrs. Parker of Oxford, and they refused it; the then Mr. Coleridge either gave or lent the money to Mr. Keble on the Undue Exaltation of Intellect in the present day, is a most just and wholesome one.

A Corner of Kent; or, Some Account of the Parish of Ash-next-Sandwich, its Historical Sites and existing Antiquities. By J. R. Planché, Rouge Croix Pursuivant. (Hardwicke.)

Let the reader spread out before him the Map of England, and say he can lay his finger upon a more interesting corner of a more interesting county than that which has called forth this able volume from the facile pen of Rouge Dragon. It lies on the Rutupine shore alluded to by Lucan, is closely connected with Richborough, and was the scene of those successful excavations which formed the celebrated Faussett Collection, and furnished Douglas with materials for his Venia Britannica. A spot so rich in historical associations, described by so good an antiquary as Mr. Planché, could not fail to produce a volume of great value to Kentish collectors, and which might be run through with interest even by the general reader.

Ancient Pillar Stones of Scotland: their Significance and Bearing on Ethnology. By George Moore, M.D. (Edmonstone & Douglas.)

All who are interested in the sculptured stones of Scotland, which are among the most remarkable in the world, should read this little volume on that which is the most singular among them—the so-called "Newton Stone;" which, according to Dr. Moore's reading of the inscription, is a monument erected when the worship of Baal either still predominated, or had been suddenly revived in Northern Scotland.

BOOKS RECEIVED.—

A Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art. Edited by W. T. Brande, D.C.L., and the Rev. G. W. Cox, M.A., assisted by Gentlemen of Eminent Scientific and Literary Acquirements. Parts V. and VI. (Longman.)

We have already spoken at such length of the merits of this useful and compendious Cyclopædia, that we may now content ourselves with announcing its steady progress towards completion.

An Enlarged and Illustrated Edition of Dr. Webster's Complete Dictionary of the English Language, thoroughly revised and improved. By Chauncey A. Goodrich, D.D., LL.D., and Noah Porter, D.D. To be completed in Twelve Monthly Parts. Parts IX. and X. (Bell & Daldy.)

We are glad to see this excellent Dictionary so rapidly approaching completion. The tenth part reaches to the word "Utilitarian." Two more parts will complete the alphabet, and include the various supplements, which will add so much to the utility of the book.

The Gossiping Guide to Jersey. By J. Bertrand Payne, F.R.G.S. Sixth Annual Issue. (Adams & Francis.)

The words "Sixth Annual Issue" testify to the recognised utility of this Guide to Jersey.

"Despatches of the Duke of Wellington." We are informed that it is intended to include, in the next volume, a complete Index to this important collection.

Messrs. Longman, as we learn from their useful Monthly List, have nearly ready for publication, in addition to numerous medical and other scientific works, "The Life of Man symbolised by the Months of the Year in their Seasons and Phases, with Passages selected from Ancient and Modern Authors," selected by Mr. Pigot, accompanied by a series of twenty-five full-page illustrations, and many hundred minor ones, from original designs by John Leighton; an illustrated edition of the First Series of the "Recreations of a Country Parson;" a new volume of Dr. D'Aubigné's "History of the Reformation in Europe in the Time of Calvin;" "Mozart's Letters," translated by Lady Wallace; a "History of the City of Rome," by Mr. Dyer, author of the article "Rome" in Dr. Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Geography; a Second Series of "Legends of Iceland," by Mr. Powell and Eirike Magnusson; "Travels in Egypt and Syria," by Mr. S. S. Hill; Transylvania, its Products and its People," by Mr. Boner; and a new "Life of Isambard K. Brunel," by his Grandson.

Messrs. Moxon's announcements for the approaching Season include a quarto edition of Mr. Tennyson's "Enoch Arden," illustrated by one of the most prominent apostles of the pre-Raphaelite school—Mr. Arthur Hughes; a new novel, entitled "See-Saw," by Francesco Abati, edited by Mr. Winwood Reade, the author of "Savage Africa;" a new volume of Poems by Mr. Stigant; a "Life of Charles Lamb," by the veteran Barry Cornwall; a re-issue of "Mrs. Fanny Kemble's Poems," with others never before printed; "Selections from the Works of William Wordsworth," and a critical essay on the life and works of the late Laureate, by Francis Turner Palgrave; "Lancelot," with sonnets and versicles, by William Fulford, M.A.; and a re-issue of illustrated editions of Tennyson's "Princess," "Keats' Poems," and "Tupper's Proverbial Philosophy."—"Chastelard," a tragedy by Algernon O. Swinburne; and a new and cheaper edition of "Atalanta in Calydon," by the same author.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

INTERESTING FACTS RELATING TO THE FALL AND DEATH OF JOSEPH MURAT, KING OF NAPLES, by Francis Madras. Ridgway, Piccadilly, 1817.

 Letters stating particulars and lowest price, carriage free, to be sent to Mr. W. G. SMYTH, Publisher of "NOTES & QUERIES," 21, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books, to be sent direct to the gentlemen by whom they are required, whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:
HOBSON (REV. GEN.), THE CHURCH OF BOMBE'S TRAVEL IN PARADISE. London: Hamilton & Co. 1838.
GREEN (REV. T. L.), THE TRUTH, THE WHOLE TRUTH, AND NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH, &c. London: Keating & Co. 1888.
SCHEERMAN (J. G.), ARCHAÏTES LITTERARIÆ. 14 Vols. 1728-31.
HISTORIEN BY ECKHARDT. 6 Vols. 1727.

Wanted by Rev. Aiken Irvine, Kilbride, Bray.

SONGS OF CHRISTIAN CHIVALRY.

Wanted by Dr. Fisher, 5, Appian Way, Upper Leeson Street, Dublin.

Notices to Correspondents.

A FEW WORDS ON THE PASTOR LETTERS IN OUR NEXT.

W. M. M. Lorrain's work on the Inquisition is in 4 vols. Our Correspondent, Mr. S. Brink, published a work on the Botany of Shakespeare, under the title of Shakespeare's Garden (Longman, 1864), which is noticed in "N. & Q." of April 30, 1864.

PROSPER POVE. Tetchy and touchy are the same word differently spelt. Shakespeare's.

"Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy" surely corresponds with Beaumont and Fletcher's
"You're touchie without cause."

C. D. L. The line—
"The labour we delight in physics pain," is in Macbeth, Act II. Sc. 2.

 Cases for binding the volumes of "N. & Q." may be had of the Publisher, and of all Booksellers and Newsmen.

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d. or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 6d.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STRAIPING COPIES for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly Index) is 11s. 6d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Street Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM GOSWELL, 21, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., where also all CORRESPONDENTS FOR THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

tance—Lord Rivers, Lord Hastings, the Earl of Warwick, whom I remember still better than Mrs. Strawbridge, though she died within these fifty years. What antiquary would be answering a letter from a living Countess, when he may read one from Eleanor Mowbray, Duchess of Norfolk?”

There is one point on which Mr. Merivale insists, but which we think is untenable—viz. “that the Letters have never been seen by any individual.” Sir Frederic Madden pointed out in this Journal (“N. & Q.” 2nd S. vii. 108), that on the 23rd May, 1787, the editor attended the King’s Levee, and “had the honour of presenting to his Majesty, bound in three volumes, the ORIGINAL Letters of which he had before presented a printed copy,” when his Majesty conferred upon him the honour of knighthood. It is difficult to conceive that any man would have had the audacity to play off such a hoax upon his sovereign, as Sir John Fenn—who is described as being “of strict and scrupulous punctuality and veracity”—must have been guilty of, if the documents he presented were spurious.

But there is every reason to believe that these documents had, before their presentation to the King, been seen and examined by scholars competent to form an opinion of their value. In the first volume of the PASTON LETTERS in the library of the Society of Antiquaries is a letter to the then President, the Earl of Leicester, from the editor, which has the following postscript:—

“P.S. If it be agreeable to the Society, the original letters shall be left for one month in their library for the inspection of such gentlemen whose curiosity may be excited to examine them.”

The book and the accompanying letter were laid before the Society at their meeting on the 1st February, 1787, when, as we learn from the Minute Book in which the proceedings of that meeting are recorded—

“The Society returned thanks to their worthy Member for this kind mark of his attention and favour, and expressed their satisfaction in having the originals deposited in their library for the purpose mentioned in his letter.”

In the face of this proposal on the part of Mr. Fenn, and its acceptance on the part of the Society of Antiquaries, is it reasonable to suppose that the Letters were neither deposited in the library, nor examined by any of the Fellows of the Society?

We have not entered into a defence of the PASTON LETTERS from internal evidence, or on philological grounds. That will probably be undertaken by other hands more fitted for the task, and we have no doubt satisfactorily. But, while we feel that the disappearance of the originals is a great loss to literature, we should be sorry to see that loss aggravated by a successful attack on their authenticity. We have therefore thrown together these few hints for Mr. Merivale’s consideration, in the hope that they may contribute to remove his doubts, and the doubts of those, if there be any, whose faith in the authenticity of the PASTON LETTERS have been shaken by that gentleman’s ingenious speculations.

Notes.

AUTHENTICITY OF THE PASTON LETTERS.*

There are few collections of papers of which the descent is more correctly traced than that of the Paston Letters, the authenticity of which has of late been so unexpectedly impugned. They are said to have passed from the library of the Earl of Yarmouth to that of Peter Le Neve, thence to that of T. Martin of Thetford, part of whose collections came into the hands of Mr. Worth, a chemist of Diss, in Norfolk. That very many of Le Neve’s MSS. did pass through the hands of these successive possessors is an undoubted fact; and, although on searching through the sale catalogues of Le Neve and Martin, I have not been able to find any distinct entry of the letters in question, yet, as various sale-lots are in several instances described in general terms as being original “Letters” and “Papers,” it is more than probable that these, as well as others, passed in an undistinguished bundle. When the last volume of the series was printed in 1823, the editor (Mr. Frere, Master of Downing College) stated that some originals, not included in the printed volumes, were then in his own hands, and that the first transcriber of a great part of the whole collection, Mr. Dalton, was still living at Bury St. Edmund’s.

External evidence in favour of the genuineness of the Letters, appears indeed to be almost unimpeachably strong; and with regard to the internal evidence, the very words alleged as suspiciously suggestive of imposture from the seemingly modern sense in which they are employed, turn out rather upon examination to be proofs of authenticity. Several examples of this kind are pointed out in a letter (signed “R. H.”) which appeared in The Reader of Sept. 16; and I send herewith a transcript of a letter, which gives still more conclusive evidence. Douce MS. 393, in the Bodleian Library, contains various original letters addressed to John Paston himself (which are described in Mr. Coxe’s Catalogue of that collection); and, amongst others, there are twelve from John de Vere, Earl of Oxford; who is found a frequent correspondent in the printed collection. These agree very closely in style and language with those published by Sir J. Fenn, and corroborate the genuineness of the latter beyond a doubt; but the one which I subjoin affords in particular a very satisfactory instance of the use of one amongst the supposed modern phrases, which would perhaps sound in many ears as the most doubtful of all, viz. the speaking of a person’s residence as “my place.” Two instances of the expression are given from Bp. Beckington's Correspondence, in the communication noticed above; but it is still more conclusive evidence to find it employed in an existing original letter, from one of Paston's own correspondents. It is worth noticing also, that the terms "una placea," and "placea terræ," are of not infrequent occurrence in early Latin deeds.

* This article reached us just as we were making up the present Number. We have therefore thought it advisable to insert it as supplementary to our own remarks.—ED. “N. & Q.”]

"Douce MS. 393, f. 86.

"Right Worshipfull and right intierly beloved, I commaund me hastily to you. And whereas your broder William my servaunte is so troubelid with sekenes and crasid in his myndes that I may nat kepe hym aboute me, wherfor I am right sory, And at this tyme sende hym to you praying especially that he may be kepte surely and tendirly with you to suche tyme as God fortune hym to be bettyr assurid of hymselfe and his myndes more sadly (sic) disposid whiche I pray God may be in shorte tyme and preserve you longe in gode prosperite. Writen at my place in London the xxvj day of Juyn.

"OXYNFORD.

"To the right worshipfull and my right intierly welbelovyd Sr
John Pastone, Knyght."

W. D. MACRAY.

GREEK ETHNOLOGY.

Mr. Grote, in his History, having abandoned the question of the pre-historic origin of the Greeks (Hist. ii. 349), Mr. Gladstone has taken it up with great critical acumen, in his first volume of Studies on Homer. Both writers, as well as their chief authorities, K. O. Müller and Donaldson, have failed, I conceive, from disregard of the Shemitic branch of Oriental literature. The connexion of the Greeks and the Phœnicians is the point to which these authors have not given the requisite attention. The influence of the Sanskrit element, unfortunately termed the Pelasgic by Marsh and his German teachers, can no more be doubted, as respects the Greek language, than that of Anglo-Saxon on the English. But Anglo-Saxon will not explain all the names of rivers, country districts, mountains, &c., in England, for which we must search the languages of the ancient Britons and their Celtic brethren. So in Greece there are names of which the origin is not discoverable in its own roots, or in the Sanskrit, from which such roots are drawn. The Greeks borrowed the names of their alphabetic characters from the Phœnicians, which are almost identical in Hebrew, Samaritan, Syriac, Arabic, Ethiopic, Amharic, Persian, and Coptic, although the last-named may have borrowed their alphabetic names (alpha, beta, &c.) from the Greeks in a comparatively recent age. Then as to the form of the alphabetic character, the Phœnician, the ancient Greek, the ancient Italic, and the Etruscan are clearly derived from the demotic, hieratic, and hieroglyphic forms of the Egyptian alphabets.

The meanings of the Phœnician and Hebrew names of their alphabetic characters, and consequently those of the Greeks, are to be found depicted in the Egyptian hieroglyphics, which represent such alphabetic characters (Ballhorn's Alphabete, 8, 9). The Sanskrit alphabet has an entirely different arrangement and different names for the letters. Many of the words respecting which etymological doubts have arisen in Greek begin with the letter p. Now in Egyptian and Coptic p, and its aspirate ph, are the definite article the. This is well known to biblical critics in the name Pharaoh, in Hebrew פֶּרֶעְ (par-ho). Applying this Egyptian article to a few words of dubious origin, we have the following result:—Phœnicia = ph-anak, that is the anak-im, called in Hebrew yelâi-Anak (= children of Anak).^{*} This furnishes a key to the ἀναξ ἀνθρώπων, so oft recurring in Homer (Od. xiii. 223).[†]

Pausanias represents Asterion, whose tomb is said to have been discovered in Lydia, as a son of Anak, and of enormous size. ἔλκεται δὲ Ἀστέριον μὲν Ἀνάκτος. Ἀνάκτα δὲ γῆς παῖδα . . . ὁσὺν ἐφάρη τὸ σχῆμα περιέχοντα ἐς πλῆθος, ὥς ἐστὶν ἀνθρώπων· ἐπὶ δὲ μέγεθος οὐκ ἴσθιν ὅπως ἐν βίῳ γέν. (i. xxxv. 6, 7.) Palestine and Philistine = p-ellas-ti and ph-ellas-ti respectively, where the root Ellas is found, as in Pelasgi = p-ellas-goi, or the nation of Ellas (1 Chron. ii. 39, 40),[‡] identical, etymologically, with Helli and selli. If this etymology is supported by history, as I conceive it is, then the attempt to distinguish the Pelasgic element from the Hellenic in Grecian ethnology is vain, unless the Pelasgic be used as equivalent to the Sanskrit element.

The words of most difficult etymology in Greek are Δαναοί, Ἀργεῖοι, and Ἀχαιοί. By aid of the Phœnician element, however, these words are easily resolved into Dan = a judge, Har-goi = mountaineers, and Achi = brethren. So Κεδμῶν is resolved into Kedem = ancient, east. Ἰδμεν is Javan = new people (Fuerst, p. 1278), the name by which the Greeks are spoken of in the Targums and Mishna. Δωριεὺς is Dör = a dwelling, a generation; Φεργάται is Peleg = division or partition of race; Γραιὶς is perhaps derived from Grai = a stranger, a foreigner.

The Egyptian feminine article t or th, and the plural of both genders, st, may also be made useful in ancient Greek etymology, on the hypothesis that Egypt was the channel through which oriental names reached the Greeks, independently of such as came to them more directly through Ionia and Lesser Asia.

T. J. BUCKTON.

^{*} B.C. 1451. Num. xiii. 28, Dent. ix. 2, Jos. xi. 21, 22.

[†] Damm, Mura, Scott, and Liddell, are all at fault on the origin and meaning of ἀναξ. (Gladstone, Hom. i. 445.) The word anâ in Arabic means long-necked.

[‡] From Helen = liberation, or from Elasak = whom God made.

THE DUEL OF JUNIUS.

Turning over the pages of The London Magazine for 1772, a short time since, in pursuit of some information on a very different subject, I met with the following reference to Junius. In the belief that there are many who think the inquiry into the identity of Junius a matter still worth pursuing, and believing all contemporary allusions to the Great Unknown to be of value, I venture to hope you will find space for it in "N. & Q." I had first proposed only to send an extract, but the article, which occurs on pp. 113 to 115 of the London Magazine for March 1772, is not, I trust, too long to be transferred entire to your columns:

"THE DUEL OF JUNIUS; A DREAM.

"It is amazing what a connected train of ideas will often present itself to the mind in sleep. Philosophers differ very much in their solutions of the faculty of dreaming; and none of them indeed have been able to give us such an explanation of it as is not liable to considerable objections. The most ingenious and pleasing one that I have ever met with is that which Mr. Baxter gives in his essay On the Immortality of the Soul. He supposes that dreams are suggested to the mind by the interposition of invisible agents, of spirits of good or bad dispositions, who are perpetually hovering around us. This thought has something in it exceedingly pleasing to the imagination. How fine is that passage in Milton!—

"'Millions of spiritual creatures walk the earth
Unseen, both when we wake and when we sleep.'

"I had lately a most singular and extraordinary dream about that very celebrated political writer Junius. Methought there appeared in the Publick Advertiser what was entitled 'A Challenge by Junius.' It was in these words: 'I have been accused of cowardice: Sir William Draper has dared me to the field; and it gave me pain to resist the invitation of a scholar and a soldier. I answered him, however, from the firmest persuasion both of his honour and the rascality of others, that although he would fight, there were others who would assassinate. I have paid no regard to numberless other addresses of the same kind, which have appeared in the publick papers; for I should not think that he who would expose himself to the bravos of our wicked ministry could be considered as having wisdom sufficient to expose to the people of England, with a steady and unsparing hand, the abandoned conduct of that ministry. Even one of the plebeian Scotchmen, who bailed John Eyre, had the gross insolence to propose that he should fight me. Those North-Britons, as they call themselves, when they have been a little while amongst us, absolutely forget what kind of beings they are. They put us in mind of the farmer's ass, who would needs fawn upon him as he saw the spaniel do. Junius must be much deluded indeed before he puts himself on a level with a Scotch pedlar.

"But, as the generous people of England are fond of courage to a fault, altho' my passions are better reined than theirs, I am unwilling that Junius, who has obtained their honest regard, and in whom they place entire confidence as in a tried friend, should be suspected of a deficiency in what they highly value. I am therefore resolved to yield to them so far, and for once to expose my life in their presence. If I survive, I shall be doubly endeared to them, and be able to lead them on to their true interest and happiness with renewed vigour. If I fall, I hope that, as the blood of the martyrs has been called the seed of the church, so from the grave of Junius patriotism will spring with a luxuriant growth.

"This publick notice then is given to the king and council, that, upon any day which shall be fixed by them at one week's notice in the London Gazette, Junius shall be ready to engage in single combat with any one of their friends not under the rank of a Duke, provided that he may fight in a mask; that he shall reveal himself only to the man who shall be brave enough to meet him; that their honour shall be secretly pledged that no rude attempt shall be made to discover him; and that the duel shall proceed in open day before the people of England.

"The place is indifferent to him; but if, on so solemn an occasion, a little pleasantry may be allowed, he would mention Tower-hill to the ministry, as then he would be meeting them on their own ground. JUNIUS."

"To such a pitch was my imagination carried in sleep, that I actually thought the proposal was accepted; and methought I was present in council at the deliberations. His M——y, with great propriety, declared that for his own part he was ever mindful of the Christian precept 'forgive your enemies,' and so far as concerned the personal insults which he had received from that malignant pen, he did not wish any notice to be taken of Junius; but that, if their Lordships should be of opinion that the dignity of the crown and of the sovereign ought to be vindicated by an acceptance of the challenge given, it might be so determined; and he expressed the greatest confidence in the wisdom of their deliberations. The Earl of Talbot swore, that if the challenge was not accepted, the insolence of Junius would be intolerable; and the people, already so amazingly intoxicated with admiration of the rebellious villain, would then view him as exalted into a hero; he was therefore clear that Junius should be taken at his word. He said that he himself, had he been a duke, would willingly have undertaken to fight him; but although that he was persuaded that his royal master would confer that high title upon him, he recollected that he had already fought once with a member of opposition on Bagshot-heath, and that he considered it as highly becoming to have some economy in his courage. All concurred and resolved that the challenge should be accepted; but it was a matter of no small difficulty to fix who should be the man to meet this extraordinary foe. All regretted that the Duke of Bedford was gone, as they were persuaded that the cruel stabs which he had received from Junius would have made him embrace with pleasure an occasion of taking vengeance by his own hands. It was once proposed that a mock duke should be brought forth, like the Dukes of Aquitaine and Normandy at the coronation; but it was soon considered that Junius was a personage of too great importance to be trifled with, and that the very intention of this most uncommon proceeding would be frustrated if any attempt should be made to treat it as a farce. It was expected that the Duke of Grafton would have stepped out; but his grace very wisely represented, that his life was of so much consequence, that it would be venturing too high a stake. After many hints, many half-offers, and many speeches beginning in fire and ending in smoke, it was at last settled that the Duke of St. Alban's should be the man. His grace being, as well as the Duke of Grafton, a branch of the royal house of Stuart, against which the keen pen of Junius had been so often directed with unrelenting virulence. And, besides, his grace had peculiar advantages in the science of defence, having been so long at the academy of Brussels.

"It was accordingly announced in the London Gazette, that on a certain day mentioned, at twelve o'clock at noon, his Grace the Duke of St. Alban's would be ready to spirited answer of the King roused the ire of the priesthood: Dr. Sacheverel for the High Church, and Bishop Hoadly for the Government, were so bamboozled by the parsons of the Church of England, that they employed two gentlemen, Gordon and Trenchard, to write down High Church. It was these gentlemen who wrote the Independent Whig; jointly they also wrote Cato's Letters, and a Cordial for Low Spirits.

"Although the people of Scotland, by the Act of Union, were entitled to all the privileges of the British Constitution, the instant that a Scotch family entered England the parents were liable to prosecution by the Attorney-General if they dared to educate their own child. However, the priestianity of the time dared not to act on this infamous law. Notwithstanding, this act disgraced the Statute Book till 1812, when it was repealed through the perseverance of Wm. Smith, M.P., of Norwich. In Oct. 1812, in a conversation with the late Princess Charlotte of Wales, I highly praised the wisdom of George the First, which led to a lengthened talk on the subject of dissent, which excited her attention so much, that she resumed it often on future occasions: in fact, at last she requested me to give her a list of books that would inform her of the Reformation, the Revolution, and the Accession of the Hanoverian Family. I gave her a list of books, and I put a copy of The Whig into her hand; and I advised her to read the paper entitled the 'Enmity of the High Clergy to the Reformation, and their Acts to defeat it,' and papers on 'High Church Atheism.' The next time that I saw her was at Warwick House: she told me that I had done her a great favour by putting the Independent Whig into her hands; adding, 'Mr. H—, I am not indulged with that kind of reading.' Mr. Crie's Life of Knox throws a new and very interesting light upon the Scotch Reformation; and the details of Scotch History from the Accession of James to the Revolution of 1688, gives a most awful picture of the unbridled licentiousness of a lordly priesthood.

"JOHN HENNING, Senr,
"1834."

Mr. Henning was born at Paisley in 1771. He was bred to the business of his father, who was a carpenter, and by-and-by began to model likenesses in wax. Soon after he adopted modelling as a profession, went to Edinburgh, and subsequently to London in 1811. The Elgin Marbles were then newly brought to England, and he enthusiastically drew from them, and studied the principles which guided their execution. The idea of making reduced copies of the grand Panathenaic frieze, with the lost parts restored, was "suggested to him by the Princess Charlotte," the conversation with whom he reports in the above note.

JAMES J. LAMB.

Underwood Cottage, Paisley.

MOLIÈRE.

"Where can we find a more playful hit at the modern philosophers than in the two scenes of the Marriage Forcé between Sganarelle and the learned Pancrace and Marphurius? 'Notre philosophie,' says the latter, 'ordonne de ne point énoncer de proposition décisive, de parler de tout avec incertitude; et par cette raison vous ne devez pas dire, "Je suis venu," mais "Il me semble que je suis venu."' 'What!' cries Sganarelle, 'is it not true that I am here?' 'It is uncertain,' says Marphurius,

'and we must doubt everything.' May we not fancy that we are listening to the conversation of some worthy matter-of-fact citizen with a professor of the doctrine of Kant? It is true that this may be accounted for by the knowledge that it was the system of Descartes which Molière meant to satirize.' 'Listen to me,' cries Sganarelle to Pancrace. This is more than the preoccupied philosopher and philologist can take upon himself to do. 'The world is overturned,' cries he; 'it is horrible, scandalous! I cannot, will not suffer that a man shall say the form of a hat (la forme d'un chapeau); it is a proposition condemned by Aristotle.'—Molière, par Madame Baz de Bury, p. 140, London, 1846.

I am not very familiar with the doctrines of Kant, but such of them as I know do not resemble those of Marphurius. Did Molière satirize the system of Descartes, in what either of these philosophers says? Are Marphurius and Pancrace representatives of individuals, and if so of whom?

Molière has a hit at the occult qualities in the third intermède of Le Malade Imaginaire, in which Argan is made an M.D.:—

"1re Docteur. Demandabo causam et rationem quare
Opium facit dormire.
Argan. Mihi a docto doctore
Demandatur causam et rationem quare
Opium facit dormire.
A quoi respondeo,
Quia est in eo
Virtus dormitiva,
Cujus est natura
Sensus assoupire."

Close to the above I have come upon a passage which has been used by one of the authors of The Rolliad, and which may be as well mentioned here as in a separate note. Argan, thanking the faculty for his degree, says:—

"Vobis, vobis debeo
Bien plus qu'à natura et qu'à patri meo:
Natura, et pater meus,
Hominem me habent factum.
Mais vos me, ce qui est bien plus,
Avez fait factum medicum."

In the "Probationary Ode of Dr. Markham, Archbishop of York," he says:—

"More to my king than to my God I owe:
God and my father made me man,

But George without or God or man
With grace endowed and hallowed me Archbishop."
FITZHOPE.

Paris.

EPIGRAM: COALITION EXTRAORDINARY.—Since you have opened your columns to many stray epigrams, may I contribute the following from the Bristol Mercury, signed J. P.:—

"On the Lords Derby and Palmerston's Govt.

"The Premier is, the Premier out,
Are both laid up with pedal gout,
And no place can they go to;
Hence it ensues, that though of old
Their differences were manifold,
They now agree in toe."

JOSEPHUS.

SPALPEEN.—The following explanation of this word occurs in a MS. written, if an opinion from the handwriting can be formed, between 1730 and 1740. It consists of notes taken in relation to Celtic antiquities and customs during a conversation between the writer and a "clergyman in Beaumaris, where I was once cast away in a storm." The reverend gentleman is throughout styled "Doctor," and his communications on Highland dress and games are curious:—

"The poor harvest-men who now pass in troops from Ireland to England are called Spalpeens, with a show of contempt or disrespect in using the word. Anciently the word Spalpeen meant a hero, a champion, or errant adventurer, and took its rise in the British Isles, from the number of younger sons of Irish kings, nobility, and gentry, who passed in times of war to England and Scotland with volunteers to assist in defending those nations from the invasions of each other, but more especially of the Danes, when their own country was at rest. Many noblemen and gentlemen are now remaining in both kingdoms descended from these adventurers or Spalpeens. Spalpeena Diublishe is now used, as a synonymous phrase with a clever fellow of strength and activity."

J. M.

Wigs.—The following advertisement, showing the numerous species of wigs, appeared in The Dublin Gazette of Sept. 29 to Nov. 3, 1724:—

"Joseph Pickeaver, Peruke Maker, who formerly liv'd at the Black Lyon in Copper Alley, is now remov'd under Tom's Coffee-House,—Where all Gentlemen may be furnish'd with all sorts of Perukes, as Full-bottoms, Tyes, Full-Bobs, Ministers'-Bobs, Naturalis, Half-Naturalis, Grecian-Flyes, Curley-Roys, Airy-Lavants, Qu-Perukes, and Bagg-Wiggs. He is likewise furnish'd with all sorts of Hair from the only noted Hair Merchants in England and Ireland. Buying at the best and cheapest Hand, Gentlemen may be furnish'd as reasonable and fashionable as in London."

WM. LEE.

H. M. S. PERSEUS.—Being recently on board this man of war in this harbour, I was attracted by the circumscription on the wheel, which ran thus:—"PERSEUSUSVINCIT." I was naturally puzzled by what seemed to me without meaning, for it was not plain why H. M. S. Perseus should wish to boast of a victory over the apparently superfluous us, whoever we might be. However, I was at once set right by the lieutenant on duty, who showed the motto to comprise four words: "PER SE USUS VINCIT;" a truism to which fifty parallels will occur to your readers, though they may miss the application in this particular case. I merely wish to quote its quaintness as a naval motto.

W. T. M.

Government House, Hong-Kong.

"ESNECCA."—This term occurs frequently in old records, and is believed to be the derivation of our word "smack." Among the national manuscripts in process of being taken by photo-zincography, a descriptive list of which has been prepared by Mr. William Basevi Sanders, are extracts from Pipe Roll, 2 Richard I., in which reference is made to the expences of the king's "esnecca."—"When the Queen and the French king's sister, the Countess of Albemarle, Philip de Columbers, and other of the King's lieges crossed over with the treasure." There is also an item regarding the pay of Alan Cleave-the-sea, for piloting the "esnecca" from Southampton to Shoreham. (See 26th Report on Public Records, App. p. 57.)

PHILIP S. KIRK.

A CARD.—The following is a copy of a document which issued from the printing press of Mr. Timothy Driscoll, of Old Market Place, in Cork. It was printed in the good old times, when the schoolmaster was not abroad in the land as now: so that all due allowance must be made for any slight typographical errors. The postscript is of rather a startling character, and may require explanation; as Mr. Lynch intended to inform his customers that he held Coultis, i. e. "handy men," or carpenters who had only served half their time, in the most supreme contempt:—

"PETER LYNCH,
Old Bridewell Lane,
Cabinet Maker and Upholsterer,
(Sine of the Mahogany Bedstead!)

Humbly takes leave to petition the patronage of the Aristocracy and public in particular (who don't want to waist their monies), in regard of the 1st quality of his work in the abuv line.

"P. Lynch defies competition for cheapness and decent tratement over and above any other workshop in Cork.

"Postscript.

"P. L. contaminates Coultis and their rotten Work, and all belonging to them, which are only fit for Work-houses and Auction Buzars. A constant supply of new and 2nd hand Coffins to fit all Customers, more cheaply than Undertakers.

"N.B. The lowest price axed at worst, and no huxtrin. A murning Car for hire, with 2 wheels and 4 springs, warranted to go any road without joulkin; and a Black Horse trained for Berrins.

"Printed by Timy Driskil, Old M— P—."

R. D.

Cork.

THE JEWISH MEZUZAH.—A few years ago, a very fine specimen of a Mezuzah came into my possession. It is known that the Jews are accustomed to write in Hebrew short portions of the law upon a slip of parchment; and placing this within a case of metal, reed, cane, or glass, they fasten it on the right hand post of the outer door of the house, or place it in some recess or cavity of the same. The one I have contains two passages from Deuteronomy, from chap. vi. verses 4 to 9, and from chap. xi. verses 13 to 21. When folded up, it fits into a metallic case, in which a square opening is left, through which can be seen the single Hebrew word indorsed on the outside: Shaddai, "Almighty." The Mezuzah was made according to a literal interpretation of the command in Deuteronomy vi. 9.

This specimen, beautifully written and well preserved, was taken from a door-post of the house of a Jew in London, after the Great Plague. It fell into the hands of a learned gentleman in Ohio, U. S. He presented it to Count Delafield, who gave it to the friend from whom I received it.

F. C. H.

TOPOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARIES.—All the publications of this kind that have ever come under my hand labour under what appears to me a very great defect. They give, it is true, the names of parishes, but they do not give the names of hamlets, or other subordinate districts, included within a principal parish. Often and often have I been at a loss to find, in the county in which I live, where such and such a village or hamlet was. It happened not to be a parish of itself, and consequently the Gazetteers do not condescend to notice it. So with other counties. I have just been writing a letter to Ascot, a place not unknown to fame. Not being sure whether it was a post-town, or what its post-town might be, I turned to my Topographical Dictionaries. In Capper's, no Ascot: in Lewis's (for which, at the time of its first publication, 1831, I paid as many guineas as I have fingers), again no Ascot! none at least to my purpose. This, methought, is a grievance, a literary grievance; and it is high time it should be mentioned in "N. & Q."

J.

Queries.

BOOK-PLATE: R. A., WOOD-ENGRAVER.

In the present day, when every effort is made to recover illustrative evidences of the progress of art in earlier times, your readers may be interested in the description—which I now beg to submit to them, with a query—of an elaborate book-plate: the execution of which, in wood-engraving, is as beautiful as the history connected with its position in the volume which it adorns is singular. I have in my possession a copy of the works of S. Ambrose, edited by the celebrated Erasmus, and printed at Basle ("apud inclytam Basileam") by Frobenius, A.D. 1527. It is divided into four volumes; but bound up in two, in thick folio, in the oak "boards"—covered with thin leather, stamped, and adorned with brass clasps and corners—which constituted the general style of monastic binding of the period. The work is dedicated to the celebrated John à Lasco.

Pasted on the inner side of each "boarded" volume is a book-plate of the following character:—In a wood-engraving, ten inches by seven and three quarters, is a beautifully executed coat of arms, with helmet, crest, mantling, and supporter—all contained within an arch made of two branches joined near the middle, and springing from two quasi-Ionic pillars. The shield is quarterly: 1st and 4th, a gridiron; 2nd and 3rd contain per bend, sa. and barry of four (no tincture marked). At the four corners of the plate the latter shield, together with three others, are engraved, all inclining towards the centre, viz. two cocks addorsed sa.; two goose's heads addorsed arg.; and three roses in bend, sinister.

Over a helmet, furnished with most elaborate and flowing mantling, is a demi-nun as crest: and as the sole supporter, the figure of St. Laurence, with nimbus, holding in his right hand his emblem, the gridiron; and in his left, the palm of martyrdom. (The reason for this arrangement will appear when I state the particulars connected with the ownership of the book-plate.)

Beneath this engraving are four lines, which I transcribe exactly as they stand in the original:—

למחורים כל מחור

ΠΑΝΤΑ ΚΑΘΑΡΑ ΤΟΙΣ ΚΑΘΑΡΟΙΣ.

ΟΜΝΙΑ ΜΥΝΔΑ ΜΥΝΔΙΣ.

D. HECTOR POMER PRÆPOS. S. LAVR.

This motto is—in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin—the aphorism of St. Paul (Tit. i. 15): "Unto the pure all things are pure."

The last line of all explains the particulars of the shield and supporter above referred to. Dr. Hector Pomer (the friend of Erasmus), to whom the volumes now before me were a presentation copy, having been, if I recollect rightly, the last abbot of the church of St. Laurence at Nuremberg.

I beg to enclose a hasty tracing of this remarkable example of wood-engraving: the combined boldness and flowing ease of which may well stand comparison with the well-known "Death's head Coat of Arms," by Albert Dürer. In the right hand corner are the initials of the artist, with the date, thus: "R. A., 1525."

Can any of your readers inform me who this engraver was?

H. W. T.

THE REV. DAVID BLAIR, SCHOOL AUTHOR.—Would MR. TIMBS be good enough to inform a namesake of this once famous school author whether the Rev. David Blair was a real living writer, or only one of the shadowy aliases of the multifarious Sir Richard Phillips? Five-and-twenty years ago every schoolboy knew Blair's Universal Preceptor and Class Book.

D. BLAIR.

Melbourne.

CAMBRIDGE SIZARS.—Can any of your readers inform me what public schools have now, and had formerly (say 200 years since or more), the right of sending up sizars to Trinity College, Cambridge?

J. RICHARDSON.

CLEANING OLD SILVER COINS.—Is there anything equally or more efficacious in cleaning old silver coins than ammoniac or diluted cyanide of potassium? These are very serviceable in removing ordinary dirt and incrustations, but do not appreciably operate upon a certain black patination (if the word may be so applied), nor upon the reddish one, which seems to be oxydation, or some chalybeate, caused, perhaps, by the coins having been long buried in soil impregnated with iron.

Are there any chemical means of removing these without injury to the silver?

Both ammonia and cyanide of potassium undoubtedly act too much as mordants upon the silver.

I have seen copper coins completely silvered by being placed for a short time in those liquids after silver ones had been left and washed in them.

What is the best and safest detergent for old gold coins and for old brass or copper? C. D.

MAJOR COCKBURN: REPRODUCTION OF SCENERY. The following is from Spohr's Autobiography, vol. ii. p. 33:—

"In a second vehicle which accompanied us travelled an Englishman, who was possessed of an extraordinary skill in taking of fine views in a few minutes. For this purpose he made use of a machine, which transmitted the landscape on a reduced scale to the paper. . . . We saw the whole method of his procedure, which afforded great pleasure to the children. He showed us afterwards his collection of views, of which he had upwards of two hundred of Naples and its neighbourhood alone. He gave me his address: 'Major Cockburn, Woolwich, near London.'"

Who was this Cockburn, and what was his process?

A Major James Pattison Cockburn published, about 1822, several volumes of Swiss scenery from his own drawings, engraved by Heath, &c.; but there is no mention of any remarkable method of rapidly transferring scenery to paper. The several views are beautifully drawn, evidently with a true hand, and well engraved.

JUXTA TURRIM.

SIR WALTER COVERT.—His letter-book (1583-1627) forms MS. Harl. 703, the description of the contents occupying more than nine columns in the printed catalogue. He was long resident in Sussex, of which county he was sheriff, but eventually settled at Maidstone, being sworn a freeman of that town Oct. 31, 1627. When did he die?

S. Y. R.

THE FERMOR PEDIGREE.—Will any reader give me the clue to a good pedigree of this family? Whom did Sir Philip Hobby marry? Was it a Fermor? Burke's Extinct Families is very poor regarding the Hobys. Why do the Fermors bear as a second title "Baron Lempster"? The title was given in 1692: query, on what grounds? The Fermors once bore the name of Richards; the family estates appear to have been situated in the counties of Northampton, Bucks, Oxon, and Gloucester. This family married into that of Lord Vaux, who, I think, held Richards' Castle, near Ludlow. Any information will greatly oblige.

O. N.

Hereford.

ROBERT FISHER.—An Englishman of this name was an early correspondent of Erasmus. Who was he?

S. Y. R.

"FOREIGN."—The word "foreign" is used in a peculiar sense in certain local districts, and assumes the substantive character of a noun, as the Foreign of Kidderminster, Walsall, Tenbury, &c., distinguishing the town parish from the district without (foris).

Is this an archaic word locally preserved, or a simple conversion of the adjective into a substantive to supply a want in the language?

THOMAS E. WINNINGTON.

HENRY HAWTE was Rector of Great Cressingham, Norfolk, 1491; but seems to have vacated that benefice before his death, which occurred Jan. 30, 1507-8. Additional information touching this person, who is described as a man of considerable erudition, will be very acceptable.

S. Y. R.

LOCKING THE GATES OF CHURCHYARDS.—May I be allowed, as a rather overworked Londoner, to whom a frequent ramble in the pleasant country round the metropolis is almost a necessity of life, to protest against the practice of keeping the gates of churchyards locked. This evil practice is confined to the county of Surrey, and is, I suspect, done without the sanction of the clergy, but no doubt by parish clerks for the purpose of increasing their fees. Is this practice legal?

JUXTA TURRIM.

LOWCEY ARMS.—To whom were the arms granted, and by whom borne, which I find in both Edmondson and Berry's works on heraldry, but in no other, as belonging to the Lowceys family: Ar. a chevron, gu. between three hearts? Is there any family of the name now in existence?

L.

SIR JOHN MASON AND "KINGS' PICTURES."—In 1551, says Horace Walpole in his Anecdotes of Painting in England (3rd ed. 1783, vol. i. pp. 206, 207), Guillim Stretes was paid fifty marks for three great tables painted by him; two were portraits of King Edward VI., the third of the Earl of Surrey, which, at the time of Walpole's writing, was in the possession of the Duke of Norfolk. The pictures of Edward VI. were sent one to Sir Thomas Hoby, ambassador abroad, the other to Sir John Mason, English ambassador at the court of France, and first lay Chancellor of the University of Oxford.

In 1789, the picture given by Edward VI. to Charles I., by whom he was constituted governor of Chirk Castle, receiving the honour of knighthood Sept. 23, 1645. He assisted in the defence of Colchester, commanded at the battle of Worcester, and was implicated in the rising under Sir George Booth. He was repeatedly imprisoned; once at Montgomery, had to compound for his estate, and was eventually necessitated to sell the same. Soon after the Restoration he was appointed receiver of the counties of Essex, Hertford, and Middlesex. He was buried at Hertingfordbury, in the church of which parish there is or was the following inscription:—"Near this place lyes buried in one Grave, those Loyal and Worthy Gentlemen, Sir John Watts, and Captain Henry Hooker." I hope the date of the death of Sir John Watts can be supplied by some correspondent.

S. Y. R.

Queries with Answers.

MEDAL OF CLEMENTINA.—I should feel grateful if you could favour me with any information respecting the following medal in my possession. It is of silver, very massive, and the subject, in high relief, finely executed, represents a half-length portrait of a young and handsome woman, the hair in curls, falling over the back, is surmounted by a plain tiara, and confined behind by a string of pearls. The legend CLEMENTINA . M . BRITAN . FR . ET . HIB . REGINA. The reverse, a female figure, seated in a chariot, driving two horses; in the background several large buildings, a ship in full sail, and the sun sinking in the horizon. The inscription, Fortunam Causamque Sequor. In the exergue, Deceptis Custodibus, MDCCXIX. [MDCCXIX.]

I imagine this to have been struck in honour of the wife of the so-called Pretender, but should be glad to learn to what particular event it refers. The medalist's name is Otto . Hamepani . F.

R. H. HILLS.

[This medal was struck to commemorate the romantic adventure of Clementina, daughter of Prince James Sobieski of Poland, and wife of James Frederick Edward Stuart, only son of James II. When the Princess was travelling from Poland to Italy to meet the Pretender, to whom she was affianced, she was seized, by order of the Emperor, and confined in a convent at Innspruck. This step, it is said, was taken at the instance of the ministry of George I. Charles Wogan and Major Misset, two Irish gentlemen, gallantly determined the rescue of Clementina, whom they looked upon as their future queen. For this purpose it was arranged that Chateaufort, a gentleman-usher to the Princess, should escort into the convent a servant of Mrs. Misset, a smart and intelligent girl. At night the Princess disguised herself in the hood and cloak of the young female who was to play her part.

She was then led by Chateaufort to the gate of the convent, where he took leave of her with a voice sufficiently sonorous to apprise Wogan, who was lurking in the neighbourhood, that his charge was at hand. An engraving of the medal is given in the Gent. Mag. lviii. (ii.) 677. Consult also the following work: "Female Fortitude Exemplified, in an Impartial Narrative of the Seizure, Escape, and Marriage of the Princess Clementina Sobiesky, as it was particularly set down by Mr. Charles Wogan (formerly one of the Preston prisoners) who was chief manager in that whole affair. London: Printed in the Year 1722," 8vo, pp. 56.]

"CONFESSION OF ST. PATRICK."—Some five years ago there was published in Dublin by the late Ven. and very Rev. John Hamilton, D.D., Roman Catholic Archdeacon of Dublin, a pamphlet entitled The Confession of St. Patrick, said to have been translated from a MS. more than one thousand years old. Where is the MS., or can any one tell anything of it? S. REDMOND.

Liverpool.

[There are several manuscripts extant of the Confession of St. Patrick. One is contained in the Book of Armagh, assigned by some to the seventh, by others to the tenth century. There is another in the Cottonian library (Nero, E. i.) of the eleventh century. It has been published in the original language several times: by Sir James Ware, Opuscula Patricii, Lond. 1656; by the Bollandists, Acta Sanctorum, Mar. 17; by Dr. O'Connor, Scriptores Rerum Hibernicarum, vol. i.; and by Sir William Betham, in the Irish Antiquarian Researches, 8vo, 1827. It has also been recently translated into English by the Rev. Thomas Olden, A.B., with an Introduction and Notes, Dublin, 1853, 8vo.]

MARSHAL SOULT'S PICTURES.—Where can I find an account of the prices realised at the sale of the Marshal's pictures in May, 1852? I am anxious to know what were the prices given for Murillo's paintings, especially for the "Conception" of the Blessed Virgin. I have read somewhere that it realised 586,000 francs. Is this correct? Who was the happy purchaser?

J. DALTON.

Norwich.

[The following notice of Marshal Soult's sale appeared in the Gent. Mag. for July, 1852, p. 66: "One of the most memorable picture sales that has ever taken place has been that of the collection of the late Marshal Soult, which he formed chiefly from the spoils of the convents of Spain. The great struggle was for the Conception of the Virgin, by Murillo, for which the competitors were the Queen of Spain, the Emperor of Russia, the Marquess of Hertford, and the President. The last was determined not to allow it to depart from France, and it was knocked down to the Director of the Louvre for the immense sum of 586,000 francs, or 23,440*l*." Consult also Chambers's Book of Days, i. 658. In "N. & Q." 2nd S. III. 110, the picture is stated to have realised 24,612*l*.]

of horses," is a very unfortunate guess. It has, in its original meaning, nothing whatever to do with the shoeing of horses; nor is there any thing of Latin about it, except when Romanised by the termination us. The term "maréchal ferrand" for a horse shoer, is a comparatively late French compound. With the Frankish conquest of Gaul the word was introduced, and mareskalk became Frenchified into maréchal. By this time the office had altered as well as the name. The household servants of the long-haired Merovings became elevated into high officials, and took their place amongst the feudal nobility; and the humble horse-tender of Frankreich was translated into "Dominus Mareschalcus, prefectus equitum." Thus metamorphosed, the office and word were introduced into England at the Conquest.

The two words mare and scal were in common use amongst the Anglo-Saxons, as separate terms for mare and servant, but I have never met with them in combination. In Archbishop Alfric's vocabulary of the tenth century, the word for groom is hors-hyrde.

Now as to the derivation of mar. My friend MR. ELIOT HODGKIN scarcely displays his usual perspicacity, in deriving mar from the Celtic marsh. As the word mar, or mare, certainly existed in all the Teutonic tongues as an indigenous term, what possible reason could exist for borrowing from abroad? But let us look a little further. March, or mark, undoubtedly belongs to the Celtic as well as the Teutonic families with the sense of "horse." Pausanias, in his περίπλους, refers to the word ἵππων as signifying "horse" amongst the Galatians in the second century. Ménage says:—

"Le mot Teutonique mar, qui signifie cheval . . . est plus simple que marsh et mark, qui veulent dire la même chose; et qui sont des termes Celtiques. Je conclus que mar est un mot très ancien. Je crois même le reconnaître dans la langue Chinoise quoiqu'elle soit si différente de toutes les autres. Ma en Chinois signifie un cheval de même que mar en Celtique. Les Chinois auront retranché de ce dernier mot la lettre 'r' qui n'est point en usage dans leur langue."

The coincidence is curious, to say the least.

Let us now see whether the Sanskrit language, which has afforded a clue to the solution of so many philological difficulties, will assist us in this. The ordinary names for the horse in Sanskrit, though very numerous, give no indication of any affinity with mar. There is one term, however, which, though not much used, seems to throw some light on the subject. मरुद्, marudratha, which signifies literally "the chariot of the wind," is a poetical name for the horse, derived from मरुत्, marut, the wind. The swiftness of the horse, which is its most striking characteristic, would, in the metaphorical language of the early ages, naturally take the wind as the readiest illustration of the quality. The metaphor of one age becomes the matter-of-fact appellation in another; and I have little doubt that the radical in marut, the wind, is the same as that in mar—the horse.

J. A. P.

Sandyknowe, Wavertree.

HEAD OF CHARLES I.

(3rd S. viii. 263.)

I was personally acquainted with the plumber, at Eton, who was employed in opening the leaden coffin found in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, April 1, 1813. The report which I got from him may be worth recording in "N. & Q.," as a corroboration of Sir Henry Hallford's statement:—"When I opened the upper part of the lead coffin, there appeared another of wood inside. The wood was perished, and crumbled into dust when handled. On sweeping away the debris, the face of the corpse was distinctly visible, with features strongly resembling the visage of Charles I. in his portraits by Vandyke; and there were traces also of the pointed beard, as described in those pictures. The pictorial image, however, was very transient: for when the external air was let in upon it, the image gradually vanished like the passing picture in a diorama."—

"So fades the glimmering landscape on the sight,
And all the air a solemn stillness holds."

Such was the substance, as I remember after forty years, of the report of the fleeting likeness. He adumbrated separated from the ink; which Sir Henry Hallford's statement:—"it was loose, and without being held to view." Sir Henry himself for the Regent, the Duke of Cumberland as well as the body, was wrapped and perhaps this is all that is native in State; head was sewed on" literally, was perished in two might have been "when the head attachments which were loose." The sum visage of Charles centuries in strangely into IV., then R of his aliar

Brandt, his brother-in-law, and others. A brilliant assembly of noblemen and gentlemen was there at the time, many of whom, together with Rubens, had the honorary degree of Master of Arts conferred upon them. On a previous visit to Greenwich, Rubens was nearly drowned through the upsetting of the boat which he, his chaplain, and others were in. W. NOEL SAINSBURY.

SIR HENRY RÆBURN (3rd S. viii. 225, 278.)—I thank W. R. C. for his reply. Such a note would, in the History of Peebles, have met my wishes. I had no intention of condemning the omission, or supposed omission, of the Rev. John Hay's name; but simply of suggesting an opportunity of using an otherwise obscure personage as a convenient link between Peebles and so celebrated a Scottish artist as Sir Henry Ræburn.

W. R. C. is well informed on the subject in question; and I should, therefore, be glad if he could explain who (Count) James Leslie of Deanhaugh was, beyond the fact of his having been Lady Ræburn's first husband.

In a recent notice of Deanhaugh House, in connection with another eminent artist, the late D. Roberts (Illustrated London News, 1864), no mention is made of its former proprietor James Leslie. The latter had a daughter named Jacobina Leslie, who became the first wife of the last Mr. Vere of Stonebyres, in Lanarkshire,—a gentleman, I believe, of ancient lineage; but who lost his patrimonial estate, and ultimately died in comparative poverty.

(Count) James Leslie succeeded, I have heard, as heir-at-law of a nephew who was drowned at night off Leith, on his return from dining on board a ship of war; but I am not quite sure of the identification, as there was another family of Leslie also connected with Sir Henry Ræburn by the marriage of his wife's sister with a Mr. Inglis, the son of another Mr. Inglis, by one of the daughters of the celebrated Colonel Gardiner. The late Henry David Inglis ("Derwent Conway"), a well-known author, was the son of Inglis who married Lady Ræburn's sister.

W. R. C. will no doubt observe that my suggestion was intended to make way for some curious matter likely to be of use to other Scottish historians; as many families, owing to their having drifted out of their original possessions, would have been utterly forgotten but for their adventitious connection with the name of a man of genius.

I hope W. R. C. will do justice to my motives, as no one more than myself values and appreciates such an addition to a neglected branch of Scottish history as the work which has given occasion to these remarks. Sp.

P.S. Sir Henry Ræburn's elder son was named Peter, and I well remember the Latin inscription on his monument in the north-east angle of the West Kirk Cemetery, Edinburgh; but I am informed that the whole epitaph has been erased, thus consigning to oblivion the person to whom the stone was raised. I hope this is not the case, for the sake of the principle of preserving in their integrity what are generally considered to be reliable records.

THE REV. JOSEPH FLETCHER (3rd S. viii. 268.) The epitaph of the Rev. Joseph Fletcher, rector of Wilby, seems to require a little further explanation of its epigrammatic allusions. In the line—

"The first was True by name, Fletcher in deed," the word before printed "indeed" should evidently be made two, the meaning being that the former rector was True by name, but Fletcher was true in deed. Probably the name of the former rector had been Vere; if so, Vere in the third Latin line should have a capital. And do not the subsequent lines allude to some other "booke" published by Fletcher, under the title of The True Way, &c. ? J. G. N.

[A copy of this epitaph in Davy's Suffolk MSS. (Wilby) has Vere in the third line with a capital; but "indeed" as one word. We have not been able to trace any work by Fletcher entitled "The True Way," &c. Davy, however, has the following additional note:—"Under a gravestone, Joseph Fletcher, late Rector here: he died 1687, ætat. 60. The same stone covers the body of VERE, who was Rector there before him."—Ed.]

JOHN BAILEY (3rd S. viii. 266.)—The following story was told me about nine years since, by one whose name is of note. John Bailey, the celebrated coachman, had not long been dead. The squire of the parish where he lay buried was visited by a friend. It was Sunday; the two country gentlemen were going to church. Passing through the village churchyard, they stopped at the new tombstone. "Ah!" said the stranger-squire, "so Jack Bailey is dead;" and he read the epitaph some wag had composed. There had, as it happened, been coachmen bearing the names Newton and Locke; of the authors of the Principia and the Essay concerning Human Understanding, the squire was blissfully ignorant. He read the words measuredly:—

"Epitaphs there are on Newton, Locke, and Paley; Why should there not be one on poor John Bailey?"

"Well," said he, "I've heard of Newton, and I've heard of Locke; but who the d—— was Paley?"

Now my impression has always been that the narrator of this story laid the scene of it at North Aston, or, if not there, at Steeple Aston (the former is about two miles and a half south-east of Deddington, the latter about one mile and a half south of the former): but on inquiring of an enthusiastic antiquary in those parts, I am informed "that, after a diligent search in the churchyards both of Steeple Aston and North Aston, and conversations with ancient inhabitants consecratum diem ab ecclesia Romana, non esse celebrandum docent. Decretum hoc extat in ea juris pontifici parte, quam dicunt extravagantem."—Edition of 1610, p. 469, under date 1546.

W. C. B.

NAPOLEON BUONAPARTE AND THE NUMBER 666 (2nd S. i. 148, 276, 421; ix. 242.)—Some years ago I reprinted in "N. & Q." a handbill relating to this foolish craze. It was purchased by my father at the time of its publication in 1808, and is now in the collection of broadsides belonging to the Society of Antiquaries. That this absurd belief was widely spread I have long known; I was nevertheless surprised this morning by finding a letter seriously advocating it in a publication which has usually preserved its pages pure from the taint of the passing follies of the time.

As a specimen of educated superstition it is worth embalming in your pages:—

"Mr Urban,

"The following singular coincidences may furnish matter for reflection to the curious. It has been generally admitted, that the Roman Empire, after passing under seven different forms of government (or seven heads, was divided into ten kingdoms in EUROPE (the ten horns of DANIEL and JOHN); and that, notwithstanding the various changes Europe has undergone, the number of kingdoms was generally about ten.

"It is not a little surprising, that the Heads of the Family of Napoleon, who has effected such a change in the same Empire, are exactly seven, viz.:—

1. NAPOLEON.
2. JOSEPH, King of Italy.
3. LOUIS, King of Holland.
4. JEROME.
5. MURAT, Duke of Berg and Cleves.
6. CARDINAL FESCH.
7. BEAUHARNOIS, the adopted son of Napoleon.

"And also that the Members of the New Federation are just ten; viz.—

- | | |
|----------------|------------------|
| 1. Bavaria. | 6. Ysembourg. |
| 2. Wirtemberg. | 7. Hohenzollern. |
| 3. Baden. | 8. Aremburg. |
| 4. Darmstadt. | 9. Salm. |
| 5. Nassau. | 10. Leyen. |

"It is also remarkable that in the man's name NAPOLEON BUONAPARTE, there are precisely three times six letters:—

NAPOLE	ON BVON	APARTE.
6	6	6.	666.

"And in his name is contained the name given by JOHN to the King of the Locusts, who is called 'Apoleon,' or 'the Destroyer!' "

EDWARD PEACOCK.

Bottesford Manor, Brigg.

HEDDOCK (3rd S. viii. 205, 274.)—It is a curious fact that the red poppies that grow in cornfields in Ireland, are in the counties of Carlow, Wexford, Wicklow, and Waterford, called "Head-aches," and are particularly obnoxious to females, the more so to unmarried young women, who have a horror of touching, or of being touched by them. The flower is sometimes used with log-wood and copperas to dye wool and yarn black, but otherwise the weed is considered poisonous.

S. REDMOND.

THE FAMILY OF PINGO (3rd S. viii. 267.)—In Nichols's Literary Illustrations of the Eighteenth Century, vol. vi. p. 356, is a brief memoir with some letters of Benjamin Pingo, York Herald. It is there stated that he was the fifth son of Thomas Pingo, assistant engraver of the Mint, and that he had two brothers, Lewis and John, who were both eminent in their father's profession, as engravers to the Mint, and executed several excellent medals.

J. G. N.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

Men of the Time: a Biographical Dictionary of Eminent Living Characters of both Sexes. A New Edition, thoroughly revised, and brought down to the Present Time; with the Addition of a Classified Index. (Routledge.)

This is not only an enlarged, but also an improved edition of a work which is destined to take a permanent place among our standard books of reference. It is enlarged by the addition of some hundred of new memoirs, which have been prepared expressly for its pages; and it is improved by the correction of those errors inseparable from all the earlier editions of works of this character, and by the omission of all expressions of opinion: and now claims to furnish (and does what it professes to do) an authentic record of the leading facts in the lives of some two thousand five hundred individuals, who have in one way or another won for themselves the name of public characters.

A History of England during the Reign of George the Third. By the Right Hon. William Massey. Second Edition, revised and corrected. In Four Volumes. Vol. I. 1745—1770. (Longman.)

In the preparation of this History of George the Third, Mr. Massey had the advantage of using the voluminous materials for the Life of that monarch, which were collected with the sanction of the Royal Family, and with the assistance of many distinguished persons, by the late Mr. Commissioner Locker of Greenwich Hospital; and Lord Bolton also permitted him to refer to the extensive correspondence of his grandfather, the first peer who was in confidential communication with Mr. Pitt during the earlier years of his administration. The information derived from these, and other private sources, furnished Mr. Massey with many new, curious, and interesting particulars respecting the public transactions and private history of this eventful period. Mr. Massey has told the story of those times in a graceful and very pleasing manner; and this new, revised, and cheaper edition of his book will prove, we doubt not, acceptable to a large class of readers.

The Catechist's Manual. With an Introduction by Samuel, Lord Bishop of Oxford. (Oxford: J. H. & J. Parker.)

A very carefully composed manual of catechetical matter, exactly following the order of the Church Catechism, of which it forms a full explanation. The Bishop praises it highly for the excellence of its illustrations, its judicious selection of Scripture proofs, and its emphatic statement of dogmatic truth; which latter characteristic is especially valuable at a time when too many "dissolve truth into a mist, revelation into a mythology, and God into a mere pervading unseen man."

Post-Medieval Preachers: some Account of the most celebrated Preachers of the Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and Seventeenth Centuries, with Outlines of their Sermons, and Specimens of their Style. By S. Baring-Gould, M.A. (Livingtons.)

The present volume is fairly described by its author as possessing a theological, biographical, and bibliographical interest. It brings before the reader a class of preachers remarkable for their originality, depth, and spirituality; but who are scarcely known, even by name, to the majority of theological students. The biographical sketches of these preachers, the bibliography of their works, and the specimens of their sermons, form — with the author's introductory Essay on Sermons, Preachers, &c. — an interesting volume; which deserves a place in the library by the side of Neale's Medieval Preachers and Haueis' Sketches of the Reformation.

The County Families of the United Kingdom, or Royal Manual of the Titled and Untitled Aristocracy of Great Britain and Ireland: containing a brief Notice of the Descent, Birth, Marriage, Education, and Appointments of each Person, his Her Apparent or Presumptive; as also a Record of the Offices which he has hitherto held, together with his Town Address and County Residence. Third Edition, greatly enlarged. By Edward Walford, M.A., late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford, &c. (Hardwicke.)

We are among those who trust the days are far distant in which "fraternity and equality" shall reign throughout the land; and until those unhappy times arrive, such books as Mr. Walford's County Families will be called for and valued. Mr. Walford has obviously taken great pains to secure for the present edition that accuracy which gives value to works of this character; and judging from the tests to which we have subjected it, we think we may promise that those who are in search of information, respecting what Mr. Walford happily terms the "Titled and Untitled Aristocracy of England," will not search for it in vain when they turn to his County Families.

Mr. Murray's announcements for the forthcoming Season give promise of many works of great interest. Among which we would particularly notice—"The Correspondence of George the Third with Lord North, from 1769 to 1782," edited by Mr. Donne; "An Expedition to the Zambesi and its Tributaries, and the Discovery of Lakes Shirwa and Nyassa, 1858—1864," by David and Charles Livingstone; "The Harvest of the Sea, a Contribution to the Natural and Economic History of the British Food Fishes," by James G. Bertram; "Memoir of the Life of the late Sir Charles Barry, R.A.," by his son, Dr. Alfred Barry, D.D.; "History of the Jewish Church," Part II. Samuel to the Captivity, by the Dean of Westminster; "Lives of Boulton and Watt (principally from the Original Soho MSS.), comprising a History of the Invention and Introduction of the Steam Engine," by Samuel Smiles; "Notes on the Battle of Waterloo," by the late Gen. Kennedy, K.C.B., with a brief Memoir of his Life and Services; "A History of Architecture in all Countries—from the Earliest Times to the Present Day," based on "The Handbook of Architecture," revised, augmented, and re-arranged, by James Fergusson, F.R.S.; "The Agamemnon of Æschylus and Bacchanals of Euripides," together with passages from the lyric and later Poets of Greece, translated by the Very Rev. Dean Milman; "Memoirs illustrative of the Art of Glass Painting," by the late Charles Winston; "Chinese Miscellanies," by Sir John Francis Davis; "Peking and the Pekingese, during the First Year of the British Embassy at Peking," by D. F. Rennie, M.D.; and "Studies of the Music of Many Nations," by Henry F. Chorley.

Messrs. Macmillan—in addition to many new editions of successful books, such as Palgrave's "Journey through Central and Eastern Arabia;" "Lady Duff Gordon's" "Letters from Egypt;" Mr. Bryce's "Holy Roman Empire," &c.—announce for the coming season "An Attempt to ascertain the State of Chaucer's Works as they were left at his Death," by Henry Bradshaw; "Popular Epics of the Middle Ages," by Mr. Ludlow; "Spiritual Philosophy founded on the teaching of the late Samuel Taylor Coleridge, by the late J. H. Green, with a Memoir of the Author's Life," by John Simon; "A Defence of Fundamental Truth, being a Review of Mill's Philosophy," by Dr. Mc Cosh; many important Theological Works; new editions of Standard Authors; new Poems, and new Works of Fiction.

DEATH OF DR. RICHARDSON.—We record with great regret the death of a very early contributor to "N. & Q." Dr. Charles Richardson, the author of the well-known New Dictionary of the English Language—a work which will always preserve his memory among English philologists. Dr. Richardson, who died at Feltham on Friday, the 6th instant, had reached the advanced age of ninety-one.

NATIONAL PORTRAIT EXHIBITION IN 1866.—The particulars of the Arrangements approved for this interesting Exhibition, which will be opened early in April next, have been printed. We propose calling the special attention of our readers to the subject next week.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books, to be sent direct to the gentlemen by whom they are required, whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—

FABRICIUS (J. A.), Salutaris Lex Evangelii THE ORN. PER DIVINAM GRATIAM EXORDIUM, &c. Hamb. 1731.
JONES (THOS.), Notes and Additions to the Catalogue of Tracts for and Against Popery, &c. 3 vols. Chesham Society, 1859—1864.
KIMLING (J. R.), De PENA IONIS IN TABULARUM SACRARUM VERSIONES A ROMANIS CONSTITUTÆ, &c. [Lipsia]. 1769.
Wanted by Rev. Allen Irvine, Kilbride, Bery.

AKERMAN'S NUMISMATIC MANUAL.
PERINGTON'S WORKS, &c. Vol. III. 1784.
PIETY PROMOTED, by Josiah Foster, 12mo. 1688.
R. WARR'S DISCOURSE AGAINST TYTHES-STRALES, &c. 1708.
G. FOR'S EPISTLES, fol. 1628.
MARGARET FELL'S WORKS. A brief Collection of remarkable Passages, &c., 8vo. 1710.
A CATALOGUE OF THE LORDS, KNIGHTS, AND GENTLEMEN WHO HAVE COMPOUNDED FOR THEIR ESTATES, 8vo. 1632.
Wanted by Mr. Henry T. Wake, Cockermouth.

GOUGH'S CITATIONS FROM THE OLD TESTAMENT IN THE NEW.
Wanted by Rev. W. T. Humphrey, Stockwith Farmhouse, Gainsboro'.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL REVIEW. Nos. 1, 2, 3.
ARCHÆOLOGIA. Vol. XXXVII. Part II.
Wanted by Mr. Edward Peacock, Bottenford Manor, Brigg.

SURREY ARCHÆOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S TRANSACTIONS. Vol. I. Part II. and vol. II. Part I.
Wanted by Mr. Francis, "Athenæum" Office, 20, Wellington Street, London, W.C.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE (New Series), from 1855 to 1864.
Wanted by Mr. Benjamin Kington, 8, Sutherland Square, Waltham, London.

Notices to Correspondents.

WASHINGTON NOT AN INFIDEL IN OUR NEXT.

W. B. J. Some interesting articles on the arms of the city of Glasgow appeared in our 2nd S. I. 426; II. 13, 32.

WALTER SHRYVE. The query respecting the authorship of Poems on Several Occasions, 1723, was inserted in our 1st S. viii. 228. Since that time a copy of this work has turned up in the Catalogue of the British Museum, which gives no clue to the writer.

JOHN BARBER, JUN. "Hibbert's change" has been explained in "N. & Q." 1st S. vii. 426; 2nd S. I. 479; II. 47; x. 154, 214.

ERRATUM.—2nd S. viii. p. 279, col. II. line 7, for "vol. V." read "vol. IV."

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1865.

CONTENTS.—N^o 199.

National Portrait Exhibition, 321.

NOTES:—Archbishop Tenison's Library, 322—Folk Lore: Lincolnshire Superstitions—Australian Aboriginal Folk Lore—Yorkshire Household Riddles—Songs of Birds—Curious Custom in Ireland, 324—De Quincey on Shakespeare, 325—Notes on Fly-leaves, 326—Longevity, 327—The Prophet Isaiah on North and South—Epigram on a Block of Wenham Ice—Bees—An Abbot's Crosier, or Pastoral Staff, how carried, &c., 328.

QUERIES:—The Scottish Covenanters and Cardinal Richelieu, 330—Anonymous Poems—The Word "Being"—"Consilium quorundam Episcoporum," &c.—"Catullus," &c.—Joseph Cottle—Courtenay Barony—James Cropper—The Duke of Cumberland—Col. Godfrey Green—Hatched-faced—Elizabeth Heyrick—John Hoker—Isabella of Hainault—Jeer: Gear—St. Jerome's "Ciceronian"—The Leicester Badge—Military Queries—Peacocks' Feathers—Poyle Arms—George Quinton—Quotations—Register of Churching of Women—Rottenburg Family—The Stratford Bust of Shakespeare—The Name Stutting—The Crescent of St. Sophia, &c., 330.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Abyssum: a Kind of Herb—Colonel O'Kelly's Parrot—"A Paraphrase on St. Paul's Epistles"—The Murrain—Rev. Henry Rutter—Ancient Encaustic Tiles—Turner's Birthday, 334.

REPLIES:—Washington not an Infidel, 336—Marshal Soult and the Battle of Toulouse, 340—Yeoman, ib.—Wasps, 341—"Whom the Gods love die young"—John Pym, the Reformer—"The Book of Enoch"—Porcelain Manufactory at Leith or Edinburgh—Benedict—"O dear me!"—Braose Family—Creaking Soles—Thomas Creech—Fly-leaves, 342.

Notes on Books, &c.

NATIONAL PORTRAIT EXHIBITION.

It is with unfeigned satisfaction that we hear that the arrangements have at length been determined upon for carrying out the National Portrait Exhibition suggested by Lord Derby. What that exhibition is proposed to be cannot be better described than in his Lordship's own words:—

"I have long thought that a National Portrait Exhibition, chronologically arranged, might not only possess great historical interest by bringing together portraits of all the most eminent contemporaries of their respective eras, but might also serve to illustrate the progress and condition, at various periods, of British Art. My idea therefore would be to admit either portraits of eminent men, though by inferior or unknown artists, or portraits by eminent artists, though of obscure or unknown individuals. I have, of course, no means of knowing, or estimating, the number of such portraits which may exist in the country; but I am persuaded that, exclusive of the large collections in many great houses, there are very many scattered about by ones and twos and threes in private families, the owners of which, though they could not be persuaded to part with them, would willingly spare them for a few months for a public object.

"The question of one, two, or three exhibitions in consecutive years, would, I apprehend, be mainly decided by the result of future inquiries as to the probable number of pictures which could be obtained, and the space which could be found for their exhibition. But whether the period over which each exhibition (if more than one) should range, be longer or shorter, the point on which I should set the greatest value, in an historical, if not in an artistic point of view, would be the strict maintenance of the chronological series. I shall be very happy if any suggestion of mine should lead the Committee of Council to take up seriously, and carry out, with such alterations of detail as experience might suggest, a scheme which I think could hardly fail of being generally interesting: and I should have much pleasure in placing temporarily at their disposal any portraits from my collection at Knowsley which they might think suitable for their purpose."

It is difficult to imagine any Exhibition which would be more generally popular; it is impossible there could be one of greater interest to the readers of this Journal.

When Addison tells us that "A reader seldom peruses a book with pleasure until he knows whether the writer of it be a black or a fair man, of a mild or choleric disposition," &c., he only describes one phase of that natural curiosity—that wish felt by every reader of history, that he could see, in their habits as they lived, not only the chief actors in the stirring scenes which he is contemplating, but—

"These and a thousand more of doubtful fame,
To whom old Fable gives a lasting name."

This wish will be gratified to a great extent by the proposed Exhibition, which will be opened in April next, at South Kensington, in the spacious brick building used for the Refreshment Rooms in the International Exhibition of 1862, fitted up especially for the purpose.

The following Regulations define more precisely the special objects of the Exhibition:—

"It will comprise the portraits of persons of every class who have in any way attained eminence or distinction in England, from the date of the earliest authentic portraits to the present time; but will not include the portraits of living persons, or portraits of a miniature character.

"In regard to art, the works of inferior painters representing distinguished persons will be admitted; while the acknowledged works of eminent artists will be received, though the portrait is unknown, or does not represent a distinguished person.

"The portraits of foreigners who have attained eminence or distinction in England will also be included, with portraits by foreign artists which represent persons so distinguished."

That the words—"every class who have in any way attained eminence or distinction in England"—will be widely interpreted, we cannot doubt: and in a Gallery of Portraits, which shall illustrate our history, Fenton must have his place as well as Buckingham; and Joan of France and English Moll must figure together on the walls of the National Portrait Exhibition, as they do in the verses of Butler and Swift.

That is to say, if authentic portraits of such "worthies" are to be found? And this brings us to the more particular object of the present article, namely, to urge upon the readers of "N. & Q." what good service they will be rendering to this great national object by pointing out, either through our columns, or directly to the Secretary to the Exhibition, the existence of any portraits of great historical interest, comparatively unknown, which may exist in their respective neighbourhoods. Inquiries after such portraits have been frequently made in these pages, and often with the best results. Lord Derby has well remarked, that there are many such portraits as it is now desired to collect together at South Kensington, "scattered about by ones and twos and threes in private families, the owners of which, though they could not be persuaded to part with them, would willingly spare them for a few months for a public object." Many such must be known to the numerous readers of "N. & Q." scattered throughout the country. We venture to hope that, by their assistance, they will soon be known to the Committee of the NATIONAL PORTRAIT EXHIBITION.

We propose to return to this subject very shortly.

Since the foregoing observations have been in type, we have received the following communication upon the subject:—

"To the Editor of NOTES AND QUERIES.

"Science and Art Department, London, W.
17th day of October, 1865.

"SIR,

"The Lords of the Committee of Council on Education have directed that a copy of the announcement of the proposed National Portrait Exhibition shall be forwarded for publication in your Journal, and have desired me to request that you will invite the attention of your readers to it, as being a class of persons especially likely to have within their knowledge the existence of portraits not generally known, or mentioned in publications generally accessible; and of which portraits they might perhaps, at your instigation, be willing to send notice to Notes and Queries.

"My Lords feel that considerable public advantages would be likely to be conferred on the Exhibition, if the readers of Notes and Queries would send to that publication the notices above alluded to, and will be obliged for your assistance in promoting this object.

"I have the honour to be, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"G. F. DUNCOMBE,

"For the Secretary."

We need scarcely add, after what we have already written, that we shall be glad that "N. & Q." should be used to promote in every way the success of the NATIONAL PORTRAIT EXHIBITION.

Notes.

ARCHBISHOP TENISON'S LIBRARY.

Excepting a brief paragraph in William Oldys's "Account of London Libraries," and an editorial foot-note thereunder, I am not aware that anything has appeared in "N. & Q." respecting TENISON'S LIBRARY. A short account is contained in Mr. Edwards's very valuable work, Memoirs of Libraries (vol. i. p. 761); but I find inaccuracies in both these notices.

As the library itself has now ceased to exist, a short historical and bibliographical memoir will probably be acceptable to your readers. For the facts I am indebted to the printed Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Public Libraries, 1840 (p. 64, ante et seq.); to "An Act for confirming a Scheme of the Charity Commissioners for the Administration of Archbishop Tenison's Charity," &c. (23 & 24 Vict.); to the printed Catalogues of the books and manuscripts in the "Valuable Library formed by Archbishop Tenison," sold by auction by Messrs. Sotheby and Wilkinson, in 1861; and also personally to the vestry clerk of the parish of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields; and to Richard Sims, Esq., of the British Museum.

Without farther special reference to my authorities, or to the inaccuracies in the accounts of Oldys or Edwards, I now proceed to the origin, character, history, and dispersion, of this valuable literary collection.

In the year 1685, Dr. Tenison, then Vicar of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, communicated to the parish vestry his desire to found, at "his own costs and charges," a school for educating the young, and a library to furnish reading for his adult parishioners. With the full concurrence of the vestry, but uncontrolled, he erected the "fabrick" in Castle Street, near St. Martin's Lane, to contain the school and library; placing in the latter about 3000 volumes of printed books, more than seventy manuscripts, and furniture convenient for the establishment. To provide salaries for schoolmaster and librarian, &c., he gave the munificent sum of 1000*l.*; and, for the government of the foundation prepared, either by personal direction, or with his own hand, a document called "Orders and Constitutions" of the founder. The management was vested in trustees: comprising the vicar, churchwardens, and certain inhabitants. According to the "Orders and Constitutions," the "bookes" were to be "for publick use;" but especially for the use of "the vicar and lecturer of the said parish." The only express provision for the admission of non-parishioners was in favour of the king's chaplains in ordinary. One of the reasons stated for the foundation was, "that there is not in the said precinct (as in London) any one shop of a stationer fully furnished with bookes of various learning;" &c.

At the time of the foundation, the parish of St. Martin comprehended all the district now occupied by the parishes of St. Martin, St. Anne, St. James, and St. George, Westminster; and the public right of admission to the library never extended beyond, but always included, all the inhabitants of the original district, with the exception above referred to. No others could be admitted except by courtesy.

The library contained a considerable number of Latin, and some Greek classics; a very valuable collection of versions of the Holy Scriptures, Liturgies, &c.; volumes of Sermons; theology, but not in so large a proportion as might have been expected; and, what is remarkable considering the religious distractions of that period, scarcely anything controversial except on Quakerism and the Act, the printed books were sold by auction by Messrs. Sotheby and Wilkinson on the 3rd June, and five following days, 1861, in 1608 Lots, realising 1410*l.*; and the manuscripts on the 1st of July in the same year, in 98 Lots, producing 1465*l.*

It will be satisfactory, to those not acquainted with the fact, to know that some of the most "desirable" of the printed books, amounting to one-tenth in value of the whole, are now in the British Museum; and that the most important manuscripts, comprising nearly two-thirds in value of the whole, are also in the same national collection.

The latter include the autograph Note-book of the great Lord Bacon; the Fortunatus of the tenth or eleventh century, on vellum; Trevisa's translation of Higden's Polychronicon, dated 1387, on vellum; sixty-one Poems, by King James I., with corrections in his own handwriting—and title, index, and portions of the book in the autograph of Charles I. while Prince of Wales; and the celebrated Prudentii Poeta of the tenth century—one of the most beautiful manuscripts in existence. The Psalterium cum Precibus was knocked down at 200*l.* for Mr. Tite, who returned it on account of its wanting a leaf. It was resold by the same auctioneers in May, 1862, and purchased for the British Museum for 110*l.* 11*s.*

My apology for the length of this, is a desire to complete in one "note" a brief memoir of Archbishop Tenison's library.

W. LEE.

FOLK LORE.

LINCOLNSHIRE SUPERSTITIONS.—There was a little work published at Horncastle in 1861, entitled the Lay of the Clock and other Poems, written, I believe, by a Lincolnshire carpenter of the name of Brown, and not altogether deficient in poetical merit. The Lay of the Clock contains several allusions to customs and beliefs, some of them all but universally entertained by the peasantry in the country districts, and others less popular. Some of the customs alluded to in these verses are perhaps peculiar to the county of Lincoln, as, for example, that of ringing the Pancake Bell on the morning of Shrove Tuesday, which appears to be a general holiday. The wicken-tree, or mountain ash, is represented as having the power of deterring evil spirits from where it grows; and watching the church-porch on St. Mark's Eve is alluded to as a time-honoured custom, now but occasionally observed. One passage reads thus:—

"How bitterly sighed the motherly dame
As she told her thrifty man,
That the last week's batch of her own made bread
Was ropy,—her tears fast ran;

It was plain to him that some evil sprite
Had power; these words he said,
As on bended knees while saying his prayers,
'Why did'nt you gibbet the bread?'"

Sometimes, owing to a bad harvest time, and the premature garnering of the corn before the ears have had time to harden, the bread when baked becomes fibrous or ropy. It is usual with the good dame, when such is the case, to run a stick through a loaf of it, and to suspend it in a cupboard to prevent the repetition of "ropy" bread in future bakings. I should like to know whether similar superstitions to these last prevail elsewhere.

A. H. K. C. L.

AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINAL FOLK-LORE.—The following extract from a very able and exhaustive lecture on the aboriginal tribes of Australia, recently delivered in Melbourne by a gentleman who knows them thoroughly, having lived for nearly a lifetime in the remote districts—Mr. Gideon S. Lang—settles a much-disputed point as to the possession of innate religious ideas by savage races:—

"It has been much disputed whether the aborigines, in their natural state, have any idea of a Supreme Being or a future existence. My belief is that they have not. All their religion—if religion it may be called—consists of a fear of evil spirits, and a belief in witchcraft. The notion that, after death, they come back whitefellows, is obviously derived from the whites themselves, as they could have no such idea before they knew that such beings as white men existed. The missionaries have fallen into error through their defective knowledge of the native language, and still more from the habitual cunning of the blacks, who have no idea of the truth for truth's sake, and who, if they expect to gain by it, will find out what their questioner wishes to be told, and answer accordingly. My brother and I, so soon as we had acquired sufficient knowledge of the dialect of the Glenelg blacks, carefully examined Bully, whom I have already mentioned, as, being a man of great intelligence and influence, he was certain to have been initiated into their mysteries, if they had any. We had much difficulty, at first, in making him understand that we wished to know whether he would be able to walk about after his body was dead, and without a body. When he understood the question, he assented at once, saying, 'Oh, yes; we walk all about.' 'Well,' said I, 'if so, how is it that we do not see any of the dead blacks walking about?' 'Oh,' he replied, 'they all go across the rummut,' pointing to the heavy surf of the Southern ocean, which, in their idea, is the end of the world. I asked, 'What could he do there, where there was no land. How could he hunt; he could not catch the sea-birds or fish?' He seemed puzzled at this, but after some hesitation he said, 'Oh, but we come back again!' This was a close approach to the theory of coming back white men, and we knew that if Bully got the slightest hint he would deliberately adopt this doctrine. 'What do the black spirits live upon, when they come back?' queried my brother. 'Oh, beef and mutton,' was the confident response of Bully. 'Ah, you villain,' I said; 'and what did the spirits live upon before the white men came?' Here, finding that he was caught, Bully broke out into a hearty laugh, and, in his own peculiar style, he declared that this talk was all nonsense; that when the blackfellows died, there was an end of them, the same as with dogs and kangaroos. He then admitted that he had never heard anything about what we call a Supreme Being, or a future state, mentioned among the tribes. But, had he said 'kangaroo and 'possum,' instead of 'beef and mutton,' as the food of the black spirits, I should have had no means of detecting the falsehood of his statement any more than others."

D. BLAIR.

Melbourne.

YORKSHIRE HOUSEHOLD RIDDLES.—The following have been all orally collected in an out-lying manufacturing hamlet in the West Riding; many of them from people who are unable to read, or, at all events, unable to read with any comfort:—

1. "As plump as an apple,
As round as a cup,
Not all t' king's horses
Could draw it up."
Ans. A well.
2. "Goes up white, and comes down yellow?"
Ans. An egg.
3. "As I were going over London Brig,
I saw a man ste-aling pots,
And the pots was a' his own."
Ans. He was putting ste-als (handles) to the pots.
4. "As I were going over London Brig,
I met a load of hay,
I shot wi' my pistol,
And all flew away."
Ans. A bird.
5. "As I were going over London Brig,
I met a load of soldiers:
Some in ickets, some in ackets,
Some in red and yellow jackets.
What were they?"
Ans. A swarm of wasps.
6. "As I were going over London Brig,
I pipp't into a winder,
And I saw four-and-twenty ladies,
Dancing on a cinder."
Ans. Sparks.
7. "Black and breet (bright),
Runs without feet."
Ans. An iron.
8. "A house full, a hoile (coal-hole) full,
Ya' canna' fetch a bowl full."
Ans. Reek (smoke).
9. "All round t' house,
All round t' house,
And it (in the) cupboard."
Ans. A mouse.
10. "Four-and-twenty white beasts,
And t' red one licks them all."
Ans. The teeth and the tongue.

S. BARING-GOULD.

SONGS OF BIRDS.—

"Avis aux chasseurs qui . . . n'ont pas de montre.
"On a dressé une horloge en notant les heures de réveil et le chant de certains oiseaux.
"Après le rossignol, qui chante presque toute la nuit, c'est le pinson, le plus matinal des oiseaux, qui donne le signal. Son chant, devant l'aurore, se fait entendre de une heure et demie à deux heures du matin.

"De deux heures à deux heures et demie, la fauvette à tête noire s'éveille et fait entendre son chant, qui rivaliserait avec celui du rossignol, s'il n'était pas si court.

"De deux heures et demie à trois heures, la caille, amie des débiteurs malheureux, semble, par son cri : Paye les dettes ! Paye les dettes ! les avertir de ne pas se laisser surprendre par le lever du soleil.

"De trois heures à trois heures et demie, la fauvette à ventre rouge fait entendre ses trilles mélodieux.

"De trois heures et demie à quatre heures, on entend le merle noir, le moqueur de nos contrées, qui apprend si bien tous les airs, que M. Dureau de la Malle avait fait chanter la Marseillaise à tous les merles d'un canton en donnant la volée à un merle à qui il l'avait serinée et qui l'apprit aux autres.

"De quatre heures et demie à cinq heures, la mésange à tête noire fait grincer son chant agaçant.

"De cinq heures à cinq heures et demie s'éveille et se met à pépier le moineau franc, ce gamin de Paris aillé, gourmand, paresseux, tapageur, mais hardi, spirituel et amusant dans son effronterie.

"N'est-il pas charmant d'avoir une horloge qui chante les heures au chasseur matinal ?"

The above appeared in La France of August 28. I am not sufficiently acquainted with our birds to know whether they sung at the same times as their fellows in France, nor with those of France to know whether the above is natural history or paragraph-making. The latter seems not unlikely from the attempt to set off facts with pleasantry.

FITZHOPKINS.

Paris.

CURIOUS CUSTOM IN IRELAND.—The following curious custom I have found to prevail in all parts of Ireland, and amongst every class of people. When a sudden shower of rain comes on, either in town or country, men who are not prepared with umbrellas invariably turn their hats—that is, the part usually worn in front is turned to the back. I never could learn the why or wherefore of this singular custom. What is its origin, or is it known elsewhere?

S. REDMOND.

Liverpool.

DE QUINCEY ON SHAKSPEARE.

"We know also, from the just criticism pronounced upon the character and diction of Caliban by one of Charles's confidential counsellors, Lord Falkland, that the king's admiration of Shakspeare had impressed a determination upon the court reading." (De Quincey, vol. xv. Edinb. 1803, p. 15.)

The criticism here alluded to will be found in the following extracts. It will, however, appear from these authorities that the accomplished king was equalled, if not anticipated, by his contemporaries in the admiration of Shakspeare; and the fact is further exemplified which De Quincey here proposes to establish, namely, that there was from the earliest stage an uninterrupted succession of Shakspearean enthusiasts.

"It was a tradition, it seems, that Lord Falkland, Lord C. J. Vaughan, and Mr. Selden, concurred in observing, that Shakespeare had not only found out a new character in his Caliban, but had also devised and adopted a new manner of language for that character. What they meant by it, without doubt, was, that Shakespeare gave his language a certain grotesque air of the savage and antique; which it certainly has. But Dr. Bentley took this, of a new language, literally; for, speaking of a phrase in Milton, which he supposed altogether absurd and unmeaning, he says, 'Satan had not the privilege, as Caliban in Shakespeare, to use new phrase and diction unknown to all others'—and again, 'to practise distances is still a Caliban style.' (Note on Milton's Paradise Lost, l. iv. v. 945.) But I know of no such Caliban style in Shakespeare, that hath new phrase and diction unknown to all others. (Warburton.)

"The consideration of this [superiority to the rest of poets] made Mr. Hales of Eton* say, that there was no subject of which any poet ever writ, but he would produce it much better done in Shakespeare; and however others are now generally preferred before him, yet the age wherein he lived, which had contemporaries with him, Fletcher and Jonson, never equalled them to him in their esteem: and in the last king's court, when Ben's reputation was at highest, Sir John Suckling, and with him the greater part of the courtiers, set our Shakespeare far above him."—Dryden's Essay on Dramatic Poetry.

BIBLIOTHECAR. CHETHAM.

NOTES ON FLY LEAVES.

If the following notes, which are written on the fly leaves of Benoit's Chronique des Ducs de Normandie, Harl. MS. 1717, have not already been printed, they may perhaps be worth your notice. I do not feel myself competent to pronounce to what period the caligraphy should be ascribed; but the hand is rather careless, and not very legible at times. I should be glad to know whether

* The learned John Hales of Eton, whom Wood calls a walking library, and Clarendon pronounces the least man and greatest scholar of his time. Gildon tells the anecdote to which Dryden seems to allude, in an essay addressed to Dryden himself on the vindication of Shakespeare, and he quotes our author as his authority. "The matter of fact, if my memory fail me not, was this: Mr. Hales of Eton affirmed that he would show all the poets of antiquity out-done by Shakespeare, in all the topics and common places made use of in poetry. The enemies of Shakespeare would by no means yield him so much excellence; so that it came to a resolution of a trial of skill upon that subject. The place agreed on for the dispute was Mr. Hales's chamber at Eton. A great many books were sent down by the enemies of this poet; and on the appointed day, my Lord Falkland, Sir John Suckling, and all the persons of quality that had wit and learning, and interested themselves in the quarrel, met there; and upon a thorough disquisition of the point, the judges, chosen by agreement out of this learned and ingenious assembly, unanimously gave the preference to Shakespeare; and the Greek and Roman poets were adjudged to veil at least their glory in that to the English hero."—Gildon's Essays. (Tate, in the Preface to the Loyal General, and Rowe, in his Life of Shakespeare, quote the same anecdote. Dryden's Works by Scott, vol. i. p. 351.)

the prediction be a quotation, and if so, whence is taken:—

"Quen y^e koklei [?] y^e north bygge his nest
And burks his brydds and bowns thaym to flye,
Then fortune his frend will he 3ats upe kest
And let ryght haf her fre entre.
Then y^e mone shall ryse i y^e north west
In a clowde as blak as y^e bill of a crowe.
Then our lyon shall be noyset y^e boldist and best
Y^e ever was in Bretan syn Arthur days.
Then a dredfull dragon shall dresse owt of her dei ffor to helpe y^e lyon w^t all her myght.
A bull and a bastarde spers shall spende
A bydyng w^t y^e bore to do rethir for ye ryght.
An egull and an Antilope full boldly shall byde,
A brydelt hors and a bere w^t brime [?] full brygh
At Sondyforth for sothe opon y^e southe side
A prowde prynce i y^e preys full lordly shall lyt
Then y^e dredfull day of destyny shall dryt to nyght,
And make mony wyf and mayden i mornynge brought;
ffor thay shall mete i y^e mornynge w^t mony f
bryght,
Bytwye Seton and y^e sey sorow shall be wrought.
W^t bolde burnys i bushment y^e batell shall mete
Y^e pruddest pnce i all y^e prese w^t batle has boght
Shall gar wyfes and maydens y^e i bower dwell
Be cast in grete car and i mournynge be brought.
Then y^e fox and y^e filmart i hande shall be tane,
And layd full low to owr lyon y^e till abide;
Both ye pycart and y^e pye shall be seruet of y^e same
And all y^e fox frendes shall fall of thayr pde.
Then troy vntrewe shall tremball on y^e day, ffor ferde of y^e dede moñ quen yay her hyme speke
All y^e townes of Kent shall caste hyme y^e key,
Y^e bushement of Brykkeley hillis away shall y breke.
Then owr Saxons shall chose thayme a lord
Y^e quycher shall halde all ower pties vnder;
And he y^e is dede shall ryse and make home acorde,
And y^e will be sen and full grete wondyr;
What mone y^e is dede and byriet i syght
Shall rise agayne and lyfe in lond,
In comfortynge of y^e mone and y^e knyght
Y^e fortune has chosen to hir husband.
Quen all vermyns and wede away is wasted,
And euery sede in her secon is sette i her kynde,
Then trewth shall ryse and falsed shall be chased,
Yen rht owr gentill Justise all wrongs shall amen
Then grife [?] and godness shall dwell vs among
In every place plenty by lond and by sey.
The spowshade of Crist w^t jocand song Shall kept in her kynde thurgh hehr [?] of termte [?]
Then y^e sone and y^e mowne shall ahyne full bryght
Y^e mony long day full derke has ben,
And kepe her cours by kynde bouth day and nyght
W^t myrthes inow yen any moñ can meyne.
Then owr lyon and owr lyonesse shall reyn i perye—
Thus Brydlynton and body and banastir boks tell,
The trier of Wysdome w^t any leyse,
Merlyn and mony inow y^e w^t mervell mellis.
The quell shall tue [?] w^t hyme full ryght,
That fortune has chosen till hir fere.
In Babylone shall be sene a syght
Y^e in Surry shall bryng mony mene to bere ffyften day jornay by3onde Jehrlm
The holy crosse wonere shall be.
The same lorde shall gete y^e beeme
Y^e at Sondyforth wan ye gree, ffortune has gūte hym y^e victory.

THE PROPHET ISAIAH ON NORTH AND SOUTH. Sydney Smith was wont to be very merry at the expense of those Doctors of Divinity of his time who maintained that there were passages in Habakkuk directly predicting the overthrow of French Jacobinism by General Mack and the Duke of Brunswick. It is possible, perhaps, by dexterously twisting texts of scripture, and ignoring the context, to find a prophetic reference to every historical event that has ever occurred. Take, for instance, the following from Isaiah's prophecy, which he writ on a great roll, with a man's pen, concerning Maher-Shalal-hash-baz:—

"Associate yourselves, O ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces; and give ear, all ye of far countries: gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces: gird yourselves and ye shall be broken in pieces. Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought; speak the word, and it shall not stand; for God is with us. For the Lord spake thus to me with a strong hand, and instructed me that I should not walk in the way of this people, saying, Say ye not A Confederacy, to all them to whom this people shall say A Confederacy; neither fear ye their fear nor be afraid."—Isaiah viii. 9-12.

The Doctor Cumming who construes this obscure prophecy should be of a Federal way of thinking. To the Northern scholiast, the people who "associated" themselves, and were to be "broken in pieces," would be the people of the Southern States; those of "far countries" who were to "give ear" would be the governments of England and France; and the "girding," the proposed preparation for European intervention in the American civil war. Those who "girded" themselves, however, were, according to the prophet, to be also broken in pieces: thus the cabinets of St. James's and the Tuileries could not agree, and the project of intervention fell through. "Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought." This is clearly an allusion to the deliberations of the Richmond Congress, or perhaps to the abortive negotiations at Niagara and Fortress Monroe. "Speak the word, and it shall not stand." This may mean the secession ordinance of South Carolina, which has just been repealed. The denunciation of "a Confederacy" is too obvious and explicit to need a gloss.

GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

Liverpool.

EPIGRAM ON A BLOCK OF WENHAM LAKE ICE.—

"Ice taken to a warmish room
Will turn to water we presume;
So ice that will not melt must be
The greatest curiosity.
But here we have insolvent ice,
And solve the riddle in a trice,—
It comes from Pennsylvania State,
And therefore will not liquidate!"

The above was communicated to me by the author, the late Major-General Jervois, Governor of Hong Kong, and I believe it has not been printed.

Westminster Club.

U. O. N.

BEES.—The following extract from a communication to the Glasgow Herald is very interesting:

"FUNERAL OF A BEE.—On Sunday se'nnight I had the pleasure of witnessing a most interesting ceremony, which I desire to record for the benefit of your readers. Whilst walking with a friend in a garden, near Falkirk, we observed two bees issuing from one of the hives, bearing betwixt them the body of a defunct comrade, with which they flew for a distance of ten yards. We followed them closely, and noted the care with which they selected a convenient hole at the side of the gravel walk—the tenderness with which they committed the body, head downwards, to the earth—and the solicitude with which they afterwards pushed against it two little stones, doubtless 'in memoriam.' Their task being ended, they paused for about a minute, perhaps to drop over the grave of their friend a sympathising tear, and then they flew away."

I certainly never witnessed the funeral of a bee, but I have seen what I consider equally singular. Being somewhat attached to these little industrious creatures, some twelve or fourteen years since I used to take pleasure in observing their procedure when on a visit to a near relative in Berwickshire, where there was a beehive.

During the heat of summer, when the wasps were in full force, I used to be much amused with their repeated attempts to effect an entrance into the hive. The bees, when the numbers were not overpowering, managed their matters uncommonly well. No opposition was offered to the entry—the enemy did not remain long in—but speedily was brought out, apparently dead, by two bees; they contrived to take the body between them—fly over the high brick wall under which the hive was placed, and having deposited their burden on the other side, returned with speed to their domicile, where the same thing was done again and again. Upon one occasion I ventured to interfere, as the wasps had mustered in considerable force, and, fearful of their being too powerful for my little favourites, I, by means of a book, contrived to knock down many of them on the ground, beneath the hive, either dead or wounded. The bees seemed to understand that I was serving them, for although near the hive, they kept aloof till the battle was over, and the enemy had fled. Then they issued out, and by twos carried both the dead and wounded over the wall, so that in a comparatively short time the battle-field was entirely cleared.

J. M.

AN ABBOT'S CROSIER, OR PASTORAL STAFF, HOW CARRIED.—It has been very confidently asserted that the proper way to represent an abbot, is to place the crosier in his right hand; to distinguish him from a bishop, who carries it in left. But this is by no means a rule. For, in the first place the Roman pontifical, in the ceremonial for the blessing of an abbot, directs the bishop, when he installs him in his seat, to place the crosier in his left hand:—

"Statuens eum in sede prædecessoris sui, et dans ei baculum pastorem in manu sinistra, dicit," &c.

This is of itself conclusive; but, in the next place, it is easy to adduce examples of abbots represented with the crosier in the left hand. I have before me a figure of Adam, abbot of St. Denis, in 1121, carrying his crosier in his left hand, and holding a book in his right. On the seal of Wilton, St. Giles, abbot, is represented with the crosier in his left; as he is in an old picture in my possession. So is St. Leonard, on the seal of his hospital in Leicester; and so is St. Columba, on an old monastic seal in my collection. Then on the monumental brass of the Abbot Esteney, at Westminster, the abbot is figured with the crosier in his left hand; and on the magnificent brass of the Abbot de la Mere, in St. Alban's, the crosier is laid on the abbot's left side. Dr. Rock, in his Church of our Fathers (vol. ii. p. 208), mentions an ancient figure of an abbot in Peterborough Cathedral, with the crosier in the same position; and he adds, that "the same may be observed in many of our abbatial seals, such as that for Crowland; for Pollesworth nunnery, and for Thorney." Though the present inquiry refers to abbots only, I may mention that St. Mildreda, abbess, on the seal of Tenterden, and St. Eanswede, abbess, on that of Folkestone, hold their crosier in their left hands. St. Gertrude, of Nivelles, has the crosier also in her left hand, in the plates of her in the Nouvelles Fleurs des Saintes, and in De Levens der Heylige van Nederland, by Van Loo. I do not deny that abbots are often seen figured with the crosier in the right; but instances of its being held in the left are too common for any rule or distinctive mark to be grounded upon the former mode of representation.

F. C. H.

EARLY ENTRIES IN THE EDINBURGH REGISTER OF TESTAMENTS.—The Register of Testaments of the Commissary Court of Edinburgh commences abruptly. The earlier volumes have not been preserved:—

"Sir William Fleminge Wiccar (?) P— of Kilbryd. 3^d Maii, 1564.

David Guthrie, Pryor of the Abbey of St. Androis, A.D. 1564.

Sir Henry Mow, Prebendar of Saint Geilles Kirk, 3rd June.

John Betoun of Balfoure, 7th June.

George Claphan (Clephan) of Carslogie, 10th June.

Katherine Auchmoutie, relict of umquhile Thomas Weymes of Louthank (?) 14 June.

Elizabeth Quhytlaw, spouse to William Newton of that ilk, 15 June.

John Roberton of Ernok, 21 June.

James Hoppringill of Quhytbank, 22 June.

James Hoppringill of Bulholme, 3^d July.

Mairteine Nicolounne, Commone Crick in Edinburgh, 3 July.

Patric Scot of Monzies, 8 July.

Thomas Grahame of Boquhoppill, 10 July.

Andw. Frazer of Stainwood, 12 July.

Gilbert Johnston of Coreherd, 20 July.

Sir John Harstie, Wicar of Dalkeith, 20 July.

Marion Avel Lady Balmain, 28 July.

Robert Bishope of Orkney, 4 Aug.

David Robson of Billie, 7 Aug.

William Ker, burges of Edinburgh, 12 Aug.

James Bassinden, burges of Edinburgh, 15 Aug.

Thomas Tod Swordslipper, burges of Edinburgh, 9 October.

Katherine Brown, relict of umquhile W. James Foulis, of Collingtoun, 10 Oct.

Mr Edward Bruce, of Eister Kennet, 12 October.

Sir William Hoppringill, Prebendar of Borthloch, 18 Oct."

J. M.

CURIOSITY AT BERKELEY CASTLE.—The following cutting from the Gloucester Mercury newspaper of Sept. 14, 1865, may be worthy a corner in "N. & Q." :—

"A curiosity has lately been added to Berkeley Castle—a monster Chinese bell. It has been raised upon an ornamental iron frame in the outer court. Upon a small brass tablet is the following inscription:—'This bell was presented by Captain Roderick Dew, C.B., H.M.S. Endeavour, to his kind friend and patron, Admiral the Right Hon. Lord Fitzhardinge, G.C.B., under whose auspices he entered the navy, and served under his command in H.M. ships Hercules and Thunderer. It was brought from the ruins of a Buddhist temple at Tsekee, in China, which had been burnt by the Taepings, December, 1864.' The bell bears this inscription, which has been translated by Dr. Lockhart, medical missionary, from Pekin:—'Date, 3rd year of the Emperor Kieng-lung (A.D. 1725). Put up in the autumn month on a lucky day. The following faithful officers, gentry, and believing literati subscribed for the casting of the bell.' The names are all given in the large lower compartments. Names of men, 250; of women, 80 in all. The latter are distinguished by a peculiar letter or character. The large upper compartments contain Buddhist hymns and prayers."

S. R. T. M.

UNCOMMON RHYMES.—The following far-fetched rhymes have been produced at various times. Their composition is owing, chiefly to the denial that such could be found, or rather invented. The first was sent by a correspondent from Stratford, Essex, to the Welcome Guest, for November 9, 1861:—

"Sir, I hope it's no crime
To send you the rhyme,
Tho' you say there none is for chimney:
To prove it's not true,
As stated by you,
Know this, Sir, I've found it in Rhymney."

This refers to some mines bearing the name. The next is from The Athenæum, and is a double example:—

"From the Indus to the Bloreng
Came the Rajah in a month,
Eating now and then an orange,
Conning all the day his Grunth."

The Bloreng is explained as a hill near Abergavenny, and the Grunth the sacred book of the Sikhs.

quick in perception, and ready in debate: so that Demosthenes feared him more than any other orator, and is said to have called him the "Hatchet." Now, can this be the root of the epithet of "hatched-faced;" and may it not have descended from the lips of the great Athenian orator to those of the virago of Drury Lane —

"Of Drury's mazy courts and dark abodes,"— where we poor moderns are most likely to hear it?

JOHN TIMBS.

ELIZABETH HEYRICK. — A Quaker lady of this name published, about 1823, a pamphlet entitled Immediate not Gradual Abolition. This work, and the obstinacy of the colonists, had the effect of inducing the leaders of the movement in favour of the slaves, to adopt the principle of immediate and unqualified emancipation. Any particulars respecting this lady will oblige.
S. Y. R.

JOHN HOKER. — Information is requested as to John Hoker, who is said to have been minister of Maidstone. He was author of an interesting and amusing Latin letter to Bullinger about the destruction of the Rood of Grace at Boxley, written about May, 1538, given in Burnet's History of the Reformation, ed. Pocock, vi. 194. There is a translation in the late Rev. G. C. Gorham's Gleanings, p. 17.
S. Y. R.

ISABELLA OF HAINAULT. — Isabella, daughter of Baldwin, Count of Hainault, and wife to Philip II. of France, was descended from Hermengarde, wife of Albert, Count of Namur. Where are the several generations necessary to complete the pedigree to be found? There is a gap of a hundred and fifty years or more from Hermengarde to Isabella.

SAMUEL TUCKER.

20, Doughty Street, Mecklenburgh Square.

JEER: GEAR. — A writer in the Edinburgh Review for July, in making a quotation from Selden's Table Talk, prints "gear" jeer. Does he not misunderstand Selden? It is not that the common people make jeer, i. e. fun (the vulgar not being so irreverent); but "what gear," i. e. stuff, they make of it, that is, they can't tell what to make of it.
NEWINGTONENNIS.

ST. JEROME A "CICERONIAN." — In Alban Butler's Life of St. Jerome (Sept. 30) occurs the following passage:—

"The saint, in his long epistle to Eustochium relates that, being seized with a grievous sickness in the desert, in the heat of a burning fever he fell into a trance or dream, in which he seemed to himself arraigned before the dreadful tribunal of Christ. Being asked his profession, he answered that he was a Christian. 'Thou liest,' said the Judge, 'thou art a Ciceronian, for the works of that author possess thy heart.' The Judge thereupon condemned him to be severely scourged by angels," &c.

As I have not a copy of St. Jerome's works to refer to, I should be glad if your obliging correspondent, F. C. H., would give me through "N. & Q." the original account, as narrated by the saint himself.

J. DALTON.

Norwich.

THE LEICESTER BADGE. — It is said that the bear in the Leicester Badge wears his chain only for a certain time, now past, or nearly past. What truth is there in this?
E. E.

Kenilworth.

MILITARY QUERIES. — In some extracts from the London Gazette in the London Courier of 1795, I find the 8th and 9th Dragoon Guards mentioned. Is this a misprint, or did these corps (as I suspect) exist for a time on the separate Irish establishment?

Where can I see any Irish Army Lists of the last few years before the Repeal of the Union?

Can any of your readers give me any information respecting the Fingall Regiment? They were, I think, numbered the 118th, or St. John's. They were in Dublin early in '95, and the London Courier of that year refers to a mutiny of part of the regiment on the march through Birmingham?

Can any one give me any particulars of the following corps:—The Queen's Germans (numbered 97th afterwards); the regiment of Lowenstein; and the regiment of Hompesch? I am anxious to learn when and where the last-named three regiments were disbanded.

MILES PEDITUS.

Glasgow.

PEACOCKS' FEATHERS. — Can any one inform me the origin of the theory, that the possession of peacocks' feathers brings ill luck to the owner?

IGNARUS.

POYLE ARMS. — What were the arms of John Poyle, Esq., and Elizabeth his wife, to whose memory there is a brass in Hampton Poyle church, co. Oxon?
ELUR.

Oxford.

GEORGE QUINTON, a native of Wetheringsett, in Suffolk, was originally a shepherd-boy, but applied himself to engraving. In 1797 he was only nineteen years old. (Gent. Mag. lxvii. 939.) Is anything known of his subsequent career.

S. Y. R.

QUOTATIONS. —

"Darting one being through earth, sea, and air."

This is given in a book before me as a quotation from Shakespeare; can you tell me where it occurs? Ayscough gives no clue to it, but I suppose it will be in Clarke's Concordance.
Q. Q.

Whence comes the following? —

"Our acts our angels' are, or good or ill,
The fatal phantoms that walk by us still."

A. O. V. P.

[* The line does not occur in Clarke's Concordance—ED.]

REGISTER OF CHURCHING OF WOMEN.—In the parish church registers at Preston, Lancashire, for the early part of the seventeenth century, there is a record of the churching of women. Was this a mere freak of the clergyman's, or is there an authority for keeping such a record? I never saw entries of this kind in any other church registers.

H. FISHWICK.

ROTTENBURG FAMILY.—Will any of your readers conversant with German, or Continental heraldry, say what the armorial bearings are of the family of Rottonburgh, Rottonbury, or Rattenberry, and its various ways of being spelt? They are believed to have been German counts. At one time a branch or branches of this family, with different coat armour, settled in the West of England about 1500. A pedigree of one branch is preserved in the College of Arms, but no coat armour is mentioned.

GEORGE PRIDEAUX.

THE STRATFORD BUST OF SHAKESPEARE.—I went with the excursion of the British Association to Stratford-upon-Avon, and when in the chancel of Trinity Church I asked a question of the mayor with respect to Shakspeare's monument. To that question I did not get a satisfactory answer. Perhaps you will permit me to ask it through your columns. It is this,—Has any alteration been made in the bust of the monument since it was first erected? We have some account of a company of players giving the proceeds of a performance of Othello to recolour the monument. We have a legend of Garrick knocking off the pen and part of the hands. We have Malone's meddling and marring, and the more recent restoration of the original colouring: but has the monument been tampered with to a greater extent? I ask this question because Dugdale in his Antiquities of Warwickshire, gives an engraving of the monument, which is materially different from the one now in existence. The figures on the cornice are in different positions. The one now holding a torch is represented with an hour-glass. The entablature is less ornamental, but has a dog's head over the capital of each column. The bust itself is entirely altered. The panel is less ornamented. The face partakes of the Droe-shout expression. There is no pen, no paper, no pretence of writing! The hands are holding or resting on the front of what appears to be a wool-sack. The engraving is on a similar scale as the one representing the monument in the Official Guide issued by the Tercentenary Committee, but varies considerably in the depth of the monument from the top of the entablature to the commencement of the inscription. Dugdale's Antiquities was published in 1656, forty years after the poet's death, and the general accuracy of Dugdale's engravings has not been impugned to my knowledge.

I again ask if the monument has been tampered with, or is Dugdale wrong? J. T. BURGESS, Leamington.

THE NAME STUTTING.—Can any one explain the derivation of the family name of Stutting? It occurs very frequently in the parish registers of Scotter, co. Lincoln.

K. P. D. E.

THE CRESCENT ON ST. SOPHIA.—In reading an interesting article in the Edinburgh Review for April last on the Church and Mosque of St. Sophia, I was surprised to meet with the following statement:—

"The exterior of the dome [cupola] was originally surmounted by a stately cross, which, in the modern mosque, is replaced by a gigantic crescent fifty yards in diameter the glitter of it in the sunshine is said to be visible from the summit of Mount Olympus, a distance of a hundred miles."—P. 471.

Having often admired the exquisite symmetry of this cupola, the diameter of which cannot be more than 120 feet, it is astounding to be told that the diameter of the crescent which surmounts it is fifty yards, and I should have put it down as a misprint for five; but, on turning to Murray's Handbook, I find it stated there also to be "fifty yards in diameter," and a friend who has referred to Von Hammer, tells me that he gives the same measurement. Most probably the original blunder is Von Hammer's.

W. L. N.

Bath Royal Literary Institution.

TREVISA: TRANSLATION OF GLANVILLE.—It is stated in Mr. George P. Marsh's work on The Origin and History of the English Language, 1862, p. 452, that he has somewhere seen it stated that "Trevisa's manuscript of his translation of Glanvilla De Proprietatibus Rerum is still in existence." Can any of your readers confirm this, and point out its present place of custody? K. P. D. E.

SIR JAMES STRATFORD TYNTE, BART.—In the old churchyard of Donnybrook, near Dublin, there is a monumental stone, in the shape of an obelisk, over the grave of Sir James Stratford Tynnte, Bart. There was an inscription of considerable length, as mentioned in Brief Sketches of the Parishes of Booterstown and Donnybrook, p. 127 (Dublin, 1861); but from the effects of the weather very little of it is now legible. Thanks, however, to the foresight of the late Sir William Betham, Ulster King-of-Arms, we are not left without a record of the inscription in full. It has been preserved, with transcripts of other inscriptions at Donnybrook, in vol. ii. of his MSS. Collections in the British Museum (Add. MSS. 23,084-7), and as the particulars of it will doubtless prove interesting to many readers of "N. & Q.," I have great pleasure in sending them. They are as follows:—

"The body of Sir James Stratford Tynnte, General of the Army of Volunteers of Ireland, who died the 19th November, 1785, was here interred with military honours.

"Near this place are deposited the remains of the Right

Honble James Tynte [of Dunlavan, in the county of Wicklow, buried 12th April, 1758] and Robt Tynte [buried 25th June, 1760], Esquires, grandfather and father of Sir James Stratford Tynte. Also the remains of James Tynte, his son, and Martha, his daughter.

"Whilst the patriotism of a Volunteer, and the social virtue of a tender husband, dutiful child, fond parent, honest man, and loyal subject are thought estimable, the memory of Sir James Tynte will be revered.

"This last sad token, O my love, receive!

Alas! 'tis all your Hannah now can give!"

The parish-register of the time is not forthcoming, the book or books for thirty-two years before the year 1800 having long since disappeared; but in one of the Visitation-returns from Donnybrook, preserved in the Consistorial Court, Dublin, Sir James Tynte's burial is recorded in the following terms:—

"Buried at Donnybrook [as distinguished from Ringsend, in the same parish], Sir Jas. Tent, 13th Novr, 1785."

Visitation-returns, as I have good reason to know, will oftentimes be found most useful in supplying an hiatus in, or the total loss of, many a parish register. ABHBA.

WARDE.—Are there anywhere in existence portraits, painted or engraved, of Sir Patience Warde, Lord Mayor of London 1681, and Sir John Warde, Lord Mayor 1719, or either of them? I shall be obliged if gentlemen connected with the Guildhall, Mansion House, halls of city companies, &c., will kindly inquire and report. C. J.

WESTON FAMILY.—Richard Weston, first Earl of Portland, bore as his arms Or, an eagle displayed regardant sa. Was he the first of his family who had these arms; or to whom, and when were they granted?

What is the date of the birth of Benjamin, youngest son of the first Earl of Portland, and when and where did he die? Do any of the Weston families now in existence bear the above arms; and if so, do they do so as claiming descent from the same stock as the first earl?

Weston is, I believe, not an uncommon name in parts of Dorsetshire, and at Poole in that county. Is anything known connecting the first Earl of Portland, his ancestors, or descendants with that county or borough? Perhaps, too, a reader of "N. & Q." at Poole could inform me whether in the church or churchyard there, there are any inscriptions of the seventeenth or eighteenth centuries relating to the Weston family? I am anxious also to know who was the father of "Ambrose Weston of Poole, mariner;" his will was proved 1742. He was probably upwards of seventy when he died. Any other particulars of the above Weston family will be welcome to

G. W. E.

Southbridge.

Queries with Answers.

ABYSSUM: A KIND OF HERB.—In the "Form of Exorcising an haunted House," as detailed in Bourne's Antiquities of the Common People, the last thing ordered to be done is to "let abyssum, which is a kind of an herb, be procur'd; and after it is sign'd with a sign of the Cross, let it be hung up at the four corners of the house." What kind of a herb is abyssum, and what are its peculiar properties?

H. FISHWICK.

[This is a case of misprint. Bourne, in his Antiquities, cites the learned Doctor, Valerius Polidorus Patavinus; on referring to whose Practica Exorcistarum, 1606, we do indeed find the word abyssum, p. 141, as Bourne has given it. But on referring to the earlier edition of the Practica, bearing date 1587, we find alyssum, p. 171b. This is satisfactory to our feelings: for though the adjective abyssinicus is used in natural history (M^r Nicoll's Dict. of Nat. History Terms, in verbo), we could have given no account of any such mystical herb as abyssum; while the magical uses of alyssum are notorious, and accord in the main with our correspondent's description. We say "in the main," because Polidorus recommends the use of alyssum in the case of a house troubled with evil spirits ("domus a demonibus perturbata"); while the modern phrase of "a haunted house," rather conveys the idea of a ghost, who may be troublesome or entertaining "according as he behaves." To this it should be added, that the still earlier use of alyssum was against fascination or witchcraft; although it may be supposed that what is good against witchcraft cannot be bad against a ghost.

All that we meet with respecting the virtues of the alyssum in herbalists and in other mediæval writers, may be traced to Dioscorides; who seems more ready, however, to state what he has heard, than to make any assertion on his own authority. "When suspended in a house," he writes, "it is said to be salubrious, and beneficial as a preservative against witchcraft [ἀλυσσουργία] both to men and to other animals."—Opera, 1598, p. 219. Of this, what W. Turner says in his Herbal is evidently a repetition: "Thesame hong up in houses is thought to be holosome, and a defence against inchantinge both unto man and beast."—P. 36.

We regret to add, that there is more than the usual difficulty in identifying the herb alyssum. Frommannus gives it up. "Alyssum herbam controversam, quam nemo hodie nec ante multos annos novit . . . præterimus."—De Fascinatione, 1675, p. 445. Janus Antoninus Saracenus, in his Scholia on Dioscorides, p. 67, in like manner desponds of verifying. Dunbar on Άλυσσος, in his Gr.-Eng. Lexicon, says: "The Α. of Galen and Paulus Egineta is Marrubium alyssum, vulgarly called Galen's Madwort. That of Dioscorides is a very different plant, and cannot be satisfactorily determined. Sprangel hesitates whether to refer it with Dodonæus to the Fernetic clypeata, or with Columna to the Veronica arvensis or montana, L., or Speedwell."

heifers." These words were repeated more than once in that prayer. I have a vivid recollection of them, but I desiderate the prayer itself; and if any of the correspondents of "N. & Q." will furnish me with it, or inform me where I can meet with a verbatim copy of it, I shall feel grateful.

BEVERLAC.

[The prayer used "by His Majesty's Special Command in all Cathedral, Collegiate, and Parochial Churches" on occasion of the mortality among the Cattle in 1748, was the following: "O Gracious God, who, in Thy great bounty to mankind, hast given them the beasts of the field for their provision and nourishment, continue to us, we humbly beseech Thee, this blessing, and suffer us not to be reduced to scarcity and distress by the contagious distemper, which has raged, and still rages, among the cattle in many parts of this kingdom. In this and all other Thy dispensations towards us, we see and adore the justice of Thy providence, and do with sorrowful and penitent hearts confess, that our manifold vices and impieties have deservedly provoked Thine anger and indignation against us. But we earnestly entreat Thee, Almighty Father, in this our calamitous state, to look down upon us with an eye of pity and compassion; and, if it be Thy blessed will, to forbid the spreading of this sore visitation, and, in Thy good time, to remove it from all the inhabitants of this land, for the sake of Thy mercies in Christ Jesus our only Saviour and Redeemer. Amen."]

REV. HENRY RUTTER. — I have before me the following book:—

"The Life of our blessed Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, as recorded by the Four Evangelists; with numerous Notes, Moral, Critical, and Explanatory, by the Rev. Henry Rutter, Author of the 'Key to the Old Testament,' &c. A new Edition, as revised and corrected by the Author. Edinburgh. (A. Fullarton & Co.) 8vo, n. d. Prefixed is a Recommendation by Andrew Carruthers, Vicar Apostolic of the Eastern District of Scotland, dated Edinburgh, March 3, 1849."

It is handsomely printed, and has numerous good engravings in outline. I believe this work was first published, London, 2 vols. 8vo, 1803. A second edition came out at London in 4to, 1831 (in sixpenny numbers).

Of Mr. Rutter's Key to the Old Testament, I can find no account anywhere. Information as to this author and his works will be acceptable.

S. Y. R.

[In the last edition [1857?] of the Rev. Henry Rutter's Life, Doctrine, and Sufferings of our Lord Jesus Christ, with an Introduction by the very Rev. F. C. Husenbeth, D.D., V.G., is the following brief notice of the author: "The Rev. Henry Rutter was a learned divine and judicious critic, and had devoted his life to the careful study of the Holy Scriptures. He was the author of several valuable works analogous to the present. These were his Explanation of St. Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews, by an Analysis, a Paraphrase, and a Commentary, which he published in 1813, and which may be considered as supplementary to his Life of Christ: his Catholic Epistle of St. Jude, with a Paraphrase and Notes, and his very valuable work, the Key to the Old Testament. Again, his Summary View of the Apocalypse, being a supplement to the preceding, as also to his Life of Christ; and his Summary View and Explanation of the Ancient Prophets. This was his last work, his death having occurred on the 17th of September, 1838. He died at Dodding Green, in the county of Westmoreland, at the advanced age of eighty-five years, having been one of the last survivors of the Catholic clergy, educated at Douay College."]

ANCIENT ENCAUSTIC TILES. — I should feel obliged if some of your numerous antiquarian readers would give me the names of some works that would throw light on ancient encaustic tiles; including some that treat of the numerous kinds in the Priory Church, Great Malvern, if such there be.

H. E. W.

Upper Norwood.

[The most useful work to consult on this subject is the following: Examples of Decorative Tiles, sometimes termed Encaustic. Edited by John Gough Nichols, F.S.A., 1845, 4to. The Introductory Remarks on the history of Decorative Tiles contain many references to other works which will enable our correspondent to acquire a complete knowledge of early ornamental pavements. For notices of the yellow or orange-coloured tiles in the Priory Church of Great Malvern, consult the Rev. Dr. H. Card's Dissertation on the Antiquities of the Priory of Great Malvern, 4to, 1834, pp. 32—34, 53; Shaw's Specimens of Tile Pavements, 1852, 4to, No. II. plate 4; the Gent. Mag., ciii. (ii.) 162, 301; New Series, xxi. 492; xxii. 25 (with plates); and Parker's Glossary of Gothic Architecture, edit. 1850, art. "Tiles."]

TURNER'S BIRTHDAY. — The day and year of Turner's birth are unknown. Mr. Ruskin says, in his Lectures on Architecture and Painting, that Joseph Mallord William Turner was born in Maiden Lane, London. The register was burned, and his age at his death could only be arrived at by conjecture.

The bishop's transcript of the parish register ought to be, and probably is, in existence; if so, perhaps some one will consult it and make his age known through "N. & Q."

K. P. D. E.

[Mr. Walter Thornbury thus commences his Life of Turner:—"John Mallord William Turner was born on St. George's day, the 23rd of April, 1775, and was baptised on the 14th of May following, in the parish church of St. Paul's, Covent Garden, where his name may still be seen in the register."]

Replies.

WASHINGTON NOT AN INFIDEL.

(3rd S. viii. 209, 275.)

It was with feelings of the deepest regret that I saw, at the latter reference given above, so good a churchman as LORD LITTLETON quote the Rev.

will reflect that we can have little hope of the blessing of Heaven on our arms if we insult it by our impiety and folly."—Pp. 27-8.

Dr. Tyng says he could multiply these examples, and quotes from one of his letters:—

"The hand of Providence has been so conspicuous in all this, that he must be worse than an infidel that lacks faith, and more than wicked that has not gratitude enough to acknowledge his obligations."—P. 28.

Further on Dr. Tyng adds:—

"Well does Mr. Sparks say of him, 'If a man who spoke, wrote, and acted as a Christian through a long life, who gave numerous proofs of his believing himself to be such, and who was never known to say, write, or do anything contrary to his professions—if such a man is not to be ranked among the believers in Christianity, it would be impossible to establish the point by any train of reasoning. He was educated in the Episcopal Church, to which he always adhered; and my conviction is, that he believed in the fundamental doctrines of Christianity according to his understanding of them, but without a particle of intolerance or disrespect for the faith and modes of worship adopted by Christians of other denominations.' Rarely was there ever a more perfect illustration of the great Masonic principle upon this subject—a principle which may well be summed up in the two great commandments of the Divine Author of Christianity: 'Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and mind, and strength, and thy neighbour as thyself.'"—P. 30.

I have transcribed the above literally and without a single alteration, and am led to hope the majority of readers of "N. & Q." will agree with me, that because a great and good man did not glibly rattle off such a profession of faith as would satisfy the sensational readers of death-bed scenes—such as used to appear in the so-called Evangelical Magazine—he, who passed through a long life as a Christian gentleman and a soldier, ought not to be stigmatised as an infidel; for, finite creatures as we are, it is rather too much to expect that the only test of a Christian life is to depend, not on the favour, mercy, and love of a most gracious Saviour, but on the utterances of a man in his last moments.

†. MATTHEW COOKE, 30°.

I cannot at this moment refer to Jefferson's Letters, but believe that the statement is wholly without foundation. During the public career of Washington, but more especially during his Presidency, his conduct, character, and ability were freely canvassed, but I do not remember that in his lifetime he was ever pronounced an infidel. The Governor Morris had, I believe, been employed more than once by Washington on delicate missions, having been sent to England on some matter of private negotiation, the supposed results of which were freely commented upon by many, more especially by men of extreme views. He was sent also to represent the United States in Paris during the government of the French Convention. It was stated at the time that he led a voluptuous life, and was afflicted with an inordinate avarice. From this or some other cause not reflecting, as it is understood, credit upon him, he was superseded in the French capital by Mr. Munroe. Probably there was nothing more than suspicion of his sincerity and good faith; and the imputations upon him do not rest upon the best evidence. This ought, however, to be ascertained before he can be accepted as an authority in relation to any matter affecting the President of the Government that thus superseded him. The statement of Dr. Miller, given by LORD LYTTELTON (3rd S. viii. 275), is only negative. It would be useful if the Doctor would give us the passage, or give us the title and date of the lecture on which the statement is made.

I have before me "The Life of George Washington," by David Ramsay, M.D. of Charleston, South Carolina," published in London, 1807. This Ramsay is the author of several works, a list of which may be seen by referring to Bohn's Lexicon. The biography is rather meagre, being little more than a condensation, into one volume 8vo, of the matter contained in the five 4to volumes of Marshall. It is faithful in its facts, but written in a strain of panegyric. It supplies no new matter. The following passage from the summary, at page 420, goes directly in contradiction of the statement made on the authority of Morris:—

"There are few men of any kind, and still fewer of those the world calls great, who have not some of their virtues eclipsed by corresponding vices; but this was not the case with Washington. He had religion without austerity, dignity without pride, modesty without diffidence, courage without rashness, politeness without affectation, affability without familiarity. His private character, as well as his public one, will bear the strictest investigation. He was punctual in all his engagements, upright and honest in all his dealings, temperate in his enjoyments, liberal and hospitable to an eminent degree, a lover of order, systematical and methodical in all his arrangements. The friend of morality and religion, he strictly attended on public worship; encouraged and strengthened the heads of the clergy; and in all his public acts made the most respectful mention of Providence. In a word, he carried from private life into his public administration the spirit of piety, a dependence upon the Supreme Governor of the Universe."

This latter portion might be sustained by references to his public speeches and addresses, and to more satisfactory evidences—his private letters, where he repeatedly acknowledges his dependence upon a Superintending Providence. It is scarcely conceivable that all this was assumed as a necessary part of his public life—that he would make profession of a religious faith without any conviction, or that he could lay down on his death-bed the principles he had avowed in life. There must be a mistake that it is desirable to clear up, and surely it can be no difficult matter to arrive at the truth.

There can be no doubt that, during the struggle in America, many men were mixed up in it, and united themselves with the popular cause, who had become deeply imbued with the doctrines of the French Encyclopædists. It was common for a certain class of writers to condemn the whole of the democratic party as being infidels in religion. Among the many who had greatly influenced opinion in America, was Thomas Paine, the author of The Rights of Man. Washington in his early career had to associate with these men, but there is no evidence whatever to show that he shared their views in relation to Christianity. He was labouring for the independence of his country, and had to work with such material as he found ready. I think, however, that some indirect evidence on the present point may be deduced from the facts before us. William Cobbett, who was then writing under the name of "Peter Poreupine," and who was most unsparing in his attacks upon Dr. Franklin, Thomas Paine, and Dr. Priestley, says that the President of the Democratic Society of Philadelphia, David Rittenhouse, was an atheist; and that the American Philosophical Society "is composed of a nest of such wretches as hardly ever met before: it is impossible to find words to describe their ignorance or their baseness" (Poreupine Letters, vol. i. p. 138). It was possibly owing to the circumstance that these Societies, and others, had issued fulsome addresses of welcome to Dr. Priestley, that Washington refused to receive him as a visitor. This is one proof that Washington did not ally himself with the extreme men, either in religion or politics; and he, therefore, became to them an object of dislike and hatred. His temperate and pacific policy was condemned, and he was pronounced an enemy to the constitution that he had done so much to win. The public and private life of Washington must have been known to these men; and if there had been any inconsistency between his openly avowed reverence for Christianity, and his private opinions and practice, they would have eagerly embraced such an argument against the man who stood between them and their anarchical views; and yet, among all the imputations cast upon him, there is none that he was not sincere in his expressed religious opinions.

Again:—A letter was written by Thomas Paine to Washington in 1796. The writer—animated, no doubt, by a restless spirit of propagandism, and probably irritated by some disagreement which had arisen between him and the American government—had gone to Europe; and, in 1792, had been elected a member of the French Convention. After taking part in some of its more stormy scenes, he incurred the suspicion of Robespierre and his associates, and was cast into the prison of the Luxembourg, where he remained eleven months. Some romantic incident is made to account for his escape from the guillotine, but he attributes that escape to his having been attacked by fever. During his imprisonment, he wrote several times to Governor Morris—then to his successor, Mr. Munroe—asking for the interference of the American government to obtain his release, on the ground that he was an American citizen. Mr. Munroe seems to have favoured the application, but it appears that Washington paid no attention to it. Paine therefore, in a very long letter, assails the President. He calls in question his military skill: ascribes the ultimate triumph to the victories of the other generals, and the protracted struggle to the feebleness of the Commander-in-chief. He accuses him of humiliating the country in the eyes of Europe, by bending to and copying the policy of England. He concludes a letter full of similar assertions in these words:—

"And as to you, Sir, treacherous in private friendship (for so you have been to me in the hour of danger), and a hypocrite in public life, the world will be puzzled to decide whether you are an apostate or an impostor; whether you have abandoned good principles, or whether you ever had any."

"THOMAS PAINE."

In this long letter the only accusation proved is, that he declined to acknowledge Paine as an American citizen, after Paine had become imprisoned by the Convention of which he had been a member. The morbid vanity and intense egotism of the author of The Age of Reason could regard the man only as a traitor who did not rush to save him. The world will take a different estimate. Paine had selected his country: had offended its rulers, and had to suffer the penalty. It was not the act of a prudent ruler of another state to interfere. The one point to which I wish to draw attention is this, however: that, amidst all the invectives and imputations crowding every page of this letter of Paine's, there is no charge upon the purity of Washington's private life, nor upon the sincerity of his professions as a Christian. Is it possible that such a man, familiar with the life of Washington, would not detect any inconsistency of this kind, or be capable of any generosity in not exposing it? T. B.

THE LAST MOMENTS OF WASHINGTON, taken from Curtis's Recollections and Private Memoirs of the Life and Character of Washington:—

"Night approached—the last night of Washington; the weather became severely cold, while the group gathered nearer the couch of the sufferer, watching, with intense anxiety, for the slightest dawning of hope. He spoke but little. To the respectful and affectionate inquiries of an old family servant, as she smoothed down his pillow, how he felt himself, he answered, 'I am very ill.' To Dr. Craik, his earliest companion in arms, longest tried, and bosom friend, he observed, 'I am dying, sir, but am not afraid to die.' To Mrs. Washington, he said, 'Go to my escritoir, and in the private drawer you will find two papers; bring them to me.' They were brought. He continued, 'These are my Wills; preserve this one, and burn the other; which was immediately done. Calling to Col. Lear, he directed,—‘Let my corpse be kept for the usual period of three days.’ The patient bore his acute sufferings with manly fortitude, and perfect resignation to the Divine Will; while, as the night advanced, it became evident that he was sinking, and he seemed fully aware that his hour was nigh. He inquired the time, and it was answered, a few minutes to twelve. He spake no more; the hand of death was upon him, and he was conscious that ‘his hour was come.’ With surprising self-possession, he prepared to die. Composing his form at length, and folding his hands upon his bosom, without a sigh, without a groan, the father of his country expired, gently as though an infant died. Such were the last hours of Washington.”

GIBSON.

Liverpool.

MARSHAL SOULT AND THE BATTLE OF TOULOUSE.

(3rd S. viii. 252, 298.)

I have seen under the above heading certain inquiries as to how Lord Wellington could justify Soult for having caused that sanguinary engagement.

Having been wounded in that battle, in command of a regiment, by a musket ball which has never been extracted, the facts of the case have made an impression upon my mind not easily to be forgotten; I can therefore supply your readers with some information which few now living can afford. I shall, therefore, in reply to this query, beg leave to observe that, in my humble opinion, Lord Wellington was more to blame than Soult; the former having been the aggressor, and the latter having only defended himself when unnecessarily attacked.

My reasons for considering that attack unnecessary are, in the first place, that this battle was fought on April 10, 1814, and the Allies, under the Emperor of Russia, having entered Paris on the 31st of the preceding month, and proclaimed the restoration of Louis XVIII. and the downfall of Napoleon, it was evident that the war ought to have been considered as virtually at an end. Moreover, as Wellington was during that interval placed between Soult and Paris, he ought to have foreseen what little necessity there was for the loss of so many thousands of lives as were sacrificed on that occasion, which, according to the Duke's own despatches, would have been rendered unnecessary had that attack been postponed for forty-eight hours, as on April 12, two days following, the official account of Napoleon's abdication reached the Duke of Wellington.

Your readers will judge under these circumstances who was most to blame for the blood thus shed in the attack upon a position protected on three sides by the river Garonne and canal of Languedoc, and on the fourth by a range of fortified heights, on which it was discovered (after the battle had commenced) that the ground did not admit of artillery being brought to bear, owing to the heavy rains, whereby the loss to the assailants was so considerably increased, as no breaches could have been made for the admission of the two divisions, which had been detached to turn the enemy's right, after the attacks on his left under the Duke's immediate command had failed.

JOHN SCOTT LILLIE,

Late Lt.-Col. Grenadier Guards, and

Maj.-Gen. Portuguese Service.

Union Club.

YEOMAN.

(3rd S. viii. 286.)

I wish to add a few additional illustrations of the etymology of this word to those furnished by MR. BUCKTON.

So far as concerns the Teutonic history of the word there is not any great difficulty. The substitution in English of initial y for g, as MR. BUCKTON remarks, is familiar to all students of our old literature; e. g. yet, A.-S. gūt; young, A.-S. geong; yearn, A.-S. geornian, &c. This brings us to geo as the first syllable. Now in A.-S. there is no such word, nor do we find it in the Norse tongues. We naturally look then to the congenital Low German dialects, and in the Old Frisian, a dialect closely allied to own, and from which many of our familiar terms are derived, we find gomian in the West Friesland, and gamon in the Eastern dialect, with the same or nearly the same meaning as our English yeoman (dorfmann, dorfbewohner.)^{*} Pursuing our inquiries, we find the same term in Old Saxon ga, Old High German or Theotisc, gawi or geui. “In Selbaz, geui sinaz.” “Into his own country or region,” Otfried. Evangel. Johan. iv. In the Gothic it is gavi, “atfaridedum in gavi Gaddarene,” they came into the country of the Gadarenes. (Luke viii. 26.)

The word gauja, in the passage quoted by MR. BUCKTON, is evidently a mistake of some transcriber, since in the only other passage in which the word occurs it means inhabitants (Luke viii. 37), and in all other cases the Greek χώρα is uniformly rendered by gavi. The modern German representative of the term gau seems to be restricted to a flat, alluvial district bordering on a river, as Rheingau, Ammergau, Aargau.

So far our etymological excursus appears smooth and easy, but when we proceed to inquire what is gau, whence is it derived, what is its root, our difficulties commence? It seems so clear and satisfactory to connect gau with गौ and गौ, and these again with Sanskrit गौ, go, that the temptation is almost too great to resist. Our older as in other places. Though usually visited by great numbers in the fruit season, scarcely any common wasps have been seen since the spring, when quite as many females appeared as usual. But we have been overrun by vast multitudes of earwigs, which at one time threatened much evil to the turnips.

^{*} See Richthoven, Altfrisisches Wörterbuch, Göttingen, 1840.

My impression is that the earwigs crept into the nests and devoured the grubs or young wasps; and I am led to this supposition by the following circumstance: Under some books on my study table was a leathern portfolio, which was seldom opened. One day I noticed a mason-wasp fly in at the window, carrying a yellow object which proved to be a living caterpillar; it crept with its burden into the little crevice in the portfolio, and on opening it I found from fifty to one hundred yellow caterpillars, mostly alive, deposited there. The mason wasp was allowed to go on with its work, and every day for some weeks it continued flying in with more caterpillars. It had made its cells, and the young grubs grew to a considerable size; but on opening the portfolio one day, I found a number of earwigs in possession, making havoc of the whole arrangement; and, as I believe, devouring wasp-grubs and caterpillars together. It therefore seems likely that the earwigs, which swarmed everywhere, regaled themselves in a similar way on the fat juicy grubs of other species of wasp.

B. BURGESS.

Latimer Rectory, Bucks.

"WHOM THE GODS LOVE DIE YOUNG" (3rd S. viii. 171.)—I should be glad to know the origin of the following epitaph, which I copy from memory. It is said to be "on a young man of twenty-four," and includes the above sentiment:—

"Scarcely twice twelve years full told, a wearied breath
Have I exchanged for a happy death.
Short was my life; the longer is my rest.
God takes them soonest whom He loveth best,
He that is born to-day, and dies to-morrow,
Loses some hours of joy, but months of sorrow.
Other diseases often come to grieve us,
Death strikes but once, and that stroke doth relieve us."

HERMENTRUDE.

JOHN PYM, THE REFORMER (3rd S. viii. 206.) I have lately seen Mr. J. PYM YEATMAN's letter on this subject in "N. & Q.," and I have no doubt the Hon. P. P. Bouverie, late M.P. for Berks and of Brymore (not Brynna), Somersetshire, can throw some light on the inquiry. Mr. Bouverie is a descendant of the celebrated statesman, and resides at Brymore near Bridgwater, where Pym was born. I may add that a memorial of this great man will at no distant day be set up in the Shire Hall at Taunton, in the company of the illustrious Blake, admiral and general at sea, and Locke, the celebrated philosopher, both natives of Somersetshire. The first was born at Bridgwater, and the latter at Wrington.

R. ARTHUR KINGLAKE.

Weston-super-Mare.

"THE BOOK OF ENOCH" (3rd S. viii. 267.)—CANON DALTON will find, I think, all that he can desire on the Book of Enoch in Bergier's Dictionnaire de Théologie, art. "Enoch," and in the Bible d'Avignon, tom. xvi. p. 521, to which Bergier refers. But I own I cannot see what any one can desire on the subject, after the authoritative judgment of the great St. Augustin, which he expresses in these words:—

"Omittamus igitur earum scripturarum fabulas, quæ apocryphæ nuncupantur, eo quod earum occulta origo non claruit patribus, a quibus usque ad nos auctoritas verum Scripturarum certissima et notissima successione pervenit. In his autem apocryphis etiam invenitur aliqua veritas, tamen propter multa falsa nulla est canonica auctoritas. Scripsisse quidem nonnulla divina Enoch, illam septimum ab Adam, negare non possumus, cum hoc in Epistola canonica Judas Apostolus dicat (v. 14). Sed non frustra non sunt in eo canone Scripturarum, qui servabatur in templo Hebræi populi succedentium diligentia sacerdotum, nisi quia ob antiquitatem suspectæ fidei judicata sunt, nec utrum hæc essent quæ ille scripsisset, poterat inveniri, non talibus proferentibus, qui ea per seriem successionis reperirentur rite servasse. Unde illa, quæ sub ejus nomine proferuntur, et continent istas de gigantibus fabulas, quod non habuerint homines patres, recte a prudentibus judicantur non ipsius esse credenda; sicut multa sub nominibus et aliorum Prophetarum, et recentiora sub nominibus Apostolorum ab hæreticis proferuntur, quæ omnia nomine apocryphorum ab auctoritate canonica diligenti examinatione remota sunt."—S. Aug. De Civ. Dei, lib. xv. cap. 23, n. 4.

F. C. H.

PORCELAIN MANUFACTORY AT LEITH OR EDINBURGH (3rd S. viii. 310.)—I perfectly recollect there being a porcelain manufactory (called a China Work) not at Leith, but near to Stockbridge, then a suburb of Edinburgh, and now by the extension of the city forming a part of it. This refers to the year 1802 or thereabout, and I remember also that it was, after the trial of a year or two, discontinued for want of success. It occupied, if my memory is correct, very nearly the site of the present Malta Terrace. G.
Edinburgh.

BENEDICT (3rd S. viii. 276, 317.)—I sincerely regret that, in attempting to account for the use of the term benedict as applied to a newly-married man, I should have so expressed myself as to incur the animadversions of your learned correspondent F. C. H. I had not the least intention of intimating that, in the early Church, the nuptial benediction was "withheld from the bride at the actual nuptials," or was "given to the bridegroom only;" and if my words convey any such meaning, I must bear the blame. Surely, however, it might have occurred to your correspondent, that so wild a statement could never have found admission into the columns of "N. & Q." In the celebration of matrimony, it was unquestionably the practice of the early Church to impart the nuptial benediction "to both bridegroom and bride," and to impart it to both on the wedding day. But besides this benedictio nuptialis, there were various accessories—some observed more generally than others; and among these accessories was the benedictio sponsarum, which, as its name implies, was not for both bride and bridegroom, but for brides only; which was imparted at the earliest on the day after the wedding ("post primam nuptiarum noctem"); and which could not indeed have been imparted earlier.

If all who speak of these accessories are charged with thereby derogating from, or setting aside, the nuptial benediction, this charge will apply to many hitherto unsuspected authorities. It will apply to Hofmann, who, in addition to the benedictio nuptialis, specifies the benedictio lecti nuptialis. It will apply to Sidonius, Bishop of Clermont in the fifth century, who intimates that the wedding ceremony was not deemed complete till the bride had gone home to the bridegroom's house. It will apply to Pope Innocent II., who recognises the benedictio sponsarum, by making it the subject of a regulation. It will apply to the Encyclopédie Catholique, which speaks expressly of a certain blessing after the marriage: "Dans plusieurs pays, on bénit après le mariage le lit nuptial." It will apply to the Chevalier Moroni, chamberlain to His Holiness Pius IX.; who, in treating of certain "ceremonies and solemnities" of matrimony, says that "some precede, some accompany, and some follow it." None of these authorities overlook or set aside that essential requisite—the nuptial benediction.

Not doubting, then, that the candour of your correspondent F. C. H. is equal to his learning, I trust he will kindly put on his best spectacles, and satisfy himself by a reperusal of my former article (p. 276) that I had no intention of representing the early Church as marrying the bridegroom on the wedding day, but not marrying the bride till the day after.

SCHIN.

"O DEAR ME!" (3rd S. viii. 251.)—I suggest as the probable origin of this common expression, the frequent and careless repetition of the words, "Lord, hear me!" I think "O dear me!" is generally used when a person has any trouble, or is in difficulty: so that the expression, "Lord, hear me!" as a desire to be relieved, would not be inappropriate. The similarity between the sound of the two expressions will become apparent to the reader, on his pronouncing them.

W. C. B.

This would be more correctly shown in print as

"Oh—Dear me." The "oh" being an ejaculation of surprise, and not of adoration. The "Dear me" is simply the Deus Meus of the 22nd and 63rd Psalms, and equivalent to the Mon Dieu of the French, the Mein Gott of the Germans, the Mio Dio of the Italians, and the My God of the English.

If you communicate to one of the labouring classes in Scotland a piece of melancholy intelligence, he exclaims "Dear me! it canna' be true." Should it, however, affect him powerfully, he at once reverts to his English, as he always will do under strong excitement, and replies, "My God! you do not say so." GEORGE VERE IRVING.

BRAOSE FAMILY (3rd S. viii. 197.)—There is a mistake in the Braose pedigree, which should be as follows:—

William de Braose = Maria, dn. of William
ob. 19 Ed. I.	Lord Ros, 3rd wife, ob. 19 Ed. II.

Richard, Peter.	William = Maria = 1. Ralph de
s. p.	2nd husband ob. 36 Cobham, ob.
	of Maria. Ed. III. 19 Ed. II.
	= 3. Thomas of Brotherton,
	ob. 12 Ed. III.
	ANON.

CREAKING SOLES (3rd S. viii. 128, 170, 276.)—In the south-east of Ireland a very absurd notion prevails on this subject, and I have been assured, even by persons whose education should have taught them better, that it is the result of sugar candy, introduced between the inside and external soles. The fact is, however, that it is produced by the flour paste, used by the maker in what is called the "filling up," between the soles.

S. REDMOND.

Liverpool.

THOMAS CREECH (3rd S. viii. 268.)—In addition to the references given him, J. A. G. may be interested by a letter in Letters from the Bodleian, vol. i. p. 128, giving a very different and much more probable account of the cause of poor Creech's tragical end.

J. H. S.

FLY LEAVES (3rd S. viii. 225.)—Under this head several epitaphs were given, which were presumed to be unpublished. The second and third, on the "Cobler," seem to have contributed to the formation of the following:—

"Death at a cobbler's door oft made a stand,
And always found him on the mending hand;
At last came Death in very dirty weather,
And ripp'd the sole from off the upper-leather.
Death put a trick upon him, and what was't?
The cobbler call'd for 's awl, Death brought his last."
Elegant Extracts, book iv. p. 854.

No authority is given. Can any one throw any light on the authorship?

W. C. B.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

Descriptive Catalogue of Materials relating to the History of Great Britain and Ireland to the End of the Reign of Henry VII. By Thomas Duffus Hardy, Deputy Keeper of the Public Records. Vol. II. From A.D. 1066 to A.D. 1200. Published by Authority of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, under the Direction of the Master of the Rolls. (Longman & Co.)

In this volume the Deputy-Keeper of the Public Records brings down his description of the MSS. relating to the early history of this country from the date of the Norman Invasion to the close of the twelfth century. How arduous and how important his labours must be, the reader will readily acknowledge, when he remembers that this may really be said to be the first attempt which has been made to place in the hands of historical students a descriptive Catalogue of the Materials of English History in which those materials should not only be arranged in chronological order, but the manuscript authorities for them in all countries in the world be accurately described, their place and age ascertained, and their authenticity and different degrees of credibility determined. This volume, in bringing Mr. Hardy's labours down to the close of the twelfth century, gives them a certain completeness, because, as he well observes, the epoch embraced in the present volume is separated from that which precedes, and from that which follows it, by very clear and distinct landmarks—being in many of its respects as far opposed to the scholastic era which succeeded it, as to the pure Anglo-Saxon period by which it was preceded. Modestly as Mr. Hardy speaks of the present work, it is one which will add to his deservedly high reputation; and we trust for his own sake, as well as for the sake of historical literature, that he will be permitted to bring to a close the good and great work which he has so admirably commenced.

The Works of William Shakespeare. Edited by William George Clarke, M.A., and William Aldis Wright, M.A. Vol. VII. (Macmillan & Co.)

The new volume of the Cambridge Shakespeare contains only four plays; namely, Romeo and Juliet, Timon of Athens, Julius Cæsar, and Macbeth. But in illustration of the Romeo and Juliet we have not only the latest text of this beautiful play; but, as "the text of the First Quarto differs so widely from that of later and more perfect editions, that it is impossible to record the results of a collation in foot-notes," the editors have wisely reprinted it entire. This will be a great boon to those who believe that, in the earliest quarto, we have a fairly accurate version of the play as it was first written. We need not repeat our commendation of the labour and pains which the editors of the Cambridge Shakespeare have bestowed upon the work, but we will furnish one small proof of it. Most of our readers know what discussions have been published on the well-known line—

"That runaways eyes may wink."

The note on that line in the book before us enumerates no less than twenty-nine new readings, which have been proposed by as many critics.

Moxon's Miniature Poets. A Selection from the Works of Robert Browning. (Moxon & Co.)

As we learn from a brief Preface to this beautiful selection of Mr. Browning's Poems, it owes its origin to a wish on the part of Messrs. Chapman & Hall, "that a little gathering from the lightest of them should be tied together after the pretty device of his old publishers Messrs. Moxon. This is good for all parties; but more especially for the admirers of Mr. Browning, whose numbers will probably be largely increased by means of this handsome little volume falling into the hands of many readers, to whom Mr. Browning is at present known more by his fame than by that which earned it.

Messrs. Bell & Daldy announce, in a series of twenty photographs from the best engravings of his most celebrated pictures, "The Great Works of Raphael," with the Life by Vasari, translated with Notes and Illustrations by Mrs. Jonathan Foster, and an appendix containing a complete list of the authenticated works of Raphael; "Shadows of the Old Booksellers," by Charles Knight; "The Odyssey of Homer," rendered into English blank verse by George Musgrave; a second volume of "The Decline of the Roman Empire," by George Long; "Common Words with Curious Derivations," by Archdeacon Smith; and many other works of interest.

FRENCH ARMORIAL.—Our genealogical readers will be glad to hear that Messrs. Didot have announced a "reproduction textuelle" of the original edition (1788—1768) of the "Armorial Général, ou Registres de la Noblesse de France, par Louis Pierre d'Hozier et D'Hozier de Serigny, Juges d'Armes de France." Prospectuses may, we believe, be obtained from Messrs. Williams & Norgate.

PORTRAIT OF TENNYSON.—The admirers of the Poet Laureate will be glad to learn, that a striking and very effective photograph of him has just been issued by Messrs. Marion.

THE EXHIBITION OF MINIATURES, at the South Kensington Museum, will be closed on the 31st of this month.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES
WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Numbers, to be sent direct to the gentleman by whom they are required, whose name and address are given for that purpose:—

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, Nos. 556 to 560, 562, 563, 564, 1005, 1006, 1009, 1146.

Wanted by Mr. J. W. Diboll, 12, Howard Street, Great Yarmouth.

Notices to Correspondents.

Notwithstanding we have enlarged our present Number to thirty-two pages, we have been compelled to postpone until next week many articles of great interest among others—Inedited Letters of William Roscoe, Julius and the Duke of Grafton, Pope's Letters in the British Museum, as well as Replies to several Correspondents.

A. O. V. F. The early Petitions to the House of Commons are not in existence, nor can any further information respecting them be found than is contained in the Journals.

A CENTENARIAN. Would Mr. Hughes kindly procure evidence when and where Sally Clarke, now supposed to be in her 100th or 101st year, was born?

BROWN, VISCOUNT MONTAGU (ante p. 223).—Mr. Selby has written to us enclosing evidence of the death of John Browne, the first claimant, in Chelmsford Gaol in 1848, and re-stating certain particulars respecting the sudden death of the second claimant in 1846, and completing of their omission from his former communication. These particulars had no direct bearing upon the case; they were therefore omitted for reasons which, we are sure, our readers generally will recognise and approve.

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d.; or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 6d.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for STAMPER COPY, for SIX MONTHS forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly Index) is 11s. 6d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMITH, 16, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., where also all COMMUNICATIONS FOR THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

ANOTHER CURE OF COUGH BY DR. LUGGER'S PULMONARY WAFERS.—"S. Wilson Terrace, St. Leonard's Street, Bromley, E.—I can myself testify that they have relieved me of a most severe cough, so bad that I was unable to lie down, and I shall do my best to recommend them.—W. NICHOLAS." They give instant relief to asthma, consumption, coughs, colds, and all disorders of the breath, throat, and lungs. Price 1s. 1/6—2s. 6d., and 5s. 6d. per box. Sold by all Druggists.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 200.

Palmerston, 345.

NOTES:—National Portrait Exhibition, ib.—Pope Manuscripts, 346—Autograph Letters of William Roscoe, &c., 347—Ricetta Anticolerica, ib.—Massinger and Molière—Wickham and Barlow Families—Heel-maker—Gawain Douglas—By and by, 347.

QUERIES:—"Dilamgerbendi," 349—Portraits of Dr. Beattie: Author of "The Minstrel," ib.—Ancient Wood Carving—Arms of Thomas, Earl of Arran—Michael William Balfe—The Constellations—Gilray's "Salute"—Glamorgan—Pedigree—Sir Thomas Gravener, Knt.—Holland's "Holie Historie"—MS. Copies of the Ancient Italian Version of the Bible—David Hackston—Thomas Lediard, Father and Son, &c., 351.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Dog Jennings—Shirley's Dirge—"The Merry Beggars"—Embassies—Proverb, 353.

REPLIES:—Junius r. Duke of Grafton's Grant, 355—The Bed and Stature of Og, 356—"The Christian Year," 357—The Word Hour, 358—"The Black Dwarf," ib.—Battle of Toulouse, 359—Incised Monumental Slabs—Heraldic Puzzle—Meeting Eyebrows—Beltopper—Mrs. Hey of Leeds—Philological Society's Dictionary, &c., 360.

Notes on Books, &c.

PALMERSTON.

ANOTHER gone of those whose name

Has thrilled our ears from early youth;

Another passed of noblest fame,

For honour, energy, and truth;

Another from the stately roll

Of England's Nestors now has gone;

Another, whose exalted soul

Has swayed the land from cot to throne:

And yet, though fourscore years had pressed

His honour'd brow, he still was young;

Fresh both in head, and kindly breast,

With vivid thought, and ready tongue.

His playful wit, his solid sense,

His cheery word, his open brow;

His wisdom calm, without pretence;

His manly heart—where are they now?

They're treasured in each loyal breast,

That loves Old England and her weal,

What creed political professed,

Before what altar they may kneel:

They're treasured in each bosom kind,

Which prays that strife and war may cease;

They're treasured in each lofty mind,

That yearns for science and for peace.

And beauteous Italy shall weep,

When sad resounds the funeral knell,

And deep in her remembrance keep

The praise of one who loved her well.

And noble France the head shall bend,

And sorrow o'er the statesman's bier,

And pay the honest generous friend

The graceful tribute of a tear.

And low shall bow each British head,

And every breast with grief shall sigh

As slowly the illustrious dead

To his last home is passing by.

Notes.

NATIONAL PORTRAIT EXHIBITION.

The "arrangements" approved for this Exhibition make "eminence or distinction attained in England" by the subject of any portrait, the test for its admission into the Exhibition. Allow me to inquire what is the precise meaning to be attached in this place to the word "England." Does it comprise Scotland and Ireland? Does it mean the United Kingdom? I do not suggest this question in any adverse or captious spirit—far from it—or with any nonsensical feeling respecting justice to any country whatever, but merely from a consideration of what portraits would be admitted or excluded by a large or by a narrow construction of the word. The number of additional pictures which a large construction would admit would not be considerable, but it would comprise portraits which every one would like to see at Kensington.

All the rest of these "arrangements" will, we may hope, be construed in a wide and liberal manner. The interests of Art have been rightly considered, so also should be those of Literature; and any portraits which would be useful or interesting in a literary point of view should be admitted. Take, for example, a portrait with which I am acquainted, of Louis Frederick, Duke of Wirtemberg, whose visit to England is one of the subjects dealt with in Mr. Rye's recent excellent volume, England as seen by Foreigners. This duke is also alluded to by Shakespeare, as Mr. Charles Knight pointed out, under the title of "Cousin Garmombles." The "eminence and distinction" which his Highness attained in England during his few weeks' visit was not of the kind which seems to be contemplated by the "arrangements," but many persons would desire to see a portrait of this "Duke de Jarmenie"—why should they not? Surely in a very proper sense it is an illustration of English history.

If it be right to insist upon "eminence or distinction" (by which latter, I suppose is meant an inferior kind of eminence) attained in Great Britain, as a test for the admissibility of portraits of natives, surely such a rule should be relaxed with regard to those of foreigners.

Practically let us hope the Committee will admit portraits of all persons of eminence or distinction who are natives of the United Kingdom, and of all persons born in other countries who ever visited this country, or resided in it, or whose names have figured in our history or literature.

You, Mr. . . .
mission of . . .
mitted . . .
exam . . .
agree wi . . .
any part . . .

without them. But when you descend to "English Moll," you will probably find some of the Committee (fearful lest they should vulgarise the Exhibition), not prepared to follow you. Still, a Chamber of Horrors, or collection of low popular celebrities, thrown together in a compartment by themselves, would form a very useful and an extremely popular portion of the Exhibition. And if any one objects to the admission of such a pack of rogues as would thus be gathered together, let them bear in mind that rogues cannot be kept out. It was among the popular jokes at the time of Lord Macclesfield's trial, that Staffordshire had the distinction of having given birth to three of the greatest rogues in England—Jonathan Wild, Jack Sheppard, and Lord Chancellor Macclesfield. The last of these would no doubt be admitted to the Portrait Exhibition with all the honours. When the door is thrown open for his lordship, it would be rather hard not to allow the more vulgar rogues to steal in.

JOHN BRUCE.

5, Upper Gloucester Street, Dorset Square.

[Agreeing as we do most heartily in every point contended for by our valued correspondent Mr. BRUCE, and hoping as we do with him to see in the projected Exhibition a portrait of every one who has acquired sufficient eminence or notoriety to find a place in any popular History of England, we trust that no fear of vulgarising the Exhibition will induce the Committee to form a separate Collection of the low popular celebrities. Such portraits should be distributed in their proper chronological or historical division of the Series.

Take for instance, the notorious personage to whom (having Swift and Butler's allusions in our memory) we referred as an illustration last week. If tradition is to be believed, she might well be placed beside General Fairfax; whose pocket, Granger tells us, she picked on Hounslow Heath. A tradition which we remember to have seen thus commented upon by one of the most profound and original writers of the present day:—

"The authority for her picking Fairfax's pocket at Hounslow?—Fairfax did once rendezvous at Hounslow (3rd Aug. 1647); but it was on horseback, amid kettle-drums and cymbals, with the two runaway Speakers and manifold dignitaries round him,—a bad opportunity for Moll: but one would like to know that she did verily pick his pocket—that all were busy in their vocation then?"

Can we doubt that the writer of this would like to see Moll's portrait?

POPE MANUSCRIPTS.

In the British Museum are several unpublished letters addressed by Pope to his friend Bethel, the Yorkshire squire, commemorated in his poetry. A few extracts may interest literary students and general readers:—

Habit.—"Habit is the mistress of the world, and (what ever is generally said) has more sway than opinion. Yours confines you to the woods of Yorkshire, mine to the banks of the Thames; and yet I think I have less dependence on either, and others less on me, than most men I have ever known, so that I should be free. So should a female friend of ours [Martha Blount, whom Pope wished to separate from her sister Thea were fond of gaiety and town-dress. I wish I could not say only obeys but suffers under ship-plead in vain. Out of it no redemption."

Dean Swift.—"I've lately Dean Swift, who says he will small penny story books of [What a pity he did not carry]

Pope confined to the Banks you for your thoughts of me tied down from any distant I must be like a carrier's horse life, as you know, is perpet this place [Twickenham] an horizon my course is confined here, and I shall soon take up or at Westminster, as it happens

Pope's Moral Epistles.—"I in verse upon the nature and social affection, and am subject is the true happiness prove the best men the happy should pull off your hat to happiest man in the universe all diminish that felicity if the King does not go his part and that your too much deprived of the joy his aspect we think the country would be the jesty's gracious countenance I Horace said of his Augustus—

Instar veris enim,
Affulsit populo, gratia
Et soles melius

I fear the people of your health and spirits this year in waters."

Duty.—"No man can have friends who wants it for his Country Fourth Book of "The Dunciad" has been writing a Poem travelling. You have made it when it was for a good reason tended with a good effect, which I have satirised it for. I little to have drawn the whole picture formerly did the Dunces of a shall whenever I publish the two, medallists, Cicero's schools, universities, even the masons, will encompass me more Concurrere bellum atque science, a bold spirit, a zeal pence of pretenders to science literary, moral, or political these will support me."

Lady Mary Wortley Montagu fame of my old acquaintance Italy. Neither you delight in the particulars which acquire wish you had just told me if it cious or amatory, and which I last."

Strawberries.—"I'm going strawberries, which are to be apples: they say they resemble do our gardeners say to this day

E animato di speranza,
Guida pur con gran costanza,
Signor—"Miserere mei."
Poscia—"Fiat Voluntas Dei."

II.

MASSINGER AND MOLIÈRE.—Between a passage of Massinger's Emperor of the East (Act IV. Sc. 4), and of Molière's Malade Imaginaire (Act III. Sc. 14), there is a similarity so close that it seems worth noting:—

"Empiric. For your own sake I most heartily wish that you had now all the diseases, maladies, and infirmities upon you that were ever remembered by old Galen, Hippocrates, or the later and more admired Paracelsus.

"Paulinus. For your good wish, I thank you.

"Empiric. Take me with you, I beseech your good lordship. I urged it that your joy in being certainly and suddenly freed from them may be the greater, and my not-to-be-paralleled skill the more remarkable. The cure of the gout—a toy! without boast be it said, my cradle-practice! The cancer, the fistula, the dropsy, consumption of lungs and kidneys, hurts in the brain, heart, or liver, are things worthy of my opposition," &c.—Emperor of the East, Act IV. Sc. 4.

"Toinette. Je dédaigne de m'amuser à ce menu fatras de maladies ordinaires, à ces bagatelles de rhumatismes, &c. . . . Je veux des maladies d'importance, de bonnes fièvres continues, avec des transports au cerveau, &c. . . . c'est là que je me plais, c'est là que je triomphe; et je voudrais, monsieur, que vous eussiez toutes les maladies que je viens de dire . . . pour vous montrer l'excellence de mes remèdes et l'envie que j'aurais de vous rendre service.

"Argan. Je vous suis obligé, monsieur, des bontés que vous avez pour moi."—Malade Imaginaire, Act III. Sc. 14.

JOHN ADDIS.

WICKHAM AND BARLOW FAMILIES.—I send the enclosed inscription from the church at Simonburn, in Northumberland, as being possibly of interest to some of your readers. It is given in the Transactions of the Tyneside Naturalists' Field Club, vol. iv. p. 81:—

"Here lies the body of ANNABELLA SCOTT,

Who departed this life Jan. 28th, 1779, aged 73 years.

She was mother to James Scott, D.D., Rector of this parish,

And grand-daughter to Thomas Wickham, Dean of York,
The grandson of William Wickham, Bishop of Winchester,

Who married Antonia Barlow, one of the 5 daughters of WILLIAM BARLOW, Bishop of Chichester,

All of whom were married to Bishops, viz.:—

One to Tobias, Archbishop of York;

Another to Wickham, Bishop of Winchester;

A third to Orton, Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield;

A fourth to Westphaling, Bishop of Hereford;

And a fifth to Day, Bishop of Chichester.

It is remarkable that

WILLIAM BARLOW was the first English Bishop that ever married."

P. J.

HEEL-MAKER.—In going over the interesting church of Ladbury the other day, I noticed a gravestone on the floor to the memory of one

William Russell, "heel-maker," who died 1795. The old curiosities of the place—maker; and, in answer to that the "heel-maker" high wooden heels formerly added, that he had fetched away from this person's that a small market town have had such a division of trades as this "specialty" Is the word well known together new.

GAWAIN DOUGLAS.—In Douglas, included in the men, by the Society of Antiquaries, the following account of him

"He was interred in the side of the remains of Thomas in Ireland, from whose tomb borrowed, to inscribe a short Douglas."

Probably this would prove of last year. As the complete, I should like to have been taken towards reproduction. It would be a pity to let who occupies so prominent literary history of our country

BY AND BY.—This phrase explanation was given in former days to have been time, and in both cases to any interval." When applied (as in the examples there "close by," "hard by," it certainly signified "at a without loss of time."

We use it now-a-days time; but it is worth observation a sense exactly contrary will go by and by" near go immediately," but three "I will go immediately." have four passages in our New Testament:—

"When persecution ariseth offended."—Matt. xiii. 21.

"I will that thou give me the head of John the Baptist."—Mt.

"Which of you having a seecattle will say unto him by as from the field, Go and sit down ing to the punctuation in Bishop ought to be," will say unto him the field, Go and sit down by xvii. 7.

"These things must first come not by and by."—Lk. xxi. 9.

In all these instances the

"at once," "instantly." Bishop Latimer, in his Second Sermon on the Lord's Prayer, uses it in precisely the same sense:—

"There are some, again, who when they are in trouble call upon God; but he comes not by and by, intending to prove their patience: they perceiving he comes not at the first call, give over by and by—they will no more call upon him."

"By" (whether of time or place) meaning "near." It was simply repeated in order to signify "as near as possible." This, I think, is the history of "by and by." J. E. J.

Queries.

"DILAMGERBENDI."

The Isle of Wight is very generally known to have had anciently the name Vecto or Vectis; can any light be thrown on an indication, much more rarely apprehended, that it once was known by the name Dilamgerbendi?

It is recorded of St. David, in the Lives of the Fathers, by Alban Butler, that, "being ordained priest, he retired into the Isle of Wight." On comparing this statement with older sources, we find in Giraldus Cambrensis, "In Vectam insulam profectus;" in the Acta Sanctorum (per Colganum), "in insulam Withland;" but in the larger work, Acta Sanctorum, "Inde profectus, Paulinum, S. Gennani discipulam, adiit doctorem, qui in insulâ nomine Dilamgerbendi gratam Deo vitam ducebat." In a Life of St. David (Capgrave) we have it "in insulâ quâdam;" the difficulty having apparently been encountered and parried.

There is an edition of Butler at the British Museum, which may be consulted, in which he, also, affirms that the island was called Dilamgerbendi. I was unable, in a recent search there, to find that edition; but a friend who is still living, found it there in a Butler forty years ago. I did, however, at my own visit, satisfy myself that the same island is intended under all the four designations.

After these few observations, I beg leave to submit the following questions to yourself and readers:—

1. Is there aught which can be adduced from ancient writings which will assist in establishing the fact that the Isle of Wight was ever known by the name Dilamgerbendi?

2. Can the degree of probability which the extracts given above bring forward, that the island bore that name, be overborne by any evidence that any other island in Christendom was so named, in which St. David might have, also, for a time resided? If so, let the two opposite statements be compared and balanced.

3. Can any light be obtained in the matter etymologically? Will any Celtic scholar, or one conversant with British antiquarian researches, suggest to us the probable interpretation of the word Dilamgerbendi? If it be any clue to such an explication, I would venture to submit that, as the word, by its length, must most probably be received to be a compound term, the latter part of it appears to afford some corroboration, in connection with the Isle of Wight, in the circumstance that the part of Hampshire opposite the island, and onward to Purbeck, was occupied, at those periods, by the Bindocladii; and that the Bindon Hill at West Lulworth, and Bindon Abbey at Wool appear to have had a similar origin of their names. It is a characteristic part of the word, inasmuch as even so far back as the Sanskrit, the same letters, B N D, were used as we use them to express the idea to bind: bandana, a binding, bondage, captivity.

May the island, possibly, have been a seagirt prison—have had its Parkhurst then?

W. S. J.

PORTRAITS OF DR. BEATTIE: AUTHOR OF "THE MINSTREL."

I have in my possession the following engraved portraits of Dr. Beattie, concerning which I send a few notes in the hope that some of your many readers may be able to answer one or two queries which have baffled me hitherto:—

1. The well-known quarto steel engraving of the allegorical picture by Sir Joshua Reynolds containing the portrait of Beattie in his robes as Doctor of Laws, with the Angel of Truth driving Error and Scepticism to the shades below. A mezzotint of this fine painting was executed by Watson when Sir Joshua had finished it. This I have not seen. The print in my possession is that prefixed to the fourth edition of Sir Wm. Forbes's Life of Beattie, published in 1806. I have also a large photograph of the painting as exhibited in Aberdeen at the meeting of the British Association, in 1858, I think. This painting is the original of most of the modern engravings of Beattie, but, strange enough, not till quite recently.

2. A copper-plate bust, octavo size, the face three-quarters front, the fingers of the right-hand resting on an 8vo volume standing on end. The face is longer in proportion to its breadth than in No. 1, and looks to the left, whereas No. 1 looks to the right. The hair is the same in both. The dress is a plain black suit with white neck-cloth. The portrait is surrounded by an oval frame miniature size, and below is engraved in capitals "James Beattie, LL.D." The general effect is spirited and pleasing. It would seem to have been executed about the same time as Sir Joshua's painting, though Beattie seems much more youthful than in it. Beattie was made LL.D. in 1778, and in August of the same year Sir Joshua painted his picture.

Can any of your correspondents inform me as to the painter or engraver of this portrait? Was it published in any magazine, or was it prefixed to any of the editions of The Essay on Truth? The print I have is inserted in the first edition of Beattie's Essays on Poetry and Music. It is possible it also may have been painted by Sir Joshua. Sir Wm. Forbes says (Life of Beattie, vol. i. p. 274, 4to ed.) —

"Sir Joshua Reynolds requested Dr. Beattie to sit for his picture, which that eminent master of painting executed in a manner that did equal credit to himself, and to Dr. Beattie. For, not contented with his portrait merely in the usual form, Sir Joshua, whose classical taste is well known, himself suggested the idea of an allegorical painting, which he actually finished, of admirable design, and exquisite skill in the execution."

It would be interesting to know the history of this engraving, as it seems the only one published book size during Beattie's lifetime. The painting from which No. 1 is engraved was executed when Beattie was thirty-eight years of age; No. 2 represents a man ten years younger. It is probably an engraving made about 1773 from a miniature painted about the time Beattie became professor in 1761.

3. Bust in profile, miniature size, prefixed to Edinburgh editions of his Poems, published in 1805 and 1806. Beattie is represented with wig and queue, close buttoned coat, and white necktie. There were rival engravings for rival editions of the poems. Freeman engraved for the fine 4to edition printed by Ballantyne, and dedicated to Sir Wm. Forbes. In Bell and Bradfute's edition, the engraving is "by J. Stewart, from an original in the possession of Dr. Beattie." Who was the painter of this, and when was it executed?

4. A bust, miniature size, and three-fourths front, engraved by James Heath, published Feb. 28, 1805, and prefixed to Chalmers's edition of the poems of 1800. It is without the doctor's robes; the head and figure more massive, and seemingly older than No. 1, though the general attitude is the same in both. Is this a different picture, or is it only Reynolds, altered to suit the fancy of the engraver? Chalmers knew Beattie well. Could Heath have been guided by Chalmers's hints and recollections of Beattie's personal appearance? This engraving forms the groundwork of a good many since. Even the engraving for the Aldine edition of 1831 has Heath's head, though restoring the Doctor's robes. I would be obliged by the early insertion of these notes and queries, and still more if some of your kind correspondents would aid me in resolving my difficulties.

J. S. G.

Dalkeith.

ANCIENT WOOD CARVING. — An ancient panel of wood carving in our possession represents the following: — The foreground is occupied by a patriarchal figure; supporting, with both arms raised aloft, an ark or chest. In the middle distance is the representation of Noah's ark, resting upon a rock. The waters in the distance seem to be subsiding. Trees, rocks, and verdure, a small boat with sail (!), and distant towers, constitute the other materials of the design. When purchased some years ago of a collector, it was said to be Moses rearing the Ark.

May I ask your numerous readers if there is any tradition, or legend, which can account for this curious representation?

The smaller ark which the figure supports, appears to be a model of the larger one in the picture.

W. L. S.

Kington Magna.

ARMS OF THOMAS, EARL OF ARRAN. — Can any of your readers inform me what were the arms and motto used by Thomas Boyd, Earl of Arran, son of Robert Lord Boyd, of Kilmarnock (direct descendant of Simon, founder of the family in the twelfth century)? He married, in 1468, the Princess Mary, sister to King James III., and died in exile at Antwerp. I always understood them to be: A shield azure, a fess chequy, argent, gules. But, as another member of the family uses a different crest, I should like to know which is right.

T. BOYD.

MICHAEL WILLIAM BALFE. — In The Imperial Dictionary of Universal Biography (vol. i. p. 357), an interesting sketch of Mr. Balfé has been given. As therein stated, he "was born at Dublin, May 15, 1808." It may have been so; but there is an impression on my mind that this eminent musician was born, not in Dublin, but in the parish of Donnybrook, near that city. Having a particular object in view, I am anxious to be rightly informed.*

ABEBA.

THE CONSTELLATIONS. — The scientific treatises on astronomy are silent as to the origin and true significance of the (evidently cabalistic) figures denoting the constellations on old fashioned celestial maps. A friend of mine has worked out a strange theory respecting those figures, which connects them in a thousand curious ways with the ancient mythologies and the occult lore of the old Chaldean sages, the Egyptian priests, the Persian Magi, and antiquated wizardry generally. Can any of your readers direct me to an accessible book which treats of the mystic meaning of the constellations?

D. BLAIR.

Melbourne.

[* In the biographical notice of M. W. Balfé in the Dublin University Magazine, xxxviii. 66, it is stated, that he was born in Dublin in 1808.—Ed.]

GILRAY'S "SALUTE."—Among Gilray's caricatures is one, "The Salute," representing three officers, the youngest bearing a colour, marching past a mounted officer. Can any one inform me who these are intended for? SEBASTIAN.

GLAMORGANSHIRE PEDIGREES.—Rees Meyrick, Clerk of the Peace for Glamorganshire in 1578, was the author of a volume of pedigrees termed the "Cotterell Book." This manuscript was in the possession of the late Earl of Clarendon (note in Stradling Correspondence, edited by the Rev. John Montgomery Traherne, M.A., F.R.S., F.S.A., 1840, p. 108-9). Can, and will any correspondent of "N. & Q." oblige by stating, has such "Cotterell Book" been printed, or where is it at present? And if it may be inspected, and through what means? GLWYSIG.

SIR THOMAS GRAVENER, KNT. (1st S. iii. 75, 122.)—Who was this "worthy knight," whose epitaph was inserted in 1st S. iii. 57? Was he a member of the Staffordshire and Shropshire family of that name, or should we read Grovenor? H. S. G.

HOLLAND'S "HOLIE HISTORIE."—None of your correspondents upon the subject of "Biblical Versifications" have, I think, noticed The Holie Historie of Our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, in Meter, by Robert Holland, 1594. If this work, as a whole, resembles the extract given in the Parker Society's Specimens of Early English Poetry, it must be a pretty close paraphrase of the New Testament story. I have never yet met with a copy of the book; and should be glad if any of your readers could inform me in what public, or accessible private library, I could see one?† e.

MS. COPIES OF THE ANCIENT ITALIC VERSION OF THE BIBLE.—The Rev. A. Butler mentions, in his Life of St. Jerome, (Sept. 30) —

"that four MS. copies of all the Gospels, in the old Italic Version, have been found: one at Corbie, a second at Vercelli (in the handwriting of St. Eusebius, Bishop of that city), a third at Brescia, and a fourth at Verona. They have all been accurately printed together by Blanchini, at Rome, in 1748, in folio. We may hope to see the ancient Vulgate or Italic entirely restored."—Note.

Can any of your correspondents inform me when, and by whom, these MSS. were discovered? J. DALTON.

Norwich.

DAVID HACKSTON.—I am anxious to get further information about David Hackston (or Hackstoun as the name is sometimes spelt), one of the Scottish Covenanters, than is to be found either in The Cloud of Witnesses, or the Scots Worthies. In the former work he says in a letter to N—, a Christian friend, p. 68: —

"He told me that the whole council found I was a man of great parts, and also of good birth; I replied, for my birth I was related to the best in the kingdom."

I am anxious to know whether it is known what this relationship was of which he speaks. In Scots Worthies, p. 367, it is stated that he was a brother-in-law to Balfour of Kinloch (whether Hackston had married a sister of Balfour, or vice versa, is not apparent). If I mistake not, I have read that this Balfour, or his father, had a title taken from him on account of his taking up arms against the government. Can this be the relationship of which he speaks in his letter? His letters show him to have been a good man, and respected even by his enemies, and a braver never breathed, as shown by the part he took in the battles of Drumclog, Airmoss, and Bothwell Bridge, at the latter of which he was severely wounded and taken prisoner. If further proof is required it is furnished in the way he met his trial and execution at the Cross of Edinburgh, on June 30, 1680. If you or any of your numerous correspondents can answer these queries, and give any information not generally known about this remarkable man I will be very glad. DAVID WALKER.

Prospect Villa, Tranmere Park, Birkenhead.

THOMAS LEDIARD, FATHER AND SON.—These persons were successively agents and surveyors of Westminster Bridge. The father, who was F.R.S., wrote the Naval History of England, the Life of John, Duke of Marlborough, and other works; and died in June 1743, æt. fifty-eight. The son published, in 1754, a "Charge to the Grand Jury of the City and Liberty of Westminster;" and died at Hamburg, Dec. 15, 1759. Watt confounds the two. The Rev. Charles Hore, in his recently published Brief Biographical Dictionary, makes an astounding mistake respecting the father (whom he calls Ledyard), placing his birth in 1482, and his death in Sept. 13, 1544. S. Y. R.

BRASS OF SIR JOHN LOWE.—A brass of extraordinary beauty is to be seen in Battle church, Sussex—a knight in armour, with helmet and sword, his feet standing on a lion. By the inscription underneath, which contains a premonitory address to the visitor who gazes on the tomb, we learn his name was John Lowe, and that he died in 1426.

I was unable to copy the quaint language of the original, and an imperfect translation is alone found in the guide books. Nor can I at this place refer to the valuable publications of the Sussex Archaeological Society, or I might probably find out some real, or at least conjectural history of this knight.

[* The "Cotterell Book" has not been printed. The MS. is most probably in the library of the present Earl of Clarendon.]

[† This volume is so extremely rare, that it may almost be doubted whether more than one copy is known. For notice of it consult Brydges's Restituta, ii. 163; iii. 137; and the Bibliotheca Anglo-Poetica, p. 173.—ED.]

Last week I saw the tomb of Bishop Lowe in Rochester Cathedral. He came from my own county of Worcester, where a great and distinguished family, now extinct, once bore that name. May I inquire if the Sussex antiquaries enrol that name also among their extinct families? and if this John Lowe, whose tomb has survived the destruction that has overwhelmed the glories of Battle, and its Norman Abbey, is known in history otherwise than by the graceful figure that adorns his monument?

THOMAS E. WINNINGTON.

St. Leonards.

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE WILLS.—In what office are the wills of persons who resided at Blythe, in the county of Nottingham, during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, to be found?

K. P. D. E.

OLD PAINTINGS AND DRAWINGS IN SCOTLAND. After a residence of twelve years in London, enjoying all the pleasures of art in its various phases (drawings by the old masters predominating), may I ask you whether there is any museum, or like institution, in Edinburgh, Glasgow, or Aberdeen? I am going to reside finally in Edinburgh, but do not mind a jaunt to Glasgow or Aberdeen, to see and study such, similar to what I do at our British Museum, the Taylor Museum, Oxford, and sometimes at Paris. I have met with many fine old drawings in all the places; and many very inferior, of course. Indeed I may say I have pretty well seen the treasures of all that interested me as far the old masters are concerned, and of course largely of the modern school, as well as fine old engravings. As "N. & Q." is the only channel, I appeal to it, I hope not in vain.

A LOVER OF ANCIENT ART.

PATRICK PANTER, D.D., Professor of Divinity, and Principal of the New College at Aberdeen, left Scotland when the Presbyterian party became dominant, and became Rector of Holdgate, in Shropshire, where it is said he died. He was an able Latin poet, and published a work in defence of the rights of the Church in 1650. The object of this communication is to ascertain when his death took place.

S. Y. R.

PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S ENGLISH DICTIONARY.—I am anxious to complete my set, if deficient, of the prospectuses—bases of comparison, word lists, &c.—issued to readers for, and sub-editors of, the different Parts of the Dictionary of the English Language, now preparing for the Philological Society. Will some one who has taken part in the scheme, from the commencement, kindly furnish me with a complete list?

AIKEN IRVINE.

Kilbride Bray.

PAPERS OF DR. RICHARD POCOCKE.—Can you or any of your readers give me any information as to the papers, and more especially the epigraphic collections, of Dr. Richard Pococke, the well-known Eastern traveller, who died Bishop of Meath in 1765? Have they been preserved; and if so, where? The MSS. of his gift in the British Museum do not seem to include his own epigraphic collections.

W. P. D.
Glasgow.

POPULATION OF LONDON IN EARLY TIMES.—Where can I find any fairly accurate statement of the amount of the population of London in the several centuries from Edward I. to the Revolution of 1688? If there are no fairly accurate statements in existence, what would be the probable amount of the population during the great plague years 1348, 1563, 1593, 1603, 1625, and 1665?

JUXTA TURRIM.

QUOTATIONS.—I should be glad to be helped to the source of any of the following quotations, which I have long had in a common-place book with "Anon" appended to each:—

"As having clasp'd a rose
Within my palm, the rose being ta'en away,
My hand retains a little breath of sweet;
So may man's trunk, his spirit slipp'd away,
Hold still a faint perfume of his sweet guest."

"Aspidē quid pejus?—tigris. Quid tigris?—demon.
Dæmonē quid?—mulier. Quid mulier?—nihil."

Epitaph on Sir John Calf, who died young.

"O Deus omnipotens, vituli miserere Johannis, Quem Mors preveniens noluit esse bovem."

[In Camden's Remains. See "N. & Q." 3rd S. v. 215.]

Epitaph supposed to be addressed by a Young Wife to her surviving Husband.

"Immatura peris, sed tu felicior, amos Vive tuos, conjux optime, vive meos."

"Quid est aliud de philosophia tractare, nisi veræ religionis, qua summa principalis causa Deus, et humiliter colitur, et rationaliter investigatur, regulæ exponere? Conficitur inde veram esse philosophiam veram religionem, conversamque veram religionem esse veram philosophiam."

H. A. KENNEDY.

Gay Street, Bath.

Some years ago I met with this quotation in the columns of a newspaper:—

"And while he was the Trojan eyeing,
He grin'd to keep himself from crying."

It reads very like a couplet from Hudibras, but I do not find it there. Can any of your readers refer me to its source?

JAMES PITT.

Where does the following line occur:—

"And lonely want retires to die."

G. J. COOPER.

What great French astronomer said, and where is the saying.—

"I have found in the heavens eternal laws, but I have not found God."

Where does Lord Bolingbroke say that the belief in revelation has been gradually decaying since the revival of learning? Bishop Warburton attributes the remark to him.

Whence are the lines (quoted in Dr. Newman's Loss and Gain)—

"Each in his hidden sphere of bliss or woe,
Our hermit spirits dwell?"

CYRIL.

DR. SMITH, FOUNDER OF BRAZENOSE.—Who was the father of Dr. William Smith, Bishop of Lincoln, the founder of Brazenose College, Oxford? There are various discordant pedigrees of the Smiths of Curdley, co. Lancashire, in the Harl. MS., 6150. In one (the Visitation ped., anno 1567,) he is called son of Robert Smith of the Peele, in the parish of Prescott, Gent.; in another, fourth son of Henry Smith of Curdley; and in a third, son of a John Smith. It is stated, in Burke's Commoners, that Dr. Smith had two sons; from one of whom sprang the Smiths of Hough, co. Chester; and from the other, the Smiths of Newcastle-under-Lyme, Staffordshire. But was not the Bishop a Roman Catholic prelate, and, consequently, a batchelor? The pedigree in the Staffordshire Visitation of 1614, which is cited by Burke as his authority, commences thus:—

"Smith, Bishop of Lincoln.

Edmund Smith = of Chester.	John Smith = 2. brother.
↓	↓

It will be observed, that no line of descent is drawn from the Bishop. Are we to infer that his name was merely placed there to indicate some unascertained relationship? or, were Edmund and John his natural sons? H. S. G.

SERMONS ON TWO ARTICLES OF THE CREED.—I respectfully invite your correspondents to supply me with references to printed sermons, emanating from any Christian community, on Descendit ad inferos, and the Vitam eternam. Darling has been consulted, and Watt. Has any bibliographer treated the subject more at large?

A. CHALLSTETH.

1, Verulam Buildings.

IZAACK WALTON.—What lover of nature, or piscatory brother, has said of The Compleat Angler, that it will hold its place in our literature "as long as the white-thorn blossoms in the hedgerows, and the lark carols in the cloud"? P

2. To whom are we indebted for an excellent poem on Izaak Walton, printed in Sir Humphrey Davy's Salmonia, edit. 1829, p. 4, signed "C. C. 1812"? Sir Humphrey states that it is by "a noble lady, long distinguished at court for pre-eminent beauty and grace, and whose mind possesses undying charms."

A HERMIT AT BARNSBURY.

WILLS OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.—Where should I look for a will made in Devon or Somerset in the beginning of the seventeenth century? Are they preserved anywhere in such a state as to give an inquirer a chance of finding the will of a country gentleman of that date without much expense? DEVONIENSIS.

Queries with Answers.

DOG JENNINGS.—I should be obliged if you could give me any account of a well-known collector of works of virtù in his day—Dog Jennings; as also why he received the sobriquet?

A. B.

[A well-written account of this remarkable and eccentric character would be a literary curiosity in its way. Henry Constantine Jennings was born in 1731, and was the son of a gentleman possessed of a large estate at Shiplake in Oxfordshire. He was educated at Westminster school, and at the age of seventeen became an ensign in the first regiment of Foot-guards. He held the commission but a short time, and on resigning it, went to Italy in company with Lord Monthermer, son of the Duke of Montagu.

While at Rome, our connoisseur commenced his first collection of virtù, and ever after obtained the coarse and vulgar name of "Dog Jennings" in consequence of a little anecdote, which shall be given in his own words: "I happened one day to be strolling along the streets of Rome, and perceiving the shop of a statuary in an obscure street, I entered it, and began to look around for any curious production of art. I at length perceived something uncommon at least; but being partly concealed behind a heap of rubbish, I could not contemplate it with any degree of accuracy. After all impediments had been at length removed, the marble statue I had been poking for was dragged into open day, it proved to be a huge but fine dog—and a fine dog it was, and a lucky dog was I to discover and to purchase it. On turning it round, I perceived it was without a tail—this gave me a hint. I also saw that the limbs were finely proportioned; that the figure was noble; that the sculpture, in short, was worthy of the best age of Athens; and that it must be coeval with Alcibiades, whose favourite dog it certainly was. I struck a bargain instantly on the spot for 400 scudi; and as the muzzle alone was somewhat damaged, I paid the artist a trifle more for repairing it. It was carefully packed, and being sent to England after me, by the time it reached my house in Oxfordshire, it had just cost me 80*l*. I wish all my other bargains had been like it, for it was exceedingly admired, as I well knew it must be by the connoisseurs, by more than one of whom I was bid 1000*l*. for my purchase. In truth, by a person sent, I believe, from Blenheim, I was offered 1400*l*. But I would not part with my dog; I had bought it for myself, and I liked to contemplate his fine proportions, and admire him at my leisure, for he was doubly dear to me, as being my own property, and of my own selection."

On April 3, 1778, at the Literary Club founded by Sir Joshua Reynolds, Jennings's dog was the topic of discussion: "F." "I have been looking at this famous marble dog of Mr. Jennings, valued at a thousand guineas, said to be Alcibiades' dog," Johnson. "His tail then must be docked. That was the mark of Alcibiades' dog," E.† "A thousand guineas! The representation of no animal whatever is worth so much. At this rate, a dead dog would, indeed, be better than a living lion," Johnson. "Sir, it is not the worth of the thing, but of the skill in forming it, which is so highly estimated. Everything that enlarges the sphere of human powers, that shows man he can do what he thought he could not do, is valuable." (Boswell's Johnson, ed. 1853, p. 573.)

Owing to a sudden change of fortune, Mr. Jennings's museum of relics of all kinds came under the hammer of the auctioneer on April 4, 1778, when the dog of Alcibiades was knocked down for a thousand guineas, and became the property of Mr. Duncombe, M.P. (Annual Register, vol. xxi. p. 174.) It is now at Duncombe Park, in Yorkshire, the seat of Lord Feversham. It is painful to record that the latter days of Mr. Jennings were spent in the King's Bench, and within the rules of that prison he died on Feb. 17, 1819, at his lodgings in Belvedere Place, St. George's Fields, aged eighty-eight. There is a portrait of him in Wilson's Wonderful Characters, ii. 350.]

SHIRLEY'S DIRGE.—In "The Posthumous Works by Mr. Samuel Butler, author of Hudibras from original MSS., and scarce and valuable pieces formerly printed, with a Key to Hudibras, by Sir Roger L'Estrange, in 3 volumes 12mo, the 6th edition with cuts. London: Printed by J. Dalton for Samuel Briscoe, &c. &c., 1720," the dirge generally ascribed to Shirley, and as such alluded to by your correspondent, QUEEN'S GARDENS (anté, p. 314), is given in full at p. 158, vol. i. with some verbal differences, as "A Thought upon Death after hearing of the Murder of King Charles I. By Mr. Samuel Butler."

Who was the real author of this fine piece?

ST. E.

[That wretched compilation of contemporary ribaldry, which the ignorance or cupidity of the publisher had dignified with the title of Butler's Posthumous Works in Prose and Verse was first issued in 1715, 2 vols. 12mo. Out of fifty pieces which this publication contains, there are only three which have any claim to be considered as the genuine productions of the author of Hudibras;† the remainder are mere "shadows to fill up the muster-book"—stragglers that have been pressed into the service—as oddly assorted as Sir John Falstaff's army of substitutes. For upwards of fifty years, these volumes continued to circulate unquestioned under "the shadow of a mighty name," and, during that time, went through a variety of editions. Dr. Zachary Grey, whose taste and discernment bore no proportion to his industry, entertained no doubt of their genuineness; and, in his notes on Hudibras, frequently alludes to and quotes from them, as the productions of Butler. Tardy justice was, however, done to our author's reputation, by Mr. Thyer's publication of his Genuine Remains (Lond. 1759, 8vo, 2 vols.) from the original manuscripts, previously in the possession of Mr. Longueville, the friend and patron of Butler.

‡ Lord Upper Ossory.

† Edmund Burke.

‡ These are, the "Ode on Du Vall," "Case of Charles I., and "Letters of Audland and Prymme;" they are included in Thyer's publication.

As a proof how the writings of James Shirley must have fallen into oblivion at the beginning of the eighteenth century, we find his grand and solemn stanzas on Death (in The Contention of Ajax and Ulysses, sc. iii.) attributed to Samuel Butler in the above spurious Posthumous Remains. Charles the Second used to have this beautiful dirge sung to him. "In this Contention," says Oldys, "is the fine song which old Bowman used to sing to King Charles, and which he has often sung to me—

'The glories of our blood and state
Are shadows, not substantial things,' &c.

And ending with the often quoted lines—

"Only the actions of the just Smell sweet and blossom in the dust."

The old copy of The Contention tells us, that "this Dirge was afterwards sung in parts, the music excellently composed by Mr. Ed. Coleman." Zouch, without citing any authority for the anecdote, observes, "Oliver Cromwell is said on the recital of this dirge to have been seized with great terror and agitation of mind." Note on Walton's Lives, ed. 1807, p. 342. Conf. Shirley's Works, by Gifford and Dyce, ed. 1833, vol. i. p. lv. vi. 397, and the Retrospective Review, ii. 259.]

"THE MERRY BEGGARS."—I see in No. 232 of The Spectator mention made of an old song called "The Merry Beggars." Could you inform me of the date of it, its nature, and whether there is a probability that the idea of "The Jolly Beggars" of Burns was taken from it? L. E. C.

["The Merry Beggars," we are inclined to think, is the popular "Beggars' Song," the first two lines of which are quoted by Mr. Chappell from Select Ayres, 1659, in his charming work, Popular Music of the Olden Time, i. 124; and which came originally from Brome's play, A Jovial Crew; or, the Merry Beggars, 4to, 1652. (Vide Dodsley's Old Plays, ed. 1826, x. 289.) This song, as printed in Playford's Musical Companion, ed. 1763, book ii. p. 96, is entitled "The Jovial Begger." It reads—

"From hunger and cold who lives more free,
Or who more richly clad than we?
Our bellies are full, our flesh is warm,
And against pride our rage are a charm.

Enough is our feast, and for to-morrow,
 Let rich men care, we feel no sorrow,
 No sorrow, no sorrow, no sorrow, no sorrow,
 Let rich men care, we feel no sorrow.

"Each city, each town, and every village,
 Affords us either an alms or pillage;
 And if the weather be cold and raw.
 Then in a barn we tumble in straw.
 If warm and fair, by yea-cock and nay-cock,
 The fields will afford us a hedge or a hay-cock
 A hay-cock, a hay-cock, a hay-cock, a hay-cock."

Burns's poem of "The Jolly Beggars" is understood to have been founded on the poet's observation of an actual scene, when one night he dropped accidentally into the humble hostelry of Mrs. Gibson, more familiarly named Poosie Nansie. There was, after all, a kind of pattern or model for Burns's singular composition, in a song entitled The Merry Beggars, which appeared in The Charmer, 2 vols. 1751, and also reproduced by Robert Chambers in his Life and Works of Robert Burns, ed. 1856, i. 188. It commences—

1st Beggar. I once was a poet at London,
 I keep my heart still full of glee;
 There's no man can say that I'm undone,
 For begging's no new trade to me," &c.

This song also appeared in The Vocal Miscellany, 2 vols. ed. 1734, i. 214.]

EMBASSIES.—Who first instituted permanent embassies at the different courts of Europe?

C. A. W.

[The practice of keeping ambassadors ordinary in foreign courts is but of modern invention. It is generally ascribed to the Cardinal de Richelieu. Raymond de Beccaria, Baron de Forquevaux de Pavie, Knight of the order of St. Michael, was one of the first public ministers who resided permanently at a foreign court. He was sent to Spain in 1565, as ambassador ordinary of Charles IX. of France at the court of Philip II., probably on account of the misunderstanding which prevailed between the Spanish monarch and his consort Elizabeth, who was a French princess. Rees's Cyclopædia, art. "Ambassador."]

PROVERB.—Whence comes the sentence, "More know Tom Fool than Tom Fool knows?" It is, I believe, spoken by Sancho Panza, but I have been unable to find it on searching Don Quixote through.

JOHN REID.

[The sentence is given in Bohn's Handbook of Proverbs, p. 450, and if we rightly apprehend its meaning, may possibly have originated in that "Eastern Proverb" which occurs at p. 271 of the same useful work: "The wise man knows the fool, but the fool does not know the wise man." In other words, the man of penetration sees through the simpleton; but is not seen through by him." Thus "Poor Tom" is thoroughly known by those of whom he himself knows nothing. Other explanations might be given; but till we see a reference we forbear.]

Replies.

JUNIUS v. DUKE OF GRAFTON'S GRANT.

(3rd S. viii. 182, 230, 269.)

The enrolment in the Public Record Office would be equally an original with the grant in the muniment room of the Duke of Grafton. A deed and its counterpart are both originals, and either is primary evidence. The same of the enrolment and the grant under the Great Seal. It is not, therefore, worth while to hunt up Mr. Phillips.

MR. HART's letter shows that Junius was more intimately acquainted with the secrets of the Treasury than a clerk in the War Office was likely to be. The hiatus in the Book of Searches at the Record Office (from June, 1769, to June, 1776,) proves that Junius had sufficient interest to procure the destruction of a public document in order to conceal his own name. If the government had dared to prosecute him, his examination of that grant had revealed his incognito. He more than once threw down the gauntlet, but the cabinet dared not take it up.

I do not think that the death of Mr. Parkes has anything to do with the controversy. His book would have been written upon the old jog-trot plan. He would have set out with the preconceived purpose of proving Sir Philip Francis to be Junius, and the truth would have been burked in favour of his theory.

I cannot see how Mr. Dilke would have "set us right in a few minutes as to the true bearing of MR. HART's new documents." He had for years been engaged in the inquiry, and yet the importance of the clue, which we are now discussing, had never presented itself to his mind.*

In answer to MR. BRUCE, I would suggest that Junius's intimate acquaintance with Treasury secrets was the cause of the prevision that enabled

[* So far from this "clue" never having presented itself to the mind of Mr. Dilke, we have reason to know that as long since as May, 1862, he (through Sir Harris Nicolas) got Mr. Thomas Palmer to have the accounts of business done at the Rolls Office examined; when it appeared that the only searches made within certain years with reference to the Whittlebury Grant, had been in December, 1767, when "Mr. Phillips, of Church Court, Temple," examined the grant; and in 1769, when a "Mr. Chambers" made searches also. None but those who know how thoroughly our late lamented friend exhausted every inquiry he took up, can form an idea of the perseverance and ingenuity with which he pursued such researches. He had no pet theory to maintain. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, was the end and object of all his inquiries, and in the search after this he was indefatigable.

Our correspondent, moreover, does scant justice to Mr. Parkes. That gentleman was an avowed "Franciscan;" but the time, labour, and money which he had expended in his investigation of the "Junius" question could not have failed to furnish much useful information to future inquirers.—ED. "N. & Q."] him on September to say what course the Commissioners intended to adopt on December 13. The Duke of Grafton's letter was taken into consideration on November 7 (that is, after the recess or Long Vacation), but no doubt it was written long before, and had been previously considered by the Lords of the Treasury unofficially.

The way to treat the question is this. Find out all that Junius says of himself. Illustrate the matter thus found from contemporaneous sources. Then find a person to whom all this refers, and one has caught Junius.

I take my stand upon this point—viz. that any "Franciscan investigations" are bosh.

Junius wrote (Private Letter, Nov. 12, 1770), "It (Letter 41, Nov. 14) has been very correctly copied." One of the great arguments towards proving the identity of Francis with Junius has always been the similarity of their handwriting. There is no notice that the handwriting of that letter is different from that of the others; if so, all must be in same handwriting, and copied from the original MSS. If Sir Philip was the copyist, he was not the author.

There were evidently three persons in the secret, the author, the copyist, and the gentleman who "did the conveying part." This triplec nodus rendered discovery from without impossible unless there was domestic treachery. The only recompense that Junius would accept from Woodfall was three copies of the letters. The one bound in vellum was for himself, the other two for his coadjutors.

So far as hints and innuendoes went, Sir Philip Francis arrogated to himself the very dubious honour of being the author of these letters. He had, however, the grace never to tell the lie direct. His wedding gift to Lady Francis was a copy of Junius Identified—a book which seemed to prove him to be Junius. Why did he not give her the vellum bound copy?

With reference to the claims of Sir Philip, I am inclined to use the form of argument called a dilemma. Thus, if Sir Philip Francis was the author of the letters, he was a scurrilous libeller; if he was not, he was splendide mendax:—utrum horum maris accipe.

Again, Junius remembered "the great Walpolean battles" that ceased in 1740, when Francis was in the nursery.

I am satisfied that Junius was an elderly peer (who had in his younger days held an office in the Court of King's Bench), and fancied himself slighted by the government—was true in his case. He was evidently not a ready or practised writer, and he admits that his letters cost him much trouble. He stopped writing when government gave him what he wanted.

"Si natura negat, facit indignatio versum,"

Bubb Doddington and others hired one Ralph to conduct a paper for them. Amongst the leading subscribers was William Beckford, whose conduct as lord mayor Junius approved of. Ralph put them in the hole, having made his peace with the Treasury, and secured an annuity of 300*l.* through Lord Hartington, to whose favour he had been introduced by David Garrick. The letter of Junius to David Garrick is well known. I am satisfied from this curious coincidence that Junius belonged to the party that Doddington had formed.

Again, Dr. Lee was to have been Chancellor to the Prince of Wales (as Bubb says) if Sir I. Bootle had died. Who was this Dr. Lee? Was it the civilian, afterwards Sir George Lee, and Judge of the Admiralty Court? Was it Dr. Charles Lee, the author of Junius Americanus?

JOHN WILKINS, B.C.L.

Cuddington, Aylesbury, Bucks.

The supposition that Junius was the Earl of Chatham seems to be inconsistent with at least one notable fact—Junius everywhere displays a morbid hatred of Scotland and Scotsmen, while Chatham boasted that he had called the Scotch Highlanders from their native glens to the military service of their sovereign, and praised in the highest terms their discipline and bravery.

Junius charged the Scotch with being mercenary. Now not much more than twenty years before he wrote (as he must have been well aware), a reward of 30,000*l.* was offered by Government for production of the person of Prince Charles Edward Stuart, and though his place of concealment was known to at least fifty individuals, many of them of the poorest class, not one of them was so base as to betray him. It occurs naturally to ask, would not Junius himself have taken the reward if he could have got it? G.

THE BED AND STATURE OF OG.

(3rd S. viii. 270, 271.)

The discussion about King Og's bed has naturally led to the question of the giants before the deluge, of whom we read in Genesis vi. 4. Mr. BUCKTON asserts that St. Augustine "was much interested in keeping up the notion of ancient men being of excessively great stature, and seems to have made it a point of religious dogma: he found a molar tooth a hundred times larger than that of ordinary men, which he held as proof positive of the existence of giants, in his sense of that word, big men (De Civ. Dei, xv. 9); and his commentator, Vives, is nearly equally absurd. There is no doubt that this saint's tooth was an elephant's."

St. Augustine does not contend for ancient men in general having been of gigantic, much less of "excessively great stature;" but that there were many giants, who were born of the race of Seth before their vigorous frames had become enervated. These are his words:—

"Igitur secundum Scripturas canonicas Hebræas atque Christianas, multos gigantes ante diluvium fuisse non dubium est. . . . Nec mirandum est, quod etiam de ipsis (filiis Seth) gigantes nasci potuerunt. Neque enim omnes gigantes, sed magis multi utique tunc fuerunt, quam post diluvium temporibus cæteris. . . . Quam rem alius Propheta (Baruch, iii. 26) commendans ait: 'Ibi fuerunt gigantes illi nominati, qui ab initio fuerant staturosi, scientes prælium.'"—S. Aug. de Civ. Dei, lib. xv. cap. 23, n. 4.

St. Augustin might well be interested in keeping up "a notion" held by such an authority as the prophet Baruch, who may be presumed to have understood the meaning of the Hebrew text somewhat better than modern scholars, even if we, for argument's sake, waive his title to inspiration, and regard him merely as a respectable ancient writer. Of course St. Augustin considered the belief in the existence of these giants as a point of religious belief, and not as a mere "notion" to be taken up or rejected at pleasure; because such had been the uniform interpretation of the early expositors of Scripture. Indeed if this explanation is denied, profane history must be equally on this point discredited; for many ancient writers speak of giants, and of having seen their remains.

St. Augustin was, no doubt, mistaken in supposing the great tooth, which he and others saw cast up by the sea upon the shore at Utica, to have belonged to any human being; just as Plutarch was deceived when he represented the giant Antis to have measured sixty cubits; and Pliny when he described the skeleton which was found in Crete as measuring forty-six cubits; yet no one can reasonably doubt that these and others mentioned by Solinus and Florus, were the remains of men of gigantic stature.

The question cannot be better summed up than in St. Augustin's own words in another treatise:—

"Sed de gigantibus, id est, nimium grandibus atque fortibus, puto non esse mirandum quod ex hominibus nasci potuerunt; quia et post diluvium quidam tales fuisse reperiuntur; et quædam nostris quoque temporibus extiterunt, non solum virorum, verum etiam feminarum."—Quæst. in Genesim, lib. i. qu. 3.

And, as the saint elsewhere observes, why should it appear more wonderful for men to have been of greater stature in those early times than to have then lived so many more years than men have lived since?

F. C. H.

"THE CHRISTIAN YEAR."

(3rd S. viii. 249.)

With regard to the MS. of The Christian Year, I subjoin two letters which appeared in The Literary Churchman in Feb. 1, 1858, vol. iv. No. 3, p. 51:—

"Sir,—The following is the story which has been related to me respecting the loss of the original MS. of the Christian Year:—

"Among the friends of the author to whom the MS. was at first lent for perusal was a gentleman, who, in order to read it at leisure, took it with him into Wales where he was about to spend the Long Vacation. By some accident or another, at the end of his journey, the MS. was not forthcoming, and was supposed to have dropped off the coach. A short time afterwards, those who had read the poems, succeeded in persuading the author to publish them. The author had not kept a copy, and we were nearly losing the finest work which has graced Christian literature in our day.

"Fortunately, however, one of those to whom the manuscript had been lent had taken a copy. From this the first edition was printed in 1837.

"J. H. S."

"Sir,—In answer to the inquiry from one of your correspondents respecting the MS. of the Christian Year, I beg to state that some twenty years ago I had the opportunity of inspecting a MS. in the possession of the author's intimate friend, the late Rev. G. Cornish, of Cerpue, Vicar of Kemoign, Cornwall. I am not prepared to say whether it was an original, or merely a transcript, but it contained many various readings of great interest. It is probably still in the possession of Mr. Cornish's family. The work was completed, or nearly so, many years before publication; some of the pieces being composed as far back as the time of the author's undergraduateship.

"Your obedient Servant,
"O."

Dr. Arnold thus speaks of The Christian Year in a letter to a friend:—

"I do not know whether you have ever seen John Keble's Hymns. . . . I live in hopes that he may be induced to publish them: and it is my firm opinion that nothing equal to them exists in our language: the wonderful knowledge of Scripture, the purity of heart, and the richness of poetry which they exhibit, I never saw paralleled."—Life, p. 74.

What are the best reviews of The Christian Year? I have never seen any. I possess a privately-printed copy of a Hymn for Ember-Tide by Mr. Keble, and marvel that the venerable author has not introduced it into some of the later editions of The Christian Year. I am not aware that it has been ever published.

Dr. Arnold, writing to a friend, Aug. 22, 1834, observes:—

"How pure and beautiful was J. Keble's article on Sacred Poetry in The Quarterly, and how glad am I that he was prevailed on to write it. It seems to me to sanctify in a manner the whole number."—Life, p. 80.

What is the date of the article here alluded to? * Mr. Keble's Predications Academicæ, fraught as they are with high poetic thought and Christian scholarship, would, I am sure, be warmly welcomed by a large number of non-academic readers if well translated.

[* See Quarterly Review for June, 1835, No. lxxii. i. e. vol. xxxii. pp. 211-222.]

EIRIONNACH.

THE WORD HOUR.

(3rd S. viii. 289.)

Your correspondent H. has not made any very wonderful discovery respecting the word hour not occurring in the Hebrew Scriptures. The reason is obvious. The ancient Hebrews, like the Greeks, were unacquainted with any other means of dividing the day than the natural divisions of morning, noon, and evening, mentioned in Psalm liv. 18:—

"Evening, and morning, and at noon, I will speak and declare: and he shall hear my voice." (Douay Version: in the A. V. the Psalm is lv. 17.)

Whether the ancient Egyptians* or Babylonians were the first who invented the distribution of the day into twelve parts, seems to be uncertain. While the Jews were in captivity in Babylon, there it was probably that they learnt the meaning of the word hour, such as it is used in the Prophet Daniel (chap. iii. 6),—

"But if any man shall not fall down and adore, he shall the same hour be cast into a furnace of burning fire." (Douay Vers.)

In chap. iv. 16, we have the word hour mentioned in another way:—

"Then Daniel, whose name was Baltassar, began silently to think within himself for about one hour," &c.

The A. V. is a little different:—

"Then Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar was astonished for one hour, and his thoughts troubled him," &c. (Chap. iv. 19.)

Now, in the first passage (iii. 6) the expression "the same hour," is evidently a proverbial form for instantly, or in a moment. Indeed, the original meaning of the Chaldaic word, ܠܥܝܢܐ, corresponds with the German word, Augenblick, in the twinkling of an eye; hence the expression in Daniel, ܠܥܝܢܐ ܗܝܬ, in the same hour, must mean instantly. (See Winer's Grammatica Chald., p. 9; also Newman's Hebrew and English Lex., sub voce ܠܥܝܢܐ, ed. London, 1834.) Another meaning given to the Chaldaic root is to tell, to declare; hence, the noun might originally have meant some instrument by which the length of an hour was told or declared: afterwards it came to mean the hour itself. Thus, in the second passage (chap. iv. 16), the word hour may mean the same space of time that corresponds with our h time which was always the year; because the J Captivity, had this in "hours," though alway were unequal in regard as the day was reckoned and consequently the two day was divided, varied the fluctuations of winter

* See a curious but interesting note in G. Rawlinson's Herodotus (vol. ii. p. 134, ed. London, 1858), on the word "hour" being found as early as the 5th Dynasty. It seems also certain that the ancient Egyptians divided the day and night into twelve hours each.

For further information refer H. to the articles of Calmet's Dict. of the L. Dict. of the Bible, vol. i. Norwich.

"THE BLACK"

(3rd S. v

This publication was first number having been January 20, of that year weekly at the price of containing eight pages established and conducted Wooler; who afterwards Man his own Attorney. remarkable for its fierce was prosecuted, under an article in the tenth number the Present, and the Future before Mr. Justice Abbot June 5th, 1817, which ended but an attempt was made on the ground that the and a new trial was granted second trial ended in a verdict results were hailed as a and much excitement in country. The Black Dwarf popularity; and being Cobbett had fled to America the field of politics. It assumed another shape demy 8vo at the price number, and was continued consultation of these vol sight into the state of present time; and will show, the radical leaders held

The early quarto volumes written in doggerel dramatic pieces. They and are not without force coarse and bitter, and a politics. On p. 493 of the "Translation of the most Drama, lately performed in plause, entitled —

"THE ROYAL BIR: OR BERRINUMSKULL'S LOSS.

Dramatis Personæ.

Legitimoso	King of the Dansians.
Berrinumskull	His Nephew.
Humbuggo	The King's Prime Minister.
Pottiana	Governess in Berrinumskull's family.
Catholicon	The King's Confessor.
	Cook, Attendants, &c., &c."

On p. 207 of the same volume, is another dramatic Scene, entitled —

"THE BUGABOO: A Dramatic Poem by R. S.

Dramatis Personæ.

Curseallray.	Sir Wm. Blubber.
Cunning.	Smellplot."
Widemouth.

The dialogue puts in the mouth of each character language appropriate to the persons indicated by name. I think it of great importance that the class of publications, of which The Black Dwarf was one of the most popular, should not be lost sight of. They were the political instructors of the people at a period of great excitement and much suffering. And they constituted a power in the country, of which those who move in more peaceful times have no conception; but, after all, they were the pioneers of a more useful and sober popular literature. They served amidst all their abuses, one good purpose — they led the people to inquire and think.

T. B.

Perhaps one or two more facts, connected with the life of Wooler, may be acceptable to your readers.

My father knew him well, and remembers how keenly he felt being refused permission to practise at the bar.

During the latter part of his life, he entered seldom into politics. Meeting him one day in the street, my father said: "Well, Mr. Wooler, how do you get on in the sedition line?" "Ah, Mr. Sturgeon," he replied, "I wish you would tell me what is sedition, in order that I might write a little; for these d—d Whigs have taken it all out of my hands." WENTWORTH STURGEON.

25, Gloucester Place, Portman Square.

The Black Dwarf, in 1824, was published in Gough Square, Fleet Street. I knew the editor, Thomas Jonathan Wooler; and one illustration of his singular quickness and clearness of mind is worth putting on record. As he was both the author and the printer of his own periodical, it was a frequent habit of his to dispense with manuscript, and to compose his articles in type at the moment of publication.

J. EMERSON TENNENT.

BATTLE OF TOULOUSE.

(3rd S. viii. 298.)

The History of the Wars of the French Revolution, by Edward Baines, has been compiled with great care, and the facts may generally be depended upon. The account given, and which is supported by other authorities, is conclusive on one point, that neither Soult nor Wellington had knowledge of the abdication of Bonaparte when the battle of Toulouse was fought. This is the one important fact to ascertain. So long as the Emperor held the field, there was the greatest necessity for the French Marshals to contest every inch of ground; and the greater the straits into which the French armies were driven, the more would Wellington push the advantage he had gained. The impression in many quarters is—and it is conveyed in the quotation I have given in my first communication, 3rd S. viii. 252—that Marshal Soult knew of the abdication when he gave orders for the engagement. Such an act would cast lasting infamy upon the character of a brave and heroic soldier; as a contest under such circumstances could do nothing to retrieve the fortunes of his fallen chief.

I see that Alison gives an account of it, which is quite in harmony with that given by Baines. In the 87th chapter of the History of Europe, par. 93, he says:—

"Soult, four days before the battle, was aware of the taking of Paris on the 29th March preceding; but, like a good soldier and faithful servant, he was only confirmed by that disaster in his resolution to defend Toulouse to the last, hoping thus to preserve for the Emperor the capital of the south: and at the same time he wrote to Suchet, urging him to combine measures for ulterior operations in Languedoc."

Alison proceeds to narrate the entrance of Wellington into Toulouse, and the events which followed it; and states that, at five o'clock in the afternoon of the 12th of April—the battle having been fought on the 10th—he received dispatches informing him of the abdication of Napoleon. He "lost no time in making Soult acquainted with the changes in Paris; but the French Marshal, faithful to his trust, declined to come to an accommodation till he had received official intelligence that the Emperor had really abdicated the throne." On the 18th he received communications which removed all doubt; and he then concluded a Convention with Wellington. Alison, in the notes to this chapter, quotes from the dispatches of Soult. The first extract is from a dispatch to Suchet, dated April 7th, 1814, as follows:—

"M. Ricard was with me when I received the distressing intelligence of the entry of the Allies into Paris. That great disaster confirms me in my resolution to defend Toulouse, happen what may. The maintenance of that place, which contains establishments of all kinds, is of the last importance."

Those who are but slightly acquainted with the events of that period will see that, so long as any chance remained, the determination of Soult was dictated by prudence as well as duty. There is still another authority on the subject. In the Life of Field Marshal, the Duke of Wellington, by J. H. Stoequeler, first volume, p. 329, the author says:—

" Marshal Soult was formally apprised of the abdication of Napoleon on the night of the 13th. Indeed it has been said, that he was aware of the abdication before the battle of Toulouse, and merely risked the engagement in the hope of closing the war with the prestige of victory. From this imputation, however, he was fully exonerated by Lord Wellington; who proved to Soult's calumniators the physical impossibility of his acquiring the information at that distance from Paris, and in so short a time."

In the Quarterly Review (vol. lxii. p. 162), an article appears on Marshal Soult. The purport of this article is to rebut the claim which had been set up by some French writers—that the victory was really won by Soult. In this article however, which is very severe upon the Marshal, no mention whatever is made of his supposed knowledge of the abdication.

I have collected these particulars, in my search, from books at present within reach since my first note was sent to you; but have not been able to find any account of when, and where, the Duke of Wellington made the exculpation of his rival to which I have referred. I am still anxious to see it in the Duke's own words; and think that I shall be able to do so when I have time to look through Hansard, as my impression is that the statement was made in the House of Lords.

T. B.

INCISED MONTMENTAL SLABS (3rd S. viii. 285.) In the tower of St. Oswald's, Durham, is a flight of stone steps in the thickness of the wall, going up the south side, winding round a newel at the south-west angle, and ascending over the west window into the third stage. The steps are mostly constructed of slabs such as those discovered at Helpston, with crosses, swords, shears, &c., incised upon them; others were discovered imbedded in the walls during the recent restoration of the tower, and have, I believe, been described and figured in the Transactions of the Durham Archaeological Society. Isolated examples of slabs of this kind, or portions of them, are not uncommon in the walls of old churches. J. T. F.

The College, Hurstpierpoint.

HERALDIC PUZZLE (3rd S. viii. 207.)—A's first wife being an heiress, and having female issue only, the daughters are co-heiresses of their mother, though not of their father, he having male issue by his second wife. Should not the husband of his daughter place on an escutcheon of pretence his wife's maternal arms with those of her father, in a canton?

C. J.

MEETING EYEBROWS (3rd S. viii. 285.) CYRIL, a querist in a former number, asks for some observations on the phrenological meaning of the expression, and may serve to extend, the inquiry, to refer him to the fact that this abnormal feature has been directed, in the case of Alexius Ducas, whose usurper throne forms so remarkable of the fifth crusade, acquired Murtzuple, Alexius Murt continuous eyebrows. Gi name "Mourzouffle," says vulgar idiom, expressed the black and shaggy eyebrows (c. lx.) Of what language is this idiom? It is difficult to Chaucer gives his eyebrows," following I suspect Chaucer seems to have a similarity as a blemish:—

" And save her brow
There was no lack
The

BELLTOPPER (3rd S. viii. 285.) In response, MR. BLAIR, writes that this slang term for the top of the period is derived from the fact that it was fashionable about 1840, and need not go so far as the case of Australian argot, to disprove the contribution to slang literature is conversant with the Northumberland and Durham dialect, and to notice the familiar term for the word "bell-crooner" (the top of "bell-crowner"), i. e. the style of head-ornament worn by the Prince Regent's days, in Pierce Egan's publications of that period.

But of all the terms of abomination, in the shape of a head-ornament, the most disgusting is described, with equal commend me to the Arab round hat, viz. About very cooking-pots.

MRS. HEY OF LEEDS (3rd S. viii. 207.)—received a letter from Leeds in answer to this query, and well. The omission of I should think must have Rugeley.

PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S DICTIONARY (3rd S. viii. 190, 277.)—I am much obliged to H. for his note, but the uses of "who" in all but Foote's report of Walter Brute are as a compound relative, not a simple one. "Who," meaning whosoever, or he that, is common enough: who=that, rare. Will H. be good enough to state the date of the edition of Spenser from which he quotes? Because, if it be from an early one, it is a genuine instance of the use of its. W. I. S. HORTON.

Rugeley.

COCK'S FEATHER: THE ORIGIN OF ITS USE ON THE STAGE (3rd S. vii. 459, 507.)—The following quotation from the induction to Marston's comedy of The Malecontent, written in 1600, will, I think, throw some light on the subject:—

"Sly. I pray you know this gentleman, my cousin; 'tis Mr. Doomsday's son, the usurer.

"Condell. I beseech you, Sir, be covered.

"Sly. No, in good faith for mine ease. Look you, my hat's the handle to this fan; God's so, what a beast was I that I did not leave my feather at home! Well, but I take an order with you. [Puts a feather in his pocket.]

"Burbage. Why do you conceal your feather, Sir.

"Sly. Why! do you think I'll have jests broken upon me in the play, to be laughed at? This play hath beaten all young gallants out of the feathers. Blackfriars hath almost spoiled Blackfriars for feathers.

"Sinklow. God's so. I thought 'twas for somewhat our gentlewomen at home counselled me to wear my feather to the play; yet I am loath to spoil it."

It is evident from this that an attempt was here made to bring into ridicule the then prevalent custom of wearing feathers in the cap; and it is not improbable that for this purpose (to use your correspondent's words) "the stage representative of evil incarnate wore a cock's feather." A cock's feather in preference to any other feather, because most easily obtained and at the least cost.

H. FISHWICK.

TOPOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARIES (3rd S. viii. 306.) I think your correspondent J. will find all places, those of the least note even, mentioned in Blackie's Imperial Gazetteer. I was praising its accuracy to a German friend, who, to test my statement, looked out some insignificant villages in Hesse that he was acquainted with, and was exceedingly astonished to find them all mentioned.

JOHN DAVIDSON.

THE DIVISION OF THE BIBLE INTO VERSES (3rd S. viii. 67, 95, &c.)—May I contribute the following from Torshell's Exercitation upon Malachi, written about the year 1640? It is from the notes on the commencement of Chapter IV.:—

"All antiquity was ignorant of the division of the Bible which we now use, which was made about the year 1250,—the work (as Genebrard thinks) of those schoolmen who assisted Hugh the Cardinal in gathering the concordances, and an invention so useful and so much approved, that the Jews themselves often followed it in the Hebrew Bibles. The ancients, indeed, had their titles and chapters, or versicles too; but not so as we divide them, but usually in shorter periods, as appears by that of Casarius: 'We have (saith he) four Gospels, which consist of one thousand one hundred and sixty-two chapters. And Euthymius, quoting Matt. xxvi. 58, calls it the Sixty-fifth Title; and quoting Matt. xxvi. 74, calls it the Sixty-sixth Title. Their titles were as our chapters, and their chapters much as our verses. St. Matthew, which we divide into 28 chapters, they divided into 68 titles, and 865 chapters. But all distinguished not alike."

He then states that the Jewish and the patristic divisions did not always accord, and that some of the Fathers divided differently from others; and, after stating that Casaubon and Heinsius wished that some great divine would take the pains to restore the ancient division, expresses his own desire for the same thing.

From what sources is it possible to acquire a knowledge of this ancient division?

In the Exercitationes Sacre, and the Aristarchus Sacer of Heinsius, there are many references to a former better division than that which obtains in modern times.

While upon this subject, permit me to say to your correspondent, MR. GREGORY, the learned editor of the recent reprint of Torshell's valuable commentary, that the book would have been still more valuable had the numerous references to other writers been verified; and, if possible, their statements quoted in the form of foot-notes. Torshell's brief commentary on Malachi, one of the most precious specimens of eregesis in English theology, which is not very rich in works of the kind, would then have been still more precious. As it is, the work is most valuable, and well worth the price which is charged for it and for the worthy, but somewhat attenuated, Commentary of Richard Stock, bound up in the same volume.

JUXTA TURBIN.

EPIITAPHES ABROAD (3rd S. viii. 244, 296.)—MR. WOODWARD will find the inscriptions on the tombs of the Douglas family in the church of St. Germain des Prés in the History of the Upper Ward of Lanarkshire, compiled by Mr. Alexander Munro of Glasgow and myself (vol. ii. pp. 130, 133). The earliest in point of date is that of William, tenth Earl of Angus, who passed the later years of his life in the adjoining abbey, and died there on the 5th of March, 1611. The other is that of his grandson, Lord James Douglas, second son of the first Marquis of Douglas. He served in the French army with great distinction during the campaigns of Louis XIV., who intended to confer upon him the baton of a marshal on the very day on which he was killed, 31st October, 1645. It is perfectly clear that Lord James could never have been Duke of Douglas. He certainly obtained nothing of the kind in Scotland, while the King of France had no power to create a dukedom with a title derived from lands in a foreign country. All he could do was to raise Lord James to the rank of Duke, in which case his title would have been not Duke of Douglas, but Duke Douglas, in the same way that another branch of the same family became Counts Douglas in Sweden, but not Earls of Douglas.

The inscription on Lord James's tomb at St. Germain des Prés is evidently in the most barbarous Latin: the very first word, Duglasidum, is sufficient to show this. It is therefore rather difficult to assign the meaning to the "Gallo-Scotigenum Dux" of the second line, but for my own part I have little doubt, that what was meant was, that he was the Dux, leader or commander, of the Scotch troops in the French service.

GEORGE VERE IRVING.

P.S. I think that copies of both these epitaphs will also be found in Hume of Godscroft's History of the House of Douglas.

LOCKING THE GATES OF CHURCHYARDS (3rd S. viii. 309.)—Allow me, while joining in Juxta Turrim's protest against the above, to remark, that this pernicious custom is not confined to Surrey. During two pedestrian-genealogical excursions through Norfolk, I regret to say, I found about one churchyard in three locked up. (I always got over the wall; but when, as at Buxton, the wall is smooth, and seven feet high, the task is not too easy for one encumbered as I was with a 15 lb. knapsack). I quite agree with Juxta Turrim, that the gates are locked to increase the fees of the parish clerks; though the usual excuse given is, that if they were left open the village children would make a playground of the churchyard.

WALTER RYE.

Chelsea.

STRABISM (3rd S. viii. 310.)—As I imagine that DELTA's inquiry under the above heading is one of those which will ever remain unanswered, may I ask what reason he has to believe that squinting ever was cured "by means of galvanism"? In a small minority of cases allied to strabismus, it might be worth trying.

J. F. S.

LIONEL, DUKE OF CLARENCE (3rd S. viii. 248, 298.)—In answer to the question—"Where was Campsey, or Campesse Abbey?" if W. C. B. will turn to 3rd S. vi. 402, he will find that it was in Suffolk. Dugdale, in his Monasticon Ang., p. 61, says that Edward III. granted leave to Maud Countess of Ulster, his kinswoman, to found a chantry in the Chapel of the Annunciation of the Nuns of Campesse, in 1356. In 1330 Edward III. granted the manor of Burgh (Norfolk) to Sir Robert Ufford, Knight, and his heirs. (Blomefield's Norfolk, vol. vi. p. 428, 8vo edit.) The church of Burgh was given to Campesse Abbey on condition that it should find some chaplains to celebrate in that church for the soul of Ralph de Ufford. (Taylor's Index Monasticus, p. 99, and Tanner's Noditia Monastica.) In 1523 Henry VIII. granted the manor of Burgh to his mercer, William or Buttry, citizen of London. Elizabeth was the last prioress of Campesse: she died 1543.

ALBERT BRY

The question "Where was Campsey Ab" does not yet appear to have been answered. Campesse, or Campsey, was a pri Austin Nuns, in Suffolk, a noted house for ception of ladies of noble birth.

G.

FERMOE PEDIGREE (3rd S. viii. 309.)—the title of Baron Lempster from the town minster? This name is, I think, common pronounced.

CHAS. F. S. WA

ADMIRAL BENDOW (3rd S. viii. 307.)—very interesting notices of the Bendow family be found in a little work entitled, Some of the Ancient and Present State of Shrewsbury. P. Sandford, Shrewsbury. New edition, L 1810, pp. 51, 412.

GR

Liverpool.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

The Letters of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart (1763—Translated from the Collection of Ludwig Nohl Lady Wallace. With a Portrait of Mozart and simile. In Two Volumes. (Longman.)

Every admirer of Mozart—and who that has listened to the divine compositions of this great man not included in the number of his admirers—owes of gratitude to Ludwig Nohl for the labour and as with which he has collected together Mozart's L and to Lady Wallace for the care and sprightliness which she has rendered them into English. They are no mere collection of dry business correspondence as the editor says well and truly—"in them is strikingly set forth how Mozart lived and laboured and suffered, and this with a degree of vivid graphic reality which no biography, however good, could ever succeed in giving." It is long since a book like interest has been given to the musical and loving world—for the letters of the composer are so typically characteristic; and besides the glimpses they afford us with regard to the creation and production of his great works, they bring the man himself to us in the most vivid and effectual manner. After having watched his struggles and his triumphs, we turn to the mournful picture of his death-bed and the "rites" on that rough and stormy December day amidst alternate showers of rain and snow, amidst his friends who had attended the service over his body in the church of St. Sepulchre, dropped away one by one in its progress to its last resting place—till on its way to the churchyard of St. Marx, not a single friend remained beside the grave of WOLFGANG AMADEUS MOZART. His work must be as popular as it is interesting.

A Catalogue of the Original Works of John Wyclif Walter Waddington Shirley, B.D., Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History, and Canon of Christ Church (Oxford Clarendon Press.)

The Delegates of the University Press have very kindly entertained a plan for publishing a selection from works of Wyclif, and as a preliminary step, with the view to ascertain what works of this very voluminous, proscribed, and neglected writer are extant, and where the MSS. are to be found, have issued this tentative Catalogue. Few, even of those accustomed to literary research, can have an idea of the difficulty which exists in ascertaining these particulars. For Wyclif was at one time the most popular writer in Europe, whose works were circulated among every rank and order in England, and passed over into all parts of the Continent, and especially into Bohemia, while those for whom his long scholastic treatises were too costly or too tedious, abridged, altered, and sometimes renamed them. Single sermons were docked of their texts, and divided into chapters, after the manner of a regular treatise, and letters divested of their addresses. Sometimes, too, Wyclif wrote a Latin and English tract, with the same title, but which were not the one a translation of the other, but absolutely distinct works. The compilation of this tentative Catalogue (we advisedly repeat that definition of it) has cost Mr. Shirley considerable labour, scattered over some ten or twelve years. We hope all who desire to see a satisfactory edition of Wyclif's Select Works, and who know of any MSS. in public or private libraries which might contribute to such edition, will put themselves in possession of the present Catalogue—compare with it such MSS., and contribute the result of their inquiries to the Oxford Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History.

THE ANATOMICAL DRAWINGS AND WRITINGS OF LEONARDO DA VINCI are amongst the choicest treasures in the Royal Library at Windsor Castle. They are contained in about two hundred detached leaves of note-books, and appear to be the records of studies commenced as his needful training in art. Dr. William Hunter, who saw them in the last century in the Royal Collection, thus expressed his appreciation of them: "When I consider what pains he has taken upon every part of the body, the superiority of his universal genius, his particular excellence in mechanics and hydraulics, and the attention with which such a man would examine and see objects which he was to draw, I am fully persuaded that Leonardo was the best anatomist at that time in the world." These Drawings and Writings it is now proposed to publish in fac-simile, on account of their combined artistic and scientific value. And H.M. the Queen has been graciously pleased to permit their publication in the interest of these studies. The whole work will consist of about 250 plates, in folio, with the text of the MS. printed in full: an English and a French translation, and all needful notes and elucidations. Mr. Panizzi has undertaken to superintend the text, and Dr. Sharpey, Sec., R.S., will assist in the preparation of the scientific commentary. The work will be issued in twenty parts, at the price of one guinea each; and the publication will commence early in the year 1866. Subscribers are requested, for the present, to send their names to the editor, Mr. Woodward, the Queen's Librarian.

PARIS UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION, 1867.—Although the 26th February, 1866, has been fixed as the last day for receiving demands for space, notice has been given that intending Exhibitors would do well not to delay forwarding such demands, but to send them as soon as possible.

"THE GLOBE SHAKESPEARE."—We understand that Messrs. Macmillan have just completed the sale of 50,000 copies of this unrivalled edition of our great Poet, and this large number has been disposed of within twelve months.

Messrs. Chapman and Hall's announcement for the present season, include the completion of "Our Mutual Friend," of which we say unhesitatingly, that Mr. Dickens never wrote anything finer than are some passages in the closing chapters of this work, which has interested us all for the last eighteen months. "The World before the Deluge," by Louis Figuier, with 25 Ideal Landscapes of the Ancient World, designed by Riou, and 208 Figures of Animals, Plants, and other Fossil Remains, &c., translated from the Fourth French Edition; "History of the Commonwealth of Florence, from the Earliest Independence of the Commune to the Fall of the Republic in 1581," by Thomas Adolphus Trollope. Volumes III. and IV.; and the completion of Anthony Trollope's "Can You forgive Her?" are among the novelties to be issued.

Messrs. Groombridge & Sons will publish early in November a New Christmas Book, by the authors of A Bench of Keys, entitled "Rates and Taxes, and How they were Collected," to be edited by Thomas Hood.

Notices to Correspondents.

QUADRATURE OF THE CIRCLE. Professor De Morgan, perhaps the very best authority on the subject, has stated in this Journal (1st S. vii. 306, and elsewhere), that no reward of 50,000*l.* was ever offered by the Government of this country for the solution of this problem. This assurance will, we trust, be satisfactory to our Parisian correspondent.

A. HOLMGREN. The lines beginning—

"Whoe'er like me, with trembling anguish brings," were written by Henry Viscount Palmerston, on the death of his wife at Bristol, June, 1769. They have been attributed to Dr. Hawksworth and Mason; but Mr. J. Wilson Croker stated in "N. & Q." 1st S. v. 518, that they were Lord Palmerston's from the best authority, which authority we believe to have been the late lamented Francis.

QUEEN'S GARDENS. It is an oversight, which must be rectified.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

Just published.

THOS. DE LA RUE & CO.'S INDELIBLE RED LETTER DIARIES FOR 1866, edited by JAMES GLAIBER, Esq., F.R.S. With an Engraving of Lunar Mountains, and an original Article on the Moon by PROFESSOR PHILLIPS, F.R.S. In various sizes, suitable for the Pocket or Desk, and in a great variety of bindings. May be had of all Booksellers and Stationers.

Just out.

THOS. DE LA RUE & CO.'S PATENT PLAYING CARDS.—THE NEW PATTERNS for the SEASON are now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Stationers.

BAGSTER'S CHURCH SERVICES. Convenient in form, and durably bound.

At all the principal Booksellers; and at 14, Paternoster Row, London.

CURIOUS OLD NEWSPAPER CUTTINGS.

concerning all the Counties of England. Local Family History &c., carefully dated and arranged in neat and handy volumes. Price 6*s.*, or 7*d.* Postage Stamps each County. A Catalogue of Old Books, Manuscripts, Broad-sides, Ballads, Exhibition Bills, Maps, Views, Portraits, &c., gratis.

Address, J. H. FENNELL, 49, Millbank Street, Westminster.

CURIOUS BOOKS.—A NEW CATALOGUE is now ready of a Valuable Collection of SECOND-HAND BOOKS, including a most Rare Assemblage of LITERARY CURIOUSITIES seldom to be met with. Sent Free on receipt of a Stamp for Postage.

THOMAS BEET, 14, Conduit Street, Bond Street, London, W.

Libraries and small Collections of Books purchased.

GEOLOGY.—ELEMENTARY COLLECTIONS.

To illustrate the new edition of "Lyell's Elements of Geology," and facilitate the study of Mineralogy and Geology, can be had at 1*s.* 6*d.*, 2*s.* 6*d.*, 5*s.* 6*d.*, 10*s.* 6*d.*, and 20*s.* 6*d.* each, a complete set of Mineralogy, Rocks, Fossils, and Recent Shells, Geological Maps, Diagrams, all the Recent Publications, &c., of J. TENNANT, Mineralogist to Her Majesty, 149, Strand, London.

Private Instruction is given in Mineralogy and Geology by MR. TENNANT, F.G.S., at 149, Strand, W.C.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Completion of Mr. Charles Dickens's New Work.

Now Ready, in 2 Vols., Price 22s.

OUR MUTUAL FRIEND,
By CHARLES DICKENS.
WITH 40 ILLUSTRATIONS
BY MARCUS STONE.

MR. ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S NEW WORK.

Now Ready, in 2 Volumes, demy 8vo, price 22s.

CAN YOU FORGIVE HER?
By ANTHONY TROLLOPE,
WITH 40 ILLUSTRATIONS.

THE WORLD BEFORE THE DELUGE.

By LOUIS FIGUIER.

With 25 Ideal Landscapes of the Ancient World, designed by RIOU; and 208 Figures of Animals, Plants, and other Fossil Remains, &c.
Translated from the Fourth French Edition.

HISTORY of the COMMONWEALTH OF FLORENCE.

From the Earliest Independence of the Commune to the Fall of the Republic in 1591.

By THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE.
Vols. III. and IV., demy 8vo.

ROBERT DALBY AND HIS WORLD OF TROUBLES.

Being the Early Days of a Connoisseur.
In 1 Volume.

THE HOLY LAND.

By WILLIAM HEPWORTH DIXON.

With Illustrations from Original Drawings and Photographs, on Steel and Wood.

2 Volumes, demy 8vo. Second Edition.

New and Cheaper Edition, Price 5s., with Steel Frontispiece, from a Painting by SANDOZ, of "Bhanavar among the Serpents."

THE SHAVING OF SHAGPAT.

By GEORGE MEREDITH.

CHAPMAN & HALL, 193, Piccadilly.

Published by J. Clements, Little F
Work on the Te

PURE DENTISTRY, and U.S. By A. ESKELL, Groves

"We feel certain all who make the tasks of the book through our lessons directed their attention to Mr. Eske read it without deriving the greatest
Sold by SIMPKIN & MARSHALL, 1

PATRIDGE

MANUFACTURING

102, FLEET STREET, 102
Carriage paid to the Country

The LARGEST and most varied
Letter, and Fcap. Papers, Envelopes hold Papers, &c.

PATRIDGE & COZENS' celeb TIONERY forwarded free to any receipt of Post-office Order.

NO CHARGE for Plain Stamping or Envelopes. Coloured Stamping Foliated Steel Crest Dies engraved from 2s.

SERMON PAPER, plain, 4s. per mense variety in all sizes and quality

Illustrated Price List of Inkstands, note, Postage Scales, Writing Cases, &c.

"Purity and Excel

COLMAN'S PRIZE-
bears their Trade Mark, the B
It was the only Mustard which obt
GREAT EXHIB

Their GENUINE and DOUBLE ticularly recommended for Family U
For MEDICINAL PURPOSES WORK

Sold by all Grocers

J. & J. COLMA

SALOM'S NEW OPER

and THE RECONNOITERER

This "Tourist's Favourite," through distinctly shows small windows to a piter's moon, the Lunar Mountains rise: "The Reconnoiterer is very
I find it all you say, wonderfully pe Ears of Carver's: "It is a beauti approves of it."—Lord Gifford, G Garnham: "Remarkably good."—
"It gives me complete satisfaction, Savary, of Wrenbury: "Quite as St. St."—Care. Savary, Royal Small have found it effective at 1,500-yards Hall, Esq.: "I never before met an the recommendation of its maker, I Glass combining so much power for
The Field: "We have carefully tried all the glasses possessed by the men equal to any of those present, with times its price."—Notes and Queries.
start without such an indispensable
The celebrated "HYTHE" GLASS and men at 24 miles, price 31s. 6d.
bearing the registered trademark,
"Hythe," are only to be had direc to, SALOM & CO., 28, Prince Street any kind in London nor elsewhere.

BROWN &

PATENT CO

Packets 6d.

Recommen

CHILDREN!

"P K A R

S E R P I

Post free, 1

S T E R E O S C O P I

34, Chesapeake, and 1

"Will astonish the groups round m
"They are truly marvellous, and s

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 201.

NOTES:—Where did Sir Thomas Overbury write "The Wife"? 365—National Portrait Exhibition, 1865, 366—The First Sanscrit Book printed in Europe, 367—Notes from the Issue Rolls, 17.—A Bit of Gossip, 368—Deaths of Premiers—Arabic Poetry cultivated in Spain during the Moorish Rule—Ralph Gout and his Pedometers—Extraordinary Christian Names—"On the Batter"—A Word in Byron's "Don Juan"—Charles James Fox, 368.

QUERIES:—The Dream of the German Poet, 370—Borell and Rainsborough—Francis Carleton of King's Co.—Charles Butler, Mathematician—Copes—Dermot, King of Leinster—John's Fyshwyke—Mrs. Lucy Hutchinson—"The Genius of Ireland"—High and Low Water at London Bridge—The Rev. John Kennedy—The Earl of Kildare—Col. John Lilburn—"Molitoris de Lanis et Phitonis Mulleribus Dialogus"—Music on a Bell—Lord Palmerston on Handwriting—Sir Archibald Primrose—Ralphston Family—Red Facings—Old Songs—"Victorian Magazine"—J. Wallis, 370.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Garrick's Portrait—An Unknown Play—"Lete make"—Romsey Abbey—Pott's "Selmane," 373.

REPLIES:—The Poet Malherbe, 375—Atlantic Cable Telegraph, 376—Uncommon Rhymes, 17.—Washington not an Infidel—Napoleon Buonaparte and the Number 666—Quotations—The Children of Edward III.—Foreign Territorial Divisions—Biblical Versification in English—Autographs in Books—Orkney and Zetland—Barometric Leeches—Biographical Queries—Erasmus "De Contemptu Mundi," 1533—Nicholas Faccio: Invention of Watch Jewelling—"Treen," &c.—Marshall—The Imperial Eagle—Sir John Mason, &c., 377.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

WHERE DID SIR THOMAS OVERBURY WRITE "THE WIFE"?

Embodying the only incident throughout the work which is at variance with the accuracy and research distinguishing all its other portions—Il n'y a pas de bon cheval si bon qu'il ne bronche pas—Mr. Forster, in his future editions of the Life of Sir John Eliot, will probably consider it advisable to revise or reject the following passage as an erratum:—

"For Overbury's writings Eliot entertained an honest admiration. The circumstances of his death had attracted much attention to them, and especially to such as were known to have been composed while he lay in the Tower gradually wasting, month by month, under slow, but deadly poison. There were passages in his poem called the 'Wife' alleged to have been sent to Somerset while his crime was actually in progress, as a warning against the false Duessa that enchained him, and these were especial favourites with Eliot. He continued to quote and admire them long after the temporary interest inspired by their writer had passed away. Eliot had also further reason to linger on Overbury's memory. 'He died where now I live.' The writer who had been the youthful associate of the second and more powerful favourite (Buckingham), then himself lay a prisoner in the Tower, and hence this touching addition to the praise. 'As it is of my country I honour it the more, and as it was the production of this place, my admiration is the greater that in such solitude and darkness, where sorrow and distraction mostly dwell, such happy entertainments and such minutes were enjoyed.'"

Eliot's belief, though it has descended through all the principal histories from his day to ours, deceiving even so practised a writer and accomplished an antiquary as Mr. Forster, is simply a fallacy. Overbury never wrote a line of the "Wife" during his imprisonment in the Tower, its composition being of a date long anterior. In the edition of Ben Jonson's Conversations with Drummond of Hawthornden, edited by Mr. Laing for the Shakespeare Society, it is stated (p. 16):

"The Countess of Rutland was nothing inferior to her father, Sir Philip Sidney, in poeie. Sir Thomas Overbury was in love with her, and caused Ben Jonson to read his 'Wife' to her, which he with an excellent grace, did, and praised the author. The morning thereafter he discoursed with Overbury, who would have him to intend (undertake) a suit that was unlawful. The lines my lady kept in remembrance, 'He comes too near who comes to be denied.'"

Of this lady—Elizabeth, wife of Roger, fifth Earl of Rutland, and only child of Sir Philip Sidney, by Frances, daughter of Sir Francis Walsingham—it is related in a letter from John Chamberlain to Sir Dudley Carleton, dated August 11, 1612:—

"The widow Countess of Rutland died about ten days since, and is privately buried in Paul's by her father, Sir Philip Sidney. Sir Walter Raleigh is slandered to have given her certain pills that despatched her."—Court and Times of James I., vol. i. p. 195.

The date of the Countess's death preceding that of Overbury's by a twelvemonth—he was committed to the Tower on the 21st April, 1613, and murdered on the 15th September following—it is obviously impossible that Jonson could have read to her his poem, if, as Eliot supposed, Overbury did not begin it till he was in the Tower—nearly a year after her death—a period in which the intensity of his sufferings, mental and physical, utterly incapacitated him for the task of composition. Nor is this the only incident destructive of the great patriot's suggestion. In the folio edition of Ben Jonson's Works, 1640, deposited in the British Museum (O. 28 m. 11; New Cat.), the following lines, not contained in any printed edition of his works, appear in the poet's autograph pasted on the inner cover of the volume. They are addressed "To the Most Noble and above his Titles, Robert Carr, Earle of Somerset," and were presented to the earl as an epithalamium on his marriage, in December 1613, with the partner of his guilt, the infamous Countess of Essex:—

"May she whom thou fir spouse to-day dost take,
Out-see that Wife in worth thy friend did make,
And thou to her that Husband may exalt
Hymen's amends to make it worth his fault;
So be there never discontent or sorrow
To rise with either of you on the morrow."

Jonson, having with equal fervour celebrated the former marriage of the lady with Lord Essex, the discovery of Overbury's murder seems to have put him out of conceit of these verses, more especially as, in the concluding lines, he apostrophises his patron as the "virtuous Somerset," and implores the Deity to give him joy. In the printed edition of his works they are therefore carefully suppressed. Jonson must have appeared but a clumsy flatterer, when unwittingly he conjured from the shades the ghost of Overbury to grace the wedding banquet which the bride but just before had fitly preluded by delivering to his murderers a portion of the wages she had promised for his death. The allusion to his "Wife" would hardly have been made by Jonson if Overbury had addressed it, as Mr. Forster suggests, to Somerset from the Tower, in deprecation of his marriage with the guilty Countess—a circumstance which the Earl would assuredly never have allowed to transpire beyond his own most secret confidants.

Overbury's poem indeed had long been known to the frequenters of the Court and those by connection or correspondence in communication with it. In the first edition of the Epigrammata addressed to Henry Prince of Wales by John Owen, the famous epigrammatist, and published in 1612, appears the following:—

"Thomæ Overbury, equitis, poemâ ingeniosum de uxore perfecta."

"Uxorem Angelico describis carmine talem,
Qualem oratorem Tullius ore potens.
Qualem describis, quamvis tibi nuberet uxor,
Æqualis tali non foret illa viro."

In the earlier publication of his poem Overbury probably confined its circulation merely to manuscript copies amongst his immediate friends at Court and in private. Anthony à Wood, in the Athenæ Oxonienses, ii. 135 (Bliss's edition), says that the work was printed several times at London whilst the author lived. But Dr. Rimbauld, in his edition of Overbury's Works, says, that the earliest edition which he could discover bears the date of 1614, and from the entry in the Stationers' Registers,—“13 Dec. 1613. To Laurence Lyle, a Poeme called a ‘Wife,’ written by Sir Thomas Overburye,” we may safely conclude it to have been the first. Following so quickly after Overbury's death, the work on its appearance had a most extraordinary run, no less than four editions having been issued in that year alone, when it came forth with the title: “A Wife, now the Widow of Sir Thomas Overburye: Being a most exquisite and singular poem of the Choyse of a Wife.” Rumours being very generally prevalent at the Tower and about London that Overbury had been murdered, it became the policy of his friends and those who envied the success or resisted the domination of Somerset to excite the public feeling in his favour, and with this object they strenuously promoted the circulation of the poem in which it was current reported the Countess of Somerset was ironical portrayed by the representation of all that was not. Villiers' rising fortunes soon after uniting with the public suspicion against Somerset, the new favourite, by the assistance of Bacon, Winwood, and the Queen, eventually managed to displace Somerset, and to consign him to the prison in which he had murdered Overbury—murder in which an exhaustive study of all the materials connected with the case convinces that the King (whose hate of Overbury far exceeded Somerset's) was a passive, but a perfect cognizant accomplice. Hence the panic terror which possessed him at the threats made by Somerset that “he would not dare to bring him to trial,” the mental agony which he exhibited during the proceedings, his secret applications to Somerset in the Tower, and the atrocious pardon and the ample pension with which he silenced the disclosures of the guilty favourite and his Countess after their conviction. C. R. H.

NATIONAL PORTRAIT EXHIBITION, 1866.

There exists in England a certain class of historical works of art which, without aspiring to be exactly what is generally understood by the expression “Portraits,” are contemporaneous personal representations of “eminent and distinguished” individuals, subjects of the British crown, of whom no other and more studied portraiture can be produced. Would it not be desirable, as well as consistent, to introduce some works of this class into next year's “National Portrait Exhibition”?

A single example will clearly explain my meaning: At Agincourt the left wing of the army of our Henry V. was most ably commanded by Thomas, Lord Camois, K.G. This same gallant nobleman married Elizabeth Mortimer, relict of no less a personage than Henry Percy, the famous “Hotspur.” At Trotton, in Sussex, is preserved a monumental brass, admirably engraved, to the memory of this Lord and Lady Camois, with what I have designated “personal representations” of them both, executed in their own times. I have never seen in any illustrated Shakespeare a reduced engraving from this fine old plate, and possibly the Earl of Derby himself may not be aware that there is in existence any such “personal representation” of Hotspur's “Kate” and her second lord: still, would not a fac-simile of this plate, carefully executed, be a worthy accession to the ranks of the exhibited “Portraits” properly so called? And, if so, might not the “counterfeit presentment” of Lord and Lady Camois be happily associated with a select few “personal representations,” of the same order, of personages who, long before the days of the painters of Portraits, "attained" to "eminence or distinction in England"? CHARLES BOUTELL.

It is the bounden duty, and will doubtless be the pleasure, of every true born Englishman to support, to the utmost of his power, the grand national undertaking, which you announce as proposed by the Earl of Derby. At the Mote, near Maidstone, the Earl of Romney has charming portraits of Sir Cloudesley Shovel; Sir Henry Wiatt in prison, with the cat that fed him there; his son, Sir Thomas Wiatt, the elder; and his son, Sir Thomas Wiatt, the younger; all historic characters (all most authentic)—Lord Romney representing the families. He has also several fine portraits of Cromwell and other Parliamentary notables. If proper application be made to him, I cannot doubt of his readiness to lend all or any of the above portraits.

I have an admirable one of the learned Sir Roger Twysden, author of the Decem Scriptores, Defence of the Church, &c. &c., a most authentic portrait, which I will with pleasure lend. At Surrenden, Sir Edward Dering has a good picture (authentic) of Speaker Lenthall, and another of Dean Bargrave. CANTIANUS.

THE FIRST SANSKRIT BOOK PRINTED IN EUROPE.

I formerly contributed a somewhat flourishing note on The seasons of Calidda (Calcutta, 1792), which was the first book printed in the Sanskrit language, and have now to offer, as a humble companion to it, an account of "the first Sanskrit book ever printed in Europe." It is entitled—

"The HĪTĪPADĒSA in the Sanskrit language. Library, East-India House: Cox, Son, and Baylis, printers, London, 1810." 4to. Preliminaries, pp. viii. Text, (A) to P in fours, and Q two leaves.

The preliminaries consist of the title as above, and also in Sanscrit; with an advertisement and list of the contents in English. The volume was produced by order of the Directors of the East-India Company for the use of the students at Haileybury College, and the number of copies printed was five hundred. Four hundred were absorbed by the College; twenty-five were sent to Fort George; some were disposed of as presents; and the small remainder sold.

The editor, who is not named, was the celebrated Charles Wilkins, who had before made a translation of the same work from an ancient manuscript. It was published at Bath in 1787. The text of 1810 is that of the Calcutta edition, with additions and emendations from two manuscripts.

A French translation of the HĪTĪPADĒSA forms one of the volumes of the Bibliothèque Elzevirienne of M. Jannet—in which M. Edouard Lancereau, the translator, has given us an admirable specimen of learned and conscientious editorship.

I had not seen the Bibliotheca Sanskrita of professor Gildemeister, and perhaps was not aware of its existence, when I wrote my note on the Seasons of 1792. He thus describes the precious volume: "Liber Sanscritus omnium qui typis exscripti sunt primus isque rarissimus." On the HĪTĪPADĒSA he is not so fortunate. He says, "in usum Collegii Hertfordensis librum edidit A. Hamilton, cujus nomen tacere voluit Schlegelius." Audiffret, who wrote the account of Hamilton in the Biographie universelle, makes no such assertion. He thus concludes: "On doit regretter qu'aucun journal Anglais n'ait consacré à ce savant distingué, dont la vie a été assez ignorée, un article nécrologique d'une certaine étendue."

BOLTON CORNEY.

NOTES FROM THE ISSUE ROLLS—No. V.

1381. Oct. 4. Payment to Philippa Pycard. (Mich. 5 R. II.)

Nov. 16. Payment of 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, and also 6*s.* 8*d.* to Geoffrey Chaucer. (Ib.)

Nov. 28. To Nicholas Brembre, and John Philipot, Collectors of Customs and Subsidies of the king in the port of London, and Geoffrey Chaucer, Comptroller of the same in the aforesaid port, &c. 46*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* (Ib.)

Dec. 21. Payments to Geoffrey and Philippa Chaucer. (Ib.)

1382. July 22. Payments to Geoffrey and Philippa Chaucer. (Pasch. 5 R. II.)

Nov. 11. Ditto. (Ib.)

Dec. 10. Geoffrey Chaucer, Comptroller of the Customs. (Ib.)

1383. Feb. 19. Payment to Philippa Pycard. (Ib.)

Feb. 27. To Geoffrey Chaucer, Esquire, 6*s.* 8*d.* (Ib.)

May 5. Payments to Geoffrey and Philippa Chaucer. (Pasch. 6 R. II.)

1383. Oct. 24. To Geoffrey Chaucer, to whom the late lord King assigned xx marks per annum for his life, for the good service which he had done and should do to the said King, by letters patent, and in recompense for a "pichere" of the said Geoffrey, which the said Lord King Edward, grandfather of the King, sometime conceded to him in the gate of the City of London, &c., for the whole life of the said Geoffrey, to receive above the xx marks granted by the said grandfather, and confirmed by the present king. 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* (Mich. 7 R. II.)

1383. Nov. 23. Payment to Philippa Pycard. (Ib.)

To Nicholas Brembre and John Philipot, Collectors of Customs, and Geoffrey Chaucer, Comptroller; money delivered to them this day in regard of the assiduity, labour, and diligence brought to bear by them on the duties of their office, for the year late elapsed, 40*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*. (Ib.)

1384. Apr. 30. Payments to Geoffrey and Philippa Chaucer. (Pasch. 7 R. II.)

Dec. 3. Payment to Philippa Picard. (Mich. 8 R. II.)

Dec. 9. Philip Chaucer, Comptroller of Customs. (Ib.)

1385. Apr. 24. Payment to Geoffrey Chaucer, 6*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*., with another payment of the same amount; and to Philippa Chaucer, 6*l*. 8*s*. 8*d*. (Pasch. 8 R. II.)

HERMENTRUDE.

A BIT OF GOSSIP.

The perusal of "N. & Q." from "end to end" has been my pleasant Saturday evening's recreation from the first number to the last; and it has suited my fancy never to look at the signature of any article until I had read it. So I proceeded this evening with the history of Tenison's Library, when at its close appeared the name of my old friend, and a justly valued correspondent of my favourite periodical, MR. LEE. I was tacitly saluting him, when I was struck by the title of the next article on "The Pancake Bell," and, on reading it, I thought how my friend would smile at the notion of its being "peculiar to the city of Lincoln!" I should not be surprised if "our Editor" has not already a letter from him descriptive of the delight with which the apprentices of the good town of Sheffield anticipate and listen to the ringing of the "pancake bell" on Shrove-Tuesday forenoon; ay, and how gratefully he and I, "in days of yore," enjoyed, as boys, some of its culinary concomitants. A few pages onward I was almost startled to find my aid directly invoked by MR. LEE anent the authorship of lines quoted by him, and which I have certainly met with somewhere else, but I cannot say where. With reference to a succeeding query, it seems obvious to remark that the uncomplimentary expression "Hatchet-faced" (p. 331) has no such recondite origin as that suggested by MR. TIMBS. The verse containing the rhyme for "porringer" (p. 330) has often been printed. The only really unmatchable English word has been said to be "silver." Can W. C. B. match it with a rhyme? I am pretty sure one occurs somewhere in the beautiful volume by Mr. Wise on "The New Forest;" but it is not at this moment within my reach.

While I have the pen in hand, it may acceptable to MR. WHITMORE to be informed that in a List of Workshop Rectors, printed in Holland's history of that town, the name of Henry Spurr does not appear; nor does it seem likely that he either preceded or followed Richard Bernard in the living. What is the authority on which the query is founded?

As I began with a personal remark, I may be permitted to end with one. Long as it is since I had the pleasure of meeting my friend MR. LEE, except in these pages, how fain would I, although advanced in the last decade of octogenarian longevity, anticipate the gratification of visiting with him, what promises to be one of the most interesting exhibitions of the age, the "National Portrait Gallery," which is to be opened in the spring of next year.

J. H.

Sheffield.

DECEASE OF PREMIERS.—The great loss that the country has recently sustained recalls to mind similar events,—instances, that is to say, of a statesman dying when Premier. Although Sir Robert Walpole is commonly reckoned the first who held that exalted post, as it is now defined, yet the list of parallel events may be commenced with the death of Lord Sunderland, his predecessor, or rather, who intervened between his first and second ministry. He died in 1720 in most painful circumstances, to which Lord Macaulay, in his last and posthumous volume, has, by anticipation, a striking allusion. Mr. Pelham died, after a lingering illness, in 1754. He was succeeded by the Duke of Newcastle; the only instance of two brothers reaching this dignity. The Marquis of Rockingham died in 1782, his death causing a complete dislocation and reconstruction of parties. Mr. Pitt died in 1806 leaving his administration paralysed, and the country in a critical and alarming position, as has been admirably narrated by Lord Stanhope in the best of political biographies. Mr. Perceval, in 1812, fell under the attack of a lunatic. Sixthly, and finally, Mr. Canning died in 1827, a few weeks after his elevation.

K.

ARABIC POETRY CULTIVATED IN SPAIN DURING THE MOORISH RULE.—The following curious passage, from a rare volume in Spanish, entitled Origenes de la Poesia Castellana, por Don Luis Joseph Velazquez (Malaga, 1754, pp. 13, 14), shows to what an extent the generality of the Spanish people forgot their own language, as well as the Latin, so that not even one person in a thousand could compose a letter in Latin, though almost every one could write Arabic with purity and elegance, and even compose verses in that language with more grace and vigour than the Moors themselves. These are the author's words:—

"Como regularmente los vencidos reciben en todo las leyes de los vencedores, los Arabes, que dominaron á España cerca de ochocientos años, introduxeron en ella su lengua y su literatura, y con esta tambien su poesia; de suerte que la poesia Arabiga vino á ser tan vulgar en

España como lo era en la Africa misma. Para comprender quan presto se introduxo en España esta poesia, lo mucho que los Españoles se dieron á ella, y el total abandono en que vino á caer la Latina, bastava observar lo que acerca de esto dexó escrito el mismo Alvaro Corduvense.

"Dice, 'que era tanto lo que los Españoles havian olvidado el Latin por el Arabe, que apenas entre mil se hallaria uno, que supiesse escribir en lengua Latina una carta; que todos se havian dado á la lengua Arabiga, y á los libros caldeos; y que apenas se hallaria quien no supiesse escribir el Arabe con delicadeza, y componer versos en la misma lengua con mas primor y gracia que los Arabes mismos. Tambien florecieron muchas mugeres doctas en la poesia, aventajandose á las demás las damas Andaluzas; y entre ellas es famosa Maria Alphaisuli, natural de Sevilla, que florecia en el siglo quarto de la Hegira, y fue en su tiempo la Sapho de la poesia Arabe.'"

J. DALTON.

Norwich.

RALPH GOUT AND HIS PEDOMETERS. — I find in Kent's Directory, 1781, the name of Ralph Gout, a watchmaker, of No. 6, Norman Street, Old Street, St. Luke's, London. He was the patentee of a watch in which time and measure were united. An engraving now before me gives two representations of this watch. The dial-plate of No. 1 has upon it four small circles of figures, besides the ordinary circle on the outer edge. The divisions on this latter circle, however, indicate every 1000 steps to the amount of 60,000. One long hand points to them. The hours and minutes are shown by two hands on one of the four small circles at the top of the dial-plate. The divisions on the small circle to the right show every step taken to the amount of ten. The divisions on the small circle in the middle, every ten steps to the amount of 100. The divisions on the small circle to the left every 100 steps to the amount of 1000. The dial-plate of No. 2 has upon it three small circles of figures, besides the ordinary circle on the outer edge. The divisions on this circle indicate every 100 steps to the amount of 1000. The hours and minutes are shown as on the other dial. The divisions on the small circle to the right show every step to the amount of ten. The divisions on the small circle to the left, every ten steps to the amount of 100. This engraving appears to have been issued by Gout in his trade. It is headed, "By the King's Royal Patent, Time and Measure United, by Ralph Gout, No. 6, Norman Street, St. Luke's, Old Street, London." My copy is mutilated at the bottom, but I can make out the words "The Hands may be set backward or forward." I find in the South Kensington Museum a gold watch and pedometer combined, in an enamelled and chased case. The diameter of the watch is two inches and a quarter, and the length of the case is eight inches seven eighths. This instrument was made by Ralph Gout. It was purchased by the nation for 20l. 10s. It is described in the Inventory of the Museum as "old English work." Having regard to the ancient date of the horological instruments among which it is placed, and also to the date given above, I think that description is hardly correct. EDWARD J. WOOD.

5, Charles Square, North.

EXTRAORDINARY CHRISTIAN NAMES.—Has any one noticed the frequent recurrence of these in the first column of The Times during the last few weeks? I have noted the following unusual names:—

Fairlina, Mackenzie, Hebe, Gracilla, Albina, Iva, Elvina, Palacia. It is perhaps desirable to add that all the above are female names.

HERMONTRODE.

"ON THE BATTER."—In the Slang Dictionary, published by John Camden Hotten (ed. 1884), I find the following explanation of this locution:—

"BATTER, wear and tear; 'can't stand the better,' i. e. not equal to the task; 'on the Batter,' literally 'on the streets,' or given up to roistering and debauchery."

The most obvious explication of "batter," used in this sense, would be that when a man abandons himself up to profligacy and intemperance, both his hat and his constitution are apt to get "battered." But this has always struck me as needlessly far-fetched. Slang does not bring down its game at such a long shot. It usually picks up the first thing in technique lying close to its hand. It was among working-men that I first heard "on the batter" employed as an equivalent for going "on the spree" (I noted this in an article on "Slang" in Household Words ten years ago); and it always struck me as being a piece of trade slang. This impression was lately confirmed by turning up "Batter" in the Builder's Dictionary; or, Gentleman and Architect's Companion, London, 1735. Here I find:—

"BATTER, a Term used by Bricklayers, Carpenters, &c., to signify that a Wall, Piece of Timber, or the like, doth not stand upright but leans from you-ward, when you stand before it."

In short, to a builder, anything that is askew, or tottering, is "on the batter." Does not this pretty fully bear out the idea of a man falling away from the right path, and lurching and reeling about in dissipation? Compare with this, as a technical term converted into slang, "doing things on the square."

I follow this note by a little query. The iron ring or fetter which English convicts were wont to wear round one ankle was called a "Basil." Can any one tell me why? In joiners' technique the "basil" is the angle to which the edge of an iron tool is ground. To work on soft wood the basil should be twelve degrees; for hard eighteen. But what has the edge of a tool to do with a fetter? GEORGE AUGUSTUS SELL.

A WORD IN BYRON'S "DON JUAN."—In Byron's Don Juan, canto ii. stanza 96, the last word in the last line (in all the English editions which I have seen) must be a misprint. I quote from ed. Murray, London, 1846, 8vo, p. 620:—

"Some swore that they heard breakers, others guns,
And all mistook about the latter ones."

Here once must surely be ones, which is demanded both by the sense and the rhyme. They often fancied they heard breakers or guns; breakers, indeed, they might occasionally hear, but guns never;

"And all mistook about the latter ones."

Am I right in this? GEORGE STEPHENS.
Cheapinghaven, Denmark.

CHARLES JAMES FOX.—I am not aware whether the great Whig leader has ever been noticed as a candidate for dramatic honours; but if the following letter in my possession was written by him, it affords evidence that he did try his hand upon a "small piece" for the stage. It is addressed to Mr. Sheridan, the proprietor or manager of Drury Lane Theatre, and is subscribed with the letters "C. J. F.;" and judging from the easy familiarity of his address, and the anxiety to conceal his name, together with his known indulgence in literary trifles, I feel inclined to think that he was the writer:—

"Dear Sheridan,—I send you here inclosed a small Piece for your perusal. If you think it has sufficient merit to Entertain the Publick, I beg you will be so good as to Introduce it under your own Direction, and the benefit which may arise from its publication will be at the service of whomsoever you may chuse to Bestow it upon.

"I should have waited upon you myself, but that I would not have my name known to your Learn'd friends until the success of this piece is Determin'd—if you'll be so kind as to Leave y^r opinion of it in a Letter with y^r Servants I will send my Servant for it on thursday morning.
"C. J. F."

The letter has no date. I do not know the character of Mr. Fox's handwriting, but I shall be happy to show the letter to any one better informed, whom you will send to your old correspondent.
D. S.

Queries.

THE DREAM OF THE GERMAN POET.

The following is quoted in Orbs of Heaven (p. 195), as "The Dream of the German Poet." As it is rather long, I would not have troubled you with it, had I not for some time searched in vain for the original; and were it not, from its sublimity of thought, a gem in any setting.

I wish very much to learn its author, and to see it undiluted by translation:—

"God called up from dreams a man in the vestibule of Heaven, saying: 'Come thou hither, and see the glory of my house.' And to the servants that stood around his throne, he said—'Take him, and undress him from his robes of flesh: cleanse his vision, and put a new breath into his nostrils; only touch not with any change his human heart—the heart that weeps and trembles.' It was done: and with a mighty angel for his guide, the man stood ready for his infinite voyage; and from the terraces of Heaven, without sound or farewell, at once they wheeled away into endless space. Sometimes with the solemn flight of angel wing they fled through Zarahs of darkness, through wildernesses of death, that divided the worlds of life; sometimes they swept over frontiers, that were quickening under prophetic motions from God. Then, from a distance that is counted only in Heaven, light dawned for a time through a sleep film: by unutterable pace the light swept to them; they, by unutterable pace, to the light. In a moment, the rushing of planets was upon them; in a moment, the blazing of suns was around them. Then came eternities of twilight, that revealed but were not revealed. On the right hand and on the left towered mighty constellations, that, by self-repetitions and answers from afar, that, by counter-positions, built up triumphal gates, whose architraves, whose archways, horizontal, upright, rested, rose, at altitude by spans that seemed ghostly from infinitude. Without measure were the architraves, past number were the archways, beyond memory the gates. Within were stairs that scaled the eternities below: above was below, below was above, to the man stripped of gravitating body. Depth was swallowed up in height insurmountable—height was swallowed up in depth unfathomable. Suddenly, as thus they rode from infinite to infinite—suddenly, as thus they tilted over abyssal worlds—a mighty cry arose: that systems more mysterious, that worlds more billowy, other heights, and other depths, were coming, were nearing, were at hand. Then the man sighed and stopped, shuddered and wept. His over-laden heart uttered itself in tears, and he said: 'Angel, I will go no farther; for the spirit of man acheth with this infinity. Insufferable is the glory of God. Let me lie down in the grave, and hide me from the persecution of the infinite: for end, I see, there is none.' And from all the listening stars that shone around issued a choral voice—'The man speaks truly: end there is none that ever yet we heard of!' 'End is there none?' the angel solemnly demanded: 'Is there indeed no end? and is this the sorrow that kills you?' But no voice answered, that he might answer himself. Then the angel threw up his glorious hands to the Heaven of Heavens, saying: 'End is there none to the universe of God. Lo! also there is no beginning.'

K. R. C.

BORELLI AND RAINSBOROUGH.—Whitelock's Memorials contains the following note, under the date of May 28, 1645:—

"The declaration of the transactions with the States' ambassadors was published, wherein the parliament set forth the abusive and ill carriage of the States' ambassadors Borelli and Rainsborough, both made knights and barons by the King."—Edit. 1853, vol. i. p. 440.

Where shall I find any account of these persons? I am especially anxious to know something of the man whom Whitelock calls (surely miscalls) Rainsborough.
A. O. V. P.

FRANCIS CARLETON OF KING'S CO.—Wanted to connect satisfactorily the Francis Carleton mentioned in "N. & Q.," 3rd S. iii. 295, 375, with the pedigree of the Carletons of Oxfordshire, Surrey, and Middlesex, or with that of the Cambridgeshire Carletons. Both these pedigrees are given at length in the Harleian and Additional MSS. at the British Museum. Can any one give me any information upon this point? S.

8, Mornington Crescent,

CHARLES BUTLER, MATHEMATICIAN. — This gentleman published, in 1814, a most admirable treatise entitled An Easy Introduction to the Mathematics, in two volumes (Oxford: Parker). In a dedication to the Rev. James Wilding, M.A., Master of Cheam School, he speaks of himself as having laboured in that establishment for nearly thirty years. I should be glad of a reference to any particulars of his life, or to any other work he wrote. D. BLAIR.

Melbourne.

COPES. — In the letter of an eye-witness to the funeral of George II. occurs the following mention of the vestments of the clergy: —

"The Bishop of Rochester, as Dean (of Westminster), and the Prebends, all in their copes (which I thought too gay for the occasion, being of gold stuffs in different patterns), and singing boys and men, went to meet the corpse at the entrance of the Abbey," &c.

Was this the last royal funeral at which copes were worn? They are still used at coronations. Are they the perquisite of the Lord Chamberlain, of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, or are they kept for use whenever they may be required? If so, are they to be seen by application to the persons appointed to take charge of them?

THUS.

DERMOT, KING OF LEINSTER. — What are the arms ascribed to Dermot, King of Leinster, whose daughter married Richard Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke? FITZCOUNT.

JOHN'S FYSSHWYKE, according to the Valor Ecclesiasticus (reign Hen. VIII.) was rector of Holton, in the diocese of Norwich, county of Suffolk. Can any Suffolk antiquary kindly tell me where I am likely to gain information respecting this man? Has a History of the Parish of Holton ever been printed? If so, when and where?

II. FISHWICK.

Carr Hill, near Rochdale.

MRS. LUCY HUTCHINSON, the wife and biographer of Colonel John Hutchinson, is stated in a recent compilation, to have died Oct. 11, 1659. This is of course absurd, as it is well known she survived her husband, whose death occurred in 1664. The error has doubtless arisen from the colonel's epitaph, part of which is as follows: —

"He married Lucy, the daughter of Sir Allen Apsley, Lieutenant of the Tower of London, by his third wife, the Lady Lucy, daughter of Sir John St. John, of Lidlard Tregos, in the county of Wilts, who dying at Owthorpe, October 11, 1659, lieth buried in the same vault."

It must be admitted that this is so very clumsily expressed that its being misunderstood can occasion no surprise; but in point of fact the person who died at Owthorpe Oct. 11, 1659, was not Lucy, the wife of Col. Hutchinson, but her mother, Lucy, lady Apsley. (See Memoir of Col. Hutchinson, 10th edition, p. 18.) Indeed, Lucy Hutchinson was herself the author of the epitaph referred to.

Still the question remains, when did Lucy Hutchinson die? This it is hoped may be answered satisfactorily. In Ripley and Dana's New American Cyclopædia, it is stated that she survived her husband many years, and died in the latter part of the seventeenth century.

Should the Memoir of Col. Hutchinson be again reprinted, I would suggest that the Genealogical Table of the families of Hutchinson and Apsley which appeared in the earlier editions should not be omitted, but the error which appears therein as to the year of the colonel's death should of course be rectified. S. Y. R.

"THE GENIUS OF IRELAND." — I have an octavo MS. of fifty-six pages, entitled "The Genius of Ireland, a Masque," without any name or date, but apparently written about the middle of the last century. Has it appeared in print? If so what may be the date of its publication, and who was the author? The MS. was, I think, in the collection of the Earl of Charlemont. ABRA.

HIGH AND LOW WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE. — In an article in Chambers's Journal (4th series, part XIV. p. 115), the writer observes: —

"We notice that the inhabitants of the country generally appear to be very sensitive on the score of the exact moment at which it is high water and low water at London Bridge. Why this should be, we do not profess wholly to understand."

Can any of your readers explain the mystery of the exact moment at which it is high water? I confess my ignorance, and shall be glad to be enlightened. FRANCIS MEWBURN.

Larchfield, Darlington.

THE REV. JOHN KENNEDY, who was Rector of Bradley, in Derbyshire, published various works between 1752 and 1774. Particulars respecting him are desired, especially the date of his decease. Dr. Johnson wrote the Dedication to the King, which is prefixed to Mr. Kennedy's Complete System of Astronomical Chronology, 1762. I do not find that this circumstance is mentioned in Boswell's Life of Johnson. S. Y. R.

THE EARL OF KILDARE. — In a collection of epitaphs given in the Dublin Weekly Journal, Dec. 9, 1749, the following appears: —

"Who kill'd Kildare? Who dar'd Kildare to kill?
Death kill'd Kildare, who dares kill whom he will."

Of whom and by whom was this written? and where to be found? ABRA.

COL. JOHN LILBURN.—Who was the author of Lieut.-Colonel John Lilburn tried and cast, or his Case and Craft discovered . . . Small 4to. Published by authority in 1653? A. O. V. P.

"MOLITORIS DE LANIIS ET PHITONICIS MULIERIBUS DIALOGUS."—Some months ago I appealed to your readers for descriptions of, or permission to examine, any early copies of this work that might be in their possession.* That appeal was ineffectual, and I now wish to ask whether any modern bibliographer has investigated the questio verata of the early editions?

The British Museum, and my own collection, contain seven distinct impressions; and, with the aid of Panzer, Hain, and Crevenna, I have been able to obtain accurate descriptions of sixteen editions, including the later and dated ones. The catalogues at the Museum have not ventured to assign a probable place, date, or typographer to the copy in the Grenville Library, or to that in the King's. The former, I may here remark, contains impressions of the singular woodcuts from the same blocks that were used in the German edition printed at Rutlingen (s. a. and typ. nom.) in 4to, also in the Museum, and is apparently from the same press. Quere, Whose and when? Mention of this work was made in your columns in 1855 (1st S. xi. 514); and should your Warwick correspondent be still happily among your readers, I would inform him that, although Hain and Panzer were unacquainted with the edition in his possession, it is fully described by Crevenna (vol. vi. p. 29). Does D. M.'s copy, in the imprimatur, read "Stolckgrasse" or "Stolckgrasse"? Perhaps another correspondent, J. M. (1st S. xi. 426), who possesses a copy of the Cologne edition by Grevbruch, in 1594, 4to, would permit me to communicate with him. A. CHALLSTETH.

1, Verulam Buildings, Gray's Inn.

MUSIC ON A BELL.—Can any one give me information respecting the music on the 4th bell at St. Mary's, Oxon, A.D. 1612? Part of it is printed in Mr. Lukis's book. It is evidently a series of melodies, but I cannot make them out. I have submitted it to musical scholars, who have been equally unable to do so. J. T. F.

The College, Hurstpierpoint.

LORD PALMERSTON ON HANDWRITING.—A few years ago, a letter was written by the late Lord Palmerston on the propriety of teaching a good serviceable legible hand in schools. The date of this letter, or speech, is much needed for purposes of reference to it in the journals of that date, for the benefit of Evening Schools this winter.

A. B. SUTER.

[* We have an early German edition, Augsburg, 1508, which we will leave at the office of "N. & Q." for our correspondent's examination.—ED. "N. & Q."]

SIR ARCHIBALD PRIMROSE, Clerk of the Council in Scotland, is stated in Keith's Scottish Bishops, to have been a kinsman of Aitkin, Bishop of Moray at the time (1650). Can any one kindly help me to the relationship between them? F. M. S. 229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

RALPHSTON FAMILY.—Can any of your readers supply information relative to any English or Scottish family named Ralphston or Ralphson? Ancestors of a family of that name formerly possessed estates in Meath, Ireland. The arms of the latter were—A lion rampant, in chief three bezants. FITZCOURT.

RED FACINGS.—I am obliged to your correspondents for their answers, but I think they have not fully understood my queries on "Facings," &c. (3rd S. viii. 69, 134, 238). The colours now worn by English regiments as facings are red, blue, green, white, buff, yellow, black, sky-blue, and purple—nine in all. Although popinjay-green, philomel-yellow, &c., no longer appear in the Army Lists, there are many shades of yellow and green recognised by the army clothing department. Orange was worn by the 35th Foot and 14th Light Dragoons. Light grey by the 70th Foot and Kent Militia.

My query was intended to be—1st, Whether these more exceptional facings (sky-blue, orange, and grey,) were at any time worn by any regiments, Cavalry or Infantry, besides those just referred to? And if so, by what corps?

2nd, Whether the facings I have seen worn by some continental troops—viz. pink, brown, dark grey, &c., were at any time worn as facings by British regiments? And if so, by what corps?

In regard to the query respecting second lieutenants, I find the following corps, disbanded in 1763, had them in place of ensigns, viz. 70th, 85th, 88th, 94th, and 97th. Was there any difference in the equipment of these corps. The rank of second lieutenant was, in after times, always confined to the Ordnance corps and Rifle and Fusileer regiments. MILLS PEDITUS.

OLD SONGS.—Can any of your readers inform me where I may obtain copies of the words and music of an old glee, entitled "The Night was stormy, dark, and chill," and of an old song commencing "Twas night when the farmer, his fire-side near"? S.

"VICTORIAN MAGAZINE."—Can any Australian reader inform me who was the editor, or give me the names of any of the contributors to the Victorian Magazine, published at Melbourne, June and July, 1859? R. INGLIS.

J. WALLIS.—Can any of your readers give me any information regarding J. Wallis, author of Moses in the Ark of Bulrushes, a sacred drama, 1835, Belper. Is he author of any other works? R. IRELAND.

Queries with Answers.

GARRICK'S PORTRAIT. — Is there any portrait or miniature by an approved master of Garrick, who is said to have entertained a great aversion to his likeness being taken? A. B.

[So far from Garrick "having entertained a great aversion to his likeness being taken," we are inclined to think that he was never tired of sitting for his portrait, and cared not for the trouble so long as it increased his popularity. To whatever oblivion the celebrated actors of the last age have been consigned, the pencil of Hogarth, Dance, Zoffany, and Reynolds, have left our British Roscius not the slightest reason to be apprehensive that his Proteus countenance would ever be forgotten. Garrick's face was wondrously under self-control, and his features had a peculiar flexibility about them, which rendered variety and rapid expression easy matters with him. A story was once current, that he had frightened Hogarth by appearing before him as the ghost of Fielding, having assumed a representation of the great novelist's features.

There was a charming portrait of Garrick, painted in the year 1764, by Pompeo Battoni formerly in the possession of the Rev. Sir Richard Kaye, Dean of Lincoln. This picture (a half-length) represented Garrick in a pleasing attitude, with a most animated countenance. He is drawn holding up the cover of the Vatican Terence, opening the book where the masks are delineated, and clothed in a suit of murrey-coloured velvet.

The following list of Garrick portraits by Joshua Reynolds appears in William Cotton's Catalogue of Reynolds's Portraits, 8vo, 1857:—

1. Garrick between Tragedy and Comedy, exhibited in 1762, in the possession of J. Angerstein, Esq.
2. In the character of Kiteley, exhibited at the British Institution, 1827. In the possession of the Queen.
3. Painted for Mr. Thrale. Purchased at Mrs. Piozzi's sale by Dr. Burney for 175 guineas. Proprietor, Archdeacon Burney.

We are inclined to think this must be the chef-d'œuvre, representing the great actor with his hands clasped, and resting on the manuscript of a Prologue, on the composition of which he is engaged. Archdeacon Burney died on Nov. 1, 1864, and bequeathed his books, pictures, and articles of virtue to his widow and two sons, in whose possession the portrait still remains.

4. The one exhibited at the British Institution, 1826. Proprietor, Earl Amherst.

5. Mr. and Mrs. Garrick sitting on a garden seat, and Garrick reading to her. Painted for the Hon. T. Fitzmaurice, and exhibited in the Royal Academy in 1773.

Zoffany's portrait of Garrick was painted expressly for the elder Colman. It afterwards passed into the possession of Mr. Harris, proprietor of Covent Garden Theatre, and was sold by auction in 1819 with the rest of that gentleman's valuable collection of theatrical portraits. In the auctioneer's catalogue, published at that time, it is stated that "to avoid the different changes of countenance with which Garrick used to amuse himself while sitting for his portrait, Zoffany took this likeness, concealed in an ante-chamber during the times of Garrick's shaving his head." For the vivacity and intelligence of the countenance this picture is most remarkable.

There are no less than twelve portraits of our Roscius, in different characters, in the dramatic gallery of the Garrick Club, 85, King Street, Covent Garden. Among the portraits in the late George Daniel's collection were the following:—

2116. Miniature of David Garrick as Kiteley, in Every Man in his Humour, beautifully executed and engraved.

2119. Original miniature of David Garrick, by Pine, of Bath, of exquisite finish.

2120. Garrick between Tragedy and Comedy, finely executed on ivory in Indian ink, in oval setting.

2123. Whole length portrait of Garrick, in oil, leaning against the bust of Shakspeare, with Temple of Shakspeare in his garden at Hampton. Purchased immediately after the decease of Mrs. Garrick.]

AN UNKNOWN PLAY. — A volume of old quarto plays recently fell under my notice, chiefly of the time of James II., William III., and Anne, as to one of which I am desirous of obtaining information. The address to the reader is singularly curious. The collection appears to have been bound considerably more than a century ago, and the list of contents in MS. is apparently of the same date; but, although the play stands number three, the index-maker has left the name blank; the title-page being torn out, and no clue to the name of the play being otherwise afforded.

In the address to the reader we are informed that—

"This play, since its coming to light, has so cleared itself and me from aspersion, that I am afraid what I shall now [say] will appear vanity, and a flourishing the colours after victory; but I think it not prudent to lay down arms when there is an enemy in the field: several stories that once wounded my reputation, and half smothered this play, still march up and down, and do me private mischief, and every day they get new detachments of additional inventions: 'Tis said I openly confest who I meant by the principal characters in the play, particularly by that of Bartoline. That this is false common sense and the character itself will prove. Is it possible I should be such a Bartholomew-Cokes to pull out my purse in a fair, and as soon as ever a knave tickled my ear with a straw (a little silly flattery) I should let go my discretion and perhaps my fortune? (For libels may prove costly things.) 'Tis known I am too guilty of the other extreme of reserv'dness. I do not often expose my writings, much less my thoughts naked."

On the next page the following passage occurs referring to Bartoline, an old lawyer, who is married to Lucinda, described in the dramatis personæ as "an ignorant, wanton, country girl":—

"Nor is any one old man more than another mimicked by Mr. Lee's way of speaking, which all the comedians can witness, was my own invention, and Mr. Lee was taught it by me. To prove this farther, I have printed Bartoline's part in that manner of spelling, by which I taught it to Mr. Lee. They that have no teeth cannot pronounce many letters plain, but perpetually lisp and break their words, and some words they cannot bring out at all."

ATLANTIC CABLE TELEGRAPH.

(3rd S. viii. 204, 270.)

Was ever a message conveyed between England and America by the Atlantic Cable? At the time of the last failure I heard an opinion to the contrary expressed by a man eminent for his engineering attainments, which opinion I now find is shared by your correspondent, MR. PINKERTON, who says, that he "with many others have the very best reasons for believing that there never was one word or signal passed between America and England, or vice versa, by the Atlantic Cable of 1858." This matter should be set at rest, and the truth made apparent; but how is that result to be attained, seeing that the information put forward emanated solely from an interested quarter—the Atlantic Telegraph Company itself? Ere we refer to the telegrams, let us make a note of the history of the cable.

In the laying of the first one, the Niagara (American) and Agamemnon were employed. The expedition sailed on Thursday, August 6, 1857, but had scarcely got four miles when the cable broke, and the boats were engaged in underrunning the cable, and repairing the defect till Friday afternoon, when the expedition started again. All went smoothly till four o'clock on the following Tuesday, when the signals suddenly ceased, the cable had broken in deep water about 280 miles from Valentia.

On the second occasion the same vessels, the Agamemnon and Niagara, reached their rendezvous in mid-ocean on the night of July 28, 1858; the ends of the cable were spliced on the 20th, and the two ships parted company—the one steering to the Old, the other to the New, World. On Thursday, August 5, the Agamemnon dropped anchor in Doulus Bay, Valentia, there being, it was stated, good signals between the Agamemnon in Ireland and the Niagara in America. The cable end was landed at three p.m., and taken to the company's station. Now for the telegrams.

1. Message received by the directors of the Atlantic Telegraph Company:—

"Valentia, Tuesday, 5 A.M. Newfoundland has commenced the use and adjustment of their special instruments for speaking. Last night, at 11-15, we received coiled current from them at the rate of forty per minute perfectly. They are now sending the usual letters for adjustment of instruments, and we have received from them the words, 'Repeat, please,' and 'Please send slower for present,' spelt in full. They have also sent the signals for repeat frequently, proving that, though receiving, the instruments are not yet adjusted with sufficient accuracy for them to get distinctly. I forward by this post the slip of signals first transmitted and received across the Atlantic by the company's instrument. The speed at which the letters come out seems faster than at Keyham, and the current are apparently as strong."

2. Message despatched on Monday evening, Aug.

9, from the directors in England to the directors in America:—

"Europe and America are united by telegraph. to God in the Highest; on earth peace, goodwill to men."

This message, including the addresses of senders and receivers, occupied thirty-five minutes in transmission.

3. Next we have messages exchanged between the Queen and the President of the United States that of her Majesty consisting of ninety-words was received at Newfoundland in six and seven minutes.

4. The President's message numbered 143 was received and occupied two hours in transmission.

5. On Tuesday morning, August 10, message received at Valentia from Mr. Cyrus Field:—

"Cyrus W. Field, Newfoundland, to Directors of Atlantic Telegraph Company, London. Newfoundland, 10 day. Entered Trinity Bay, noon of the 5th. Landed cable on the 6th. On Thursday morning, ship at St. John's two miles of shore cable with end ready for splicing. When was cable landed at Valentia? Answer by telegraph, and forward by letters to New York."

6. August 18: complimentary message from the directors of the New York, Newfoundland, London Telegraph Company, in reply to the congratulatory message from Directors of Atlantic Telegraph Company.

7. August 20: the first business message received, announcing a collision between the steamers Europa and Arabia. A message for further particulars sent from London, and answer received from Newfoundland in two hours and a half.

8. August 21: Daniel G. Tieman, Mayor, New York, sends message to the Lord Mayor, Robert Carden. It reaches London at six o'clock on Sunday, August 22, and his lordship replies the following day.

We hear nothing more of the cable till Monday, September 6, when it was reported from the company's offices that no intelligible signals had been received since one o'clock on Friday morning, September 3.

Not to encroach too much on your space, I have omitted the latter messages themselves. They all be found in the Illustrated London News August 14, 21, and 28. PHILIP S. KIRK

UNCOMMON RHYMES.

(3rd S. viii. 320.)

For a rhyme to chimney, see the Rejected Dresses by H. and J. Smith. The rhyme I adopt is "slim knee." For a rhyme to moon see Thackeray's Novels by eminent Hands, for tale of Phil Fogarty will furnish one; as thus "Search through the works of Thackeray — you'll find rhyme to moon; He tells us of Phil Fogarty, of the 'fighting on mooneth!'"

As to orange, allow me to suggest the following:—

"I gave my darling child a lemon,
That lately grew its fragrant stem on;
And next, to give her pleasure more range,
I offered her a juicy orange,
And nuts—she cracked them in the door-hinge!"

Even for "porringer" I fancy another rhyme may be found besides "Orange her," though it is not quite so good a one. I suggest—

"When nations doubt our pow'r to fight,
We smile at ev'ry foreign jeer;
And with untroubled appetite,
Still empty plate and porringer."

The only rhymes to step appear to be demi-rep (Bon Gaultier Ballads), or the forms slep', kep', &c.; of which slep' is used by Thackeray.

For a rhyme to babe, we have astrolabe and Tippoo Saib (Thackeray).

For a rhyme to Mephistopheles, we have coffee-les, as in the Ingoldsby Legends, which is a very mine of queer rhymes.

As to pilgrim, we might write—

"And many an ill, grim,
And travel-worn pilgrim, &c."

The subject is curious and almost inexhaustible.

WALTER W. SKRAT.

P.S. I had forgotten the word window. By the help of an interjection, we may form several rhymes to it; as skinned, O! sinned, O! Scinde, O! &c. But it may be accomplished otherwise, after a fashion, as thus:—

"Bold Robin Hood, that archer good,
Shot down fat buck and this doe;
Rough storms withstood i' the thick greenwood,
Nor cared for door or window."

Every word, in short, has some one which rhymes to it more or less perfectly. Even frontier, may, at a pinch, be paired off with jauntier.

The last of the examples given by W. C. B. I have heard differently worded, thus:—

"Our noble king a daughter had,
Too fine to lick a porringer;
He sought her out a noble lad,
And gave the Prince of Orange her."

I am reminded by this of an analogous composition, which I heard thus related many years ago: King Charles II. defied the witty, but profligate Earl of Rochester, to make a rhyme to the word Lisbon; when the favourite produced the following impromptu:—

"Here's a health to Kate,
Our master's mate,
Of the royal house of Lisbon;
But the devil take Hyde,
And the bishop beside,
That would make her bone his bone."

F. C. H.

The impossibility of finding an English word rhyming with "month" appeared to have been decided by the discussion in The Athenaeum. "Grunth," if correctly pronounced, would probably not meet the difficulty, and besides it is inadmissible as being a purely Indian word. The lisping correspondent of The Athenaeum, who suggested "dunth," made at least a bold attempt. Two other words, "step" and "Orange," can be matched with no similar sounds in English. If proper names, however, were permitted, one might say that—

In Essex there is many a Gepp,
Would fit you with a rhyme to step;
In Sussex, too, the name of Gorringe
Comes pretty near the sound of orange.

JAYDIE.

WASHINGTON NOT AN INFIDEL (3rd S. viii. 336.) With reference to what MR. MATTHEW COOKE says, I beg to say that I did not adduce Dr. Miller as an authority: nor do I say that he is not. All I said was, that he had examined the question, and that if your former correspondent asked him, no doubt he would furnish him with the evidence on which he had gone, valeat quantum.

LYTTELTON.

NAPOLEON BUONAPARTE AND THE NUMBER 666 (3rd S. viii. 319, &c.)—In the various notices of this curious subject in "N. & Q.," no mention has been made of a pamphlet of which I have a copy. It is called Proofs of Holy Writ, or England's Triumph over Buonaparte and his Armada; foretold in express Terms Seventeen hundred Years ago, and dated "London, Jan. 1, 1804" (pp. 19). In this it is shown, first, Λαρεῶν (Latinus, or man of Latium), Italian, i. e. Buonaparte: the separate letters, being taken as Greek numerals, is equal to 666. And, secondly, that the name of the "First Consul" being spelt Bonaparte, is also equal to 666, according to the same method of interpretation.

Affixed to this pamphlet are the following extracts, cut out of some other work on the subject:—

"The Church of Rome is generally honoured as the beast; thus, number 666, the number of the beast, says the Beehive of the Romish Church. 1580, 'doe agree very well in one with this Greeke worde, ΕΚΚΛΗΣΙΑ ΙΤΑΛΙΚΑ (Ecclesia Italica), which is to say, the Italian or Romish Church: for each letter in the Greeke makes one number—this maketh together 666. Apoc. xiii. 17.'"

"The Rev. Mr. Faber also prophesied the downfall of Buonaparte, the beast, from the thirteenth chapter of Revelations. These are the words:—'The beast rising out of the sea (Corsica), with 7 heads and 10 horns, and upon his head 10 horns and 10 crowns, is Buonaparte: this beast was to have reigned 42 months as Emperor of France. Buonaparte has nearly reigned this exact number of months; the dragon, i. e. the devil, gave him the power and great authority; and he cannot all, both great and small, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, i. e. Buonaparte has caused all persons to submit to his tyranny. The beast's number was six hundred, three score and six, which exactly corresponds with the numerical calculation of all the letters in Buonaparte's name, reckoning the letters according to the number affixed to each before the introduction of the figures: thus, N 40, A 1, P 60, O 50, L 20, E 5, A 1, N 40, the letters in his Christian name; B 2, U 110, O 50, N 40, A 1, P 60, A 1, R 80, T 100, E 5, being the letters of his surname, amounting altogether to 666—the identical number of the beast, i. e. Buonaparte. This divine adds: "That without the smallest doubt, as the truth of Revelation can never be questioned, so it follows that the Spanish patriots are destined to put an end to the reign of this beast Buonaparte." Well may Swift observe, that such commentators on the Revelations turn out prophets without understanding a syllable of the text."

And I have added the following from booksellers' Catalogues:—

"Wealth: the Name and Number of the Beast (666)."
18mo. (Bagster.)

"Lateinos . . . : being none other than the Pope of Rome," by Reginald Rabett. 8vo. 1835.

J. F. S.

QUOTATIONS (3rd S. viii. 332, 352).—In Sir W. Hamilton's Introductory Lecture on Astronomy, 1832, this verse—

"Darting our being through earth, sea, and air."— is expressly quoted as Shakspeare's; but, since I made this query, I have discovered that the quotation is from the conclusion of Coleridge's "France; an Ode":—

"Yes, while I stood and gazed, my temples bare,
And shot my being through earth, sea, and air,
Possessing all things with intensest love,
O Liberty! my spirit felt thee there."

In my query, "one" was a misprint for "our."
Q. Q.

The lines—

"Our acts our angels are, or good or ill;
The fatal shadows that walk by us still."— are by John Fletcher. H. FISHWICK.

"And lonely want retires to die."

This line, with one slight variation, occurs in Dr. (Samuel) Johnson's pathetic elegy "on the death of Mr. Robert Levett, a practiser in physick":—

"In mi-ry's darkest cavern known,
His useful care was ever nigh,
Where hopeless anguish poured his groan,
And lonely want retired to die."

SCHIN.

"Each in his hidden sphere of bliss and woe,
Our hermit spirits dwell,"—

is in the Christian Year, Twenty-fourth Sunday after Trinity. LYTTLETON.

"And while he was the Trojan eyeing," &c.

These lines are from Homer Travestie, book vii., published 1797. LOUISA JULIA NORMAN.

The epitaph, "Immutata peri," &c., about which

MR. KENNEDY makes inquiry, evidently owes its origin to Mart. I. xxxvii. 5, 6:—

"Diceret, infernas et qui prior iacet ad umbras, Vive tuo frater tempore, vive meo."

J. W. M.

Painswick.

THE CHILDREN OF EDWARD III. (3rd S. viii. 298).—The true number appears to be thirteen, if not fourteen. Three sons died in infancy. My own investigations on this subject compared with the list given by Mrs. Green in her Princesses of England, vol. iii. p. 164, lead to the conclusions embodied in the following list:—

1. Edward, born at Woodstock, June 15, 1330; died at Westminster Palace, June 8, 1376; buried at Canterbury.

2. Isabel, born at Woodstock, June 16, 1332; died in England, April, 1379; buried in the Grey Friars' church, London.

3. Joan, born at the Tower of London, 1333; died at Loremo, September 2, 1348; buried at Bayonne [?].

4. William, born at Windsor, June, 1334; died 1335-6; buried at Westminster.

5. William, born at Hatfield, in winter, 1336; died infant; buried at York.

6. Lionel, born at Antwerp, Nov. 29, 1338; died at Alba, Italy, Sept. 1368; buried, first at Pavia, afterwards at Clare, Suffolk.

7. John, born at Ghent, in the winter of 1339-40 (Tyler and Holinshed), or in June, 1340 (Strickland and Green); died at Ely Place, London, Christmas, 1398; buried in St. Paul's Cathedral, London.

8. Edmund, born at King's Langley, June 5, 1341; died 1402; buried at Langley.

9. Blanche, born in the Tower, 1342; died at the same time and place; buried at Westminster.

10. Mary, born at Waltham, Oct. 10, 1344; died 1361; buried at Abingdon.

11. Margaret, born at Windsor, July 20, 1346; died 1361; buried at Abingdon.

12. Thomas, born at Windsor, 1348; died infant.

13. Thomas, born at Woodstock, Jan. 7, 1354; died at Calais, Sept. 8, 1397; buried at Westminster.

I know not whether we should add a fourteenth for the Paschal Issue Roll for 17 Edward III. records the expenses for the queen's uprising in April, 1343. It is possible that this may refer to the birth of the Princess Blanche, but it seems doubtful whether that can be the case. The place indicated is the Tower.

The elder Thomas, who died an infant, appears to have been almost entirely overlooked by genealogists. My authority for including him is Mrs. Green's list, quoted above. I hope to be able to render this list more perfect when I have leisure to examine the Issue Rolls for that period.

HERMENTRUDE.

FOREIGN TERRITORIAL DIVISIONS (3rd S. viii. 227.)—The following lists, collected from various sources, may afford the desired information:—

The Departments of the first French Empire were 86 in number, including Corsica, and were the following:—

Ain, Aisne, Allier, Alpes (Basses), Alpes (Hautes), Ardèche, Ardennes, Ariège, Aube, Aude, Aveyron, Bouches du Rhône, Calvados, Cantal, Charente, Charente (Inférieure), Cher, Corrèze, Corsica, Côte d'Or, Côtes du Nord, Creuse, Dordogne, Doubs, Drome, Eure, Eure et Loire, Finistère, Gard, Garonne (Haute), Gers, Gironde, Herault, Ile et Villaine, Indre, Indre et Loire, Isère, Jura, Landes, Loire, Loire (Haute), Loire Inférieure, Loiret, Loir et Cher, Lot, Lot-et-Garonne, Lozère, Maine-et-Loire, Marche, Marne, Marne (Haute), Mayenne, Meurthe, Meuse, Morbihan, Moselle, Nièvre, Nord, Oise, Orne, Pas de Calais, Pui de Dome, Pyrénées (Basses), Pyrénées (Hautes), Rhin (Haut), Rhin (Bas), Rhône, Saône (Haute), Saône et Loire, Sarthe, Seine, Seine et Marne, Seine et Oise, Seine (Inférieure), Sevres (Deux), Somme, Tarn, Tarn et Garonne, Var, Vaucluse, Vendée, Vienne, Vienne (Haute), Vosges, Yonne.

The Belgian Departments were the thirteen following:—

Deux Nethes, Escaut, Forêts, Jemappes, La Dyle, La Lys, La Roër, La Sarre, Meuse (Inférieure), Mont Tonnerre, Ourthe, Rhin et Moselle, Sambre et Meuse.

The Departments of the Batavian Republic were ten in number, and as follows:—

Brabant, Frise, Frise (Est), Frise (Ouest), Groningue, Gueldre, Hollande, Overijssel, Utrecht, Zelande.

Switzerland was divided into nineteen Departments, named as follows:—

Appenzel, Argovie, Basle, Berne, Fribourg, Glaris, Grisons, Lucerne, S. Gall, Soleure, Schaffhouse, Schweitz, Tessin, Thurgovie, Unterwald, Uri, Vaud, Zug, Zurich.

In Savoy and Piedmont, were these eight Departments:—

Alpes Maritimes, Gênes, La Doire, La Stura, La Sesia, Marengo, Montenotte, Po. F. C. H.

Your correspondent M. J. B. will find "the names of all the departments which collectively formed the first French Empire, at the period of its greatest extent," at p. 353 of the Almanach Impérial for 1812. M. J. B.'s second query will, I think, be answered by consulting Houzès's "Atlas Universel Historique et Géographique, donnant les différentes divisions et modifications territoriales des diverses nations aux principales époques de leur histoire," etc. 4to. Paris, 1854.

J. MACRAY.

Oxford.

BIBLICAL VERSIFICATION IN ENGLISH (3rd S. viii. 201.)—When a schoolboy in Edinburgh, nearly forty years ago, I remember being told of a metrical version of the Old Testament as extant in the Advocates' Library, one distich of which I remember well,—

"And Jacob made for his son Josey
A little coat to keep him cosey."

There can be no difficulty in ascertaining the existence of such a volume. J. Bk.

AUTOGRAPHS IN BOOKS (3rd S. viii. 202, 284.) As an addition to this very interesting catalogue, the following may not be unacceptable. I possess a copy of Dr. Hurd's Select Works of Mr. A. Cowley, in two volumes, 1772. On the page preceding the titlepage of the first volume is this inscription:—"E Libris Gul. Cole ex Donis hon: Viri Hor. Walpole apud Strawberry Hill, Apr. 18, 1773. Dr. Hurd sent this Copy as a Present to Mr. Walpole, who before had purchased it: so he gave it to me." The corresponding page of the second volume bears a memorandum to the same effect, and nearly in the same words. Between the Latin and the English is Walpole's bookplate, with the motto "Fari quæ sentiat" above, and the name, "Mr. Horatio Walpole," below. These entries I apprehend to be of the handwriting of William Cole, the antiquary, who was the college companion of Walpole, and with whom he visited France in 1765. Of this work Dr. Johnson once expressed his disapprobation, as it was a mutilated edition; but about two years afterwards, referring to his former opinion of it, and the propriety of Dr. Hurd's publishing it, he said,—"Upon better consideration, I think there is no impropriety in a man's publishing as much as he chooses of any author, if he does not put the rest out of the way." W. C. B.

ORKNEY AND ZETLAND (3rd S. viii. 290.)—In reply to the query of A. O. V. P. I have to inform him that the Deeds and Acts relative to Orkney, were privately printed in 1840, under the editorial care of James Allan Maconochie, advocate, who was for many years sheriff of the county. The Acts formed a part of the second volume of the Maitland Club Miscellany, but a few copies were printed separately for presents. There was also printed by him another tract, entitled Rental of the Provestrie of Orkney, 1684, in quarto. They are each complete of themselves. T. G. S.

Edinburgh.

BAROMETRIC LEECHES (3rd S. viii. 249.)—Most of the readers of "N. & Q." have seen Cowper's report in a letter to Lady Heaketh (Life and Works, by Southey, vi. 83), of "a leech in a bottle" that was "worth all the barometers in the world;" and many have read in Jenner's Lives of British Physicians, p. 261, that—

"The leech, disturbed, is newly risen Quite to the summit of his prison."

But much more definite information on the subject may be found in the Pharmaceutical Journal for August, 1849. In Dr. Merryweather's "Essay on the Tempest Prognosticator, 1851," there is a drawing and description of a very ingenious and beautiful apparatus contrived to enable the leech, in rising to "the summit of his prison," to announce his arrival by ringing a bell. It was placed in the Great Exhibition of 1851. See Catalogue, p. 66, No. 151. "Tempest Prognosticator, for the Protection of Life and Property." D.

BIOGRAPHICAL QUERIES (3rd S. viii. 287.)—George Frederick Meinhard was a Lutheran theologian, born April 5, 1651, at Ohrdruff, in the county of Hohenlohe; was educated at Jena and Wittenberg, at which latter place he took the degree of Doctor Theologiae in 1683. He died April 10, 1718. (Jöcher, Allg. Gelehrt. Lexicon.)

John Frederick Mayer, a Lutheran theologian, and highly esteemed preacher, whom not many of his time equalled in eloquence, was son of John Ulrich Mayer, and was born at Leipzig Dec. 6, 1650. At the age of seventeen he graduated Master of Philosophy at the University of his native city, and afterwards studied a year at Strasburg. He was made Licentiate of Theology at Leipzig, 1673, Doctor in 1674, and in 1684 Professor of Divinity in the University of Wittenberg. He died March 30, 1712. (Jöcher.)

Zachariah Benjamin Pocarus was Master of Philosophy, and pastor at Berg-Sultz, in Thuringia, and lived about 1677. (Jöcher.)

David Mill, a German Protestant theologian and orientalist, Professor of Theology and of Oriental Languages at Utrecht; born at Königsberg, April 13, 1692; died at Utrecht, May 22, 1756. (Nouvelle Biographie Générale.)

John Henry Mains, a philologist, son of a father of the same name, born at Durlach, March 11, 1688; died unmarried June 13, 1732, and bequeathed his valuable library, with a cabinet of coins to the University of Giessen. (Jöcher.)

Dublin.

ADVERS.

ERASMUS "DE CONTEMPTU MUNDI," 1533 (3rd S. viii. 248.)—MR. HAZLITT points out what he rightly considers an error in the ascription of the English translation to this book, by Mrs. Wood, to Gentian Heruet instead of to Thos. Paynel.

In Herbert's Ames it is distinctly dedicated to "Queen Mary, Dowager of France, daughter and sister unto the Moste Victorious Kynges of Eng-lande and France, by Thomas Paynel the translator."

Both Paynel and Heruet are distinguished for their laudable endeavours to teach the people by bringing into the vulgar tongue, for the benefit of the unlearned, the works of Erasmus and other early writers; and it may probably rectify a mistake of Mrs. Wood, by saying that there was published the same year (1533) also from Berthelet's press, De immensa Dei Misericordia, in which we are informed that—

"This Sermon of the Greatnes of the Mercies of God, made by moste famous Doctour Mayster Erasmus Rotodamus, was translated oute of latine into englyshe, at the requeste of the moste honourable and Vertuous lady Margaret, Countesse of Salisburie by Gentian Heruet the translator."

It would seem, therefore, more probable that the authoress of Letters of Royal and Illustrious Ladies had quoted the wrong work, as translated at the instigation of the countess by Heruet.

In my wanderings among the booksellers I have picked up both the books alluded to, and although in fine and clean condition, both want a few folios at the beginning, including titles and introductory matter, which I vainly fancied I could have procured at the Museum, and for which the considerate binder had supplied the deficient leaves by the insertion of blank paper admirably matching that on which Berthelet had impressed his beautiful Gothic type. The books were evidently valued by a former proprietor, but both lettered on the back "Paynel," with the date "1553" in defiance of the colophon "M.D.XXXIII." A. G.

NICHOLAS FACCIO: INVENTION OF WATCH JEWELLING (3rd S. viii. 171, 215.)—With your permission I will add a supplement to my note upon the above. In the Journal of the Clock-makers' Company are the following entries:—

"1704, Dec. 11. A Special Court was called upon the occasion of Nicholas Faccio, Peter de Baufre, and Jacob de Baufre, having petitioned the House of Commons for an Act for the sole applying precious and more common stones in clocks and watches, and for the enlarging the term of their patent. Their reasons for such an Act were read, as also reasons of several members of the Court by way of answer; and it was ordered that the Master, Wardens, and Assistants should petition Parliament, and oppose the Bill.

"1705, Jan. 5. The Master reported there had been a constant diligence used in obstructing the Bill in Parliament, brought in on the petition of Nicholas Faccio, Peter de Baufre, and Jacob de Baufre, for the sole applying precious and more common stones in clocks and watches, viz. That the Parliament had been petitioned against the Bill, and that the Petitioners had been heard by Counsel before the Committee on the Bill, who had made such amendments to it that they thought it best to destroy it, and had therefore struck out all parts thereof, save the words 'Be it Enacted,' and reported accordingly. The Master also acquainted the Court, that in the proofs brought against the Bill there was an old watch produced, made by Ignatius Huggeford, that had a stone fixed in the cock and balance work that was of great use to satisfy the Committee; and it was ordered that the Renter Warden do buy the said watch, if he can, to be kept for the members of the Court.

"The same was bought accordingly of Henry Magson for 2l. 10s., he having bought it of Henry Seale, and it was placed in the master's hands."

The watch was exhibited by the company to the Society of Antiquaries of London, June 8, 1848. (Archæologia, xxxiii. 99.)

In the South Kensington Museum is a gold watch in a chased and embossed outer case; the gold dial is also chased. The maker's name is Debauffré, London. The diameter is one inch and three quarters. This watch was purchased at the Bernal sale for 11*l.* 10*s.* A. J. B. Beresford Hope, Esq., has a square green enamelled watch with a painted dial, the maker being Debauffer, London. I assume that both of these watches were made by one of Faccio's co-patentees. You will have observed the distinctions in the orthography of the names above-mentioned.

EDWARD J. WOOD.

5, Charles Square, N.

"TREEN," ETC. (3rd S. viii. 310.)—In Welsh—a sister of the Manx—"Tran" means a division, a hamlet, or tithing of a parish. This is peculiarly the case in South Wales. One of the hamlets of Llantrisant, Glamorganshire, is officially so called.

R. & M.

MARSHALL (3rd S. viii. 190, 258, 312.)—I observe that your correspondent J. A. P. dissents from my statement that the word mareschalus is a Teutonic Latin compound, signifying a shoer of horses. He pronounces it to be Teutonic with a Latin termination only. The word scal may very possibly, as he says, be derived from the Teutonic shah, a servant. I have always hitherto understood it as originating in the Latin word calceus, a shoe; but I will not defend this opinion in the face of the authorities which seem to militate against it; although I think something might be said in its favour, and that it has probability enough to give it at least an air of vraisemblance. Your correspondent is inclined to believe that the Teutonic word mar, a horse, may be derived from the Sanskrit, marut, the wind, which is emblematic of the creature's swiftness. This is a flight of imagination indeed! With about equal reason, surely, we might attempt to extract mar from the Hindostani verb, marna, to strike, inasmuch as it is a prominent characteristic of the animal in question to strike the ground with his resounding hoofs.

"Quadrupedante putrem sonitu quatit ungula campum."

H. A. KENNEDY.

Gay Street, Bath.

THE IMPERIAL EAGLE (3rd S. viii. 291.)—I have been in the Kaiser-Saal at Frankfort, but made no notes. One point, however, I wish to mention, which MR. WOODWARD, perhaps intentionally, touches. He says, "The eagle was, I think, single and uncrowned; and on this point also I should be glad of information." I believe there is no doubt that the eagle with two heads, diademate, and crowned, belongs to the Emperor alone. The eagle single headed, and not diademate, belongs to the designated successor to the empire, the king of the Romans. The eagle on a chief, constantly appearing in coats "rewarded" by the Emperor, is also, as far as my experience and notes serve me, usually single-headed; but not always, as for instance, in the coat of William Knight, Fellow of New College, Apostolic Prothonotary, and afterwards, in 1541, made Bishop of Bath and Wells by Henry VIII. His coat, still in perfect preservation, carved on stone over the entrance doorway of the house built by him at Horton, near Sodbury, in Gloucestershire, and repeated, also in stone, on the mantelpiece of one of the rooms, shows an eagle double-tête dimidiated, in chief, united to a sun in splendour, dimidiated, in base. This coat, slightly differing in detail, is in the Hall at New College, and is blazoned on p. 58, vol. ix., of the Archæological Journal, in a paper on the New College Windows, by the late Mr. Winston. That accomplished writer was deceived, as so often happens to Englishmen, by the strings of the hat which surmounted this shield. He says,—

"It was originally surmounted by a cardinal's hat, of which only the strings remain."

Then, having mentioned the gift of arms by the Emperor Maximilian, and the fact of his being made bishop in 1541, he goes on to say,—

"It is difficult to reconcile the existence of the cardinal's hat with this statement, except on the supposition that it formed part of the original grant of arms."

Knight, the recipient of the imperial augmentation, never was a cardinal; and the hat had nothing to do with the arms. It was merely the prothonotary's hat, which, like the bishop's hat also, is of exactly the same shape as the cardinal's, but differs signally in colour. There is a very good example of a prothonotary's hat in the window No. 2038, in the South Kensington Museum.

D. P.

Stuarts Lodge, Malvern Wells.

SIR JOHN MASON (3rd S. viii. 309.)—MR. TUCKER will find no less than six and twenty references to Sir John Mason's name in the Calendar of State Papers, 1547—1580 (Lemon). The first notice is in 1554, when he was Treasurer of the Chamber under Queen Mary. In 1558 that Queen made him in addition Master of the Ports; the salary for both offices being 240*l.* a year, and 12*d.* a day. He continued to be employed by Queen Elizabeth in various ways till 1568, when his death is noticed on April 23. It would appear also that he was one of the clerks of the parliament.

D. S.

SEALS OF THE EMPEROR OF GERMANY (3rd S. viii. 291.)—MR. J. Bertrand Payne, in a recent tour in Central Europe, catalogued the series of imperial seals to be seen in the Kaiser-Saal at Frankfort-on-the-Main. A set, at his instigation, was purchased by that great seal collector, Dr. Kendrick, of Warrington, and a duplicate set by the Trustees of the British Museum. The courtesy of the former, which is proverbial, would no doubt furnish Mr. Woodward with information, or with casts of any seals he might desire.

PUGS PUGSTILES.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

Epigrams, Ancient and Modern: Humorous, Witty, Satirical, Moral, and Panegyric. Edited by Rev. John Booth, B.A. (Second Thousand.) (Longman.)

If we differed from several of our influential contemporaries when we expressed a very favourable opinion of the first edition of the present Collection of Epigrams, the public have shown by the rapidity with which that edition has been exhausted, that they were on our side. Mr. Booth has altered and improved the collection—made some judicious omissions, and as many judicious additions, so that he may well expect a continuance of that success with which his first attempt was crowned.

Report on the Cheap Wines from France, Italy, Austria, Greece, and Hungary; their Quality, Wholesomeness, and Price, and their Use in Diet and Medicine. With short Notes of a Lecture to Ladies on Wine, &c. By Robert Drutt, Member of the Royal College of Physicians of London, &c. (Renshaw.)

There are thousands of educated men amongst us, who, unable to drink beer and unwilling to drink spirits, would gladly take a little wine, if they could get it pure and good at a reasonable price. This being impossible with our old-fashioned Port and Sherry, Dr. Drutt's volume will be a great boon to this large class of persons. His name and position is a guarantee for the honesty of his reports; and as we can confirm his judgment upon one class of wine—the Austrian wines of M. Schlumberger's growth—we feel confidence in the opinion which he has given of the wines of other countries; those, therefore, who desire to know what will best suit them among the cheap wines now coming into favour, will do wisely to invest a few shillings in Dr. Drutt's Report.

De La Rue's Improved Red Letter Diaries, Calendars, and Memorandum Books for 1866.

We have so often praised, and that most deservedly, the beauty and taste exhibited in the getting up of the MESSRS. DE LA RUE'S YEAR BOOKS, that we may perhaps have given an impression that in those graces lay their chief excellence. This is by no means the case. The amount of available and practical information for daily use, which is judiciously compressed within their moderate dimensions, those only can appreciate who have been, like ourselves, in the daily habit of referring to them—

"Those best can prize them, who have used them most."

The name of Mr. Glaisher is a guarantee for the accuracy of the scientific division of these works; and the miscellaneous tables have obviously been prepared by equally competent hands. Our notice would be incomplete if we passed over unobserved the marvellous Photograph of the Moon by which they are illustrated.

Messrs. Longman & Co. mixes to be of considerable Diary of the Right Hon. W. 1783 to 1809." A new edition of the British Empire," national History of the Realm of the British Empire, and a "Si Fliedner of Kaiserwerth" (Kaiserwerth, it will be a useful attempt yet made in a sisterhood for charitable the same publishers.

Messrs. Sampson Low which, as the result of man interesting subject, is likely to "A History of the Gipsies Language, by Walter Sim introduction, Notes, and a sent, and Future of Gipsy

Notices to

BOOKS AND WANTED

Particulars of price, &c., of the gentleman by whom it is required for that purpose.

CHALICE (JOURN), A DEMONSTRATION WHICH CHURCH WITH PARISHES OF HIS CHURCH, IN ALL TIMES WORLD, 12mo.

Wanted by G. W. Naylor, Esq.

In consequence of the great number waiting for insertion, next week's pages.

A. D. A. The arms, gules, three of the family of Fermanor. Perhaps more information respecting the same.

Anna is not Crooked Staff the print for it?

R. I. The Revolt of Flanders 8vo, 1848, is by Joseph Robinson, 1

J. W. The Dialogue between noticed in "N. & Q." 3rd S. vi. 11

T. H. BULLOCK will find the or fully in our First Series. We see article by Sir Emerson Tennent is

ANNA BROWN. Mr. Rycroft R. G. 8. (Edgmond.) We do

Herrn's College similar to Mr. J. Mr. Sims would no doubt satisfy

Visitations are included in his book G. C. The line—

"Thoughts that breathe from Gray's Progress of Poetry

T. B. We have already had 1 one especially in our 1st S. vii. 567

C. H. (Ripon.) It is impossible the papers. Our impression is the

T. T. DEAN. Queen Square, Queens Anne, in compliment to Anne Square. The statue was no

F. La Philosophie de l'Histoire parolonym. This work is by Vol of Allen's Modern Judaism, 1816.

H. Fawcett. For the origin of sec "N. & Q." 1st S. ix. 196, 384.

G. P. Only one volume was 2 The large paper copies with all the

S. L. For the phrase "Wha 3rd S. i. 171, 278. — See Dry

"Where sold he bargains, whip-st

"NOTES & QUERIES" is reg

CHESE OF ASTHMA BY DR. L. Chester Villas, Clarendon Road

asthma, with tightness of breast almost all kinds of medicine and Loose's Wafers gave me immu T. C. FIELD, 6, Talbot Terrace, stant relief to asthma, consuming the breath, throat, and lungs. 2

box. Sold by all Druggists.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 202.

NOTES:—Mr. Eden's Edition of Bishop Taylor's Works, 383—Lord Grange, 386—The Regimental Kettles of the Janizaries, 387—Knights and Bannerets, 388—Chare Thursday, Id.—Lord Palmerston's Birth-place—Lord Palmerston—Zadkiel's Prophecy on Lord Palmerston—Sir Francis Drake—Consecration of Archbishop Parker—Curious Coincidences—Tennyson, 389.

QUERIES:—Am being, was being, will be being—Earldom of Caithness—Cambridge, Authors of Old Plays—W. Case, Jun.—College of Physicians, Dublin—Davies of the Marsh—Douglas Cause—"The English Rogue"—Fitzgerald Peerage—Horace Guildford—Elizabeth Haliburton—Diva Jana—William King, D.D., Archbishop of Dublin—Morison's "Scottish Poets"—Andrew Murray—Thomas Shadwell, Poet Laureate—Smollett's Characters—Smyth of Longformacus—Passage in Sully's Memoirs(?)—"Tractatus Tres," &c.—Coloured Wax for Seals, 390.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Portrait by Fliccia—"Costrel"—The Commonwealth of Reason: Charles Pigott—Library Catalogues—Ruined Abbeys—Sternhold and Hopkins's Version—Honorificabundinity, 393.

REPLIES:—Εἰκὼν Βασιλέως, 396—Dilamgerbendi, 398—St. Jerom a "Ciceronian," 399—Benedict, Id.—Rephaim: Giants, 400—Brause, Id.—Notes on Fly-Leaves, 401—Batter—Curious Custom in Ireland—Head of Charles I.—Parrots—Ben Jonson—James Cropper—Charteris of Amisfield—"Second to None"—White Hats—The Hog's Prayer—Education of George III.—Human Skin Tanned—Coney-gare—Nolo Episcopari—Rottenburg Family—The Leicester Badge—Meyer's "Letters"—Lord North's "Forest of Varieties"—Attorney-General Noy—James Price, M.D., the last of the Alchemists—Gubbings and Gipsies—Cleaning old Silver Coins—Major Cockburn, &c., 402.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

MR. EDEN'S EDITION OF BISHOP TAYLOR'S WORKS.*

Coleridge observes:—

"I have not seen the late Bishop Heber's edition of Jeremy Taylor's Works; but I have been informed that he did little more than contribute the Life, and that in all else it is a mere London bookseller's job."

This so-called "Heber's edition" is admirably superseded by that of the Rev. C. Eden and the Rev. A. Taylor. I have lately become possessed of a copy of this last, and even a cursory glance at the references to quotations, collations of text, and indexes with which it is amply furnished, produces a strong impression of immense erudition as well as immense industry. One thing however struck me very much, and that is, the extraordinary arrangement, or rather want of arrangement exhibited in this edition. As the short advertisement (for there is no preface) prefixed gives no explanation of this, I venture to make it the subject of a query, especially as MR. EDEN is a correspondent of "N. & Q.," and has lately referred to his edition in this present volume, p. 163.

* "The Whole Works of Bishop Taylor, with a Life of the Author by Bishop Heber. Revised and corrected by the Rev. C. P. Eden, M.A., Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. In Ten Volumes. London, 1851."

In the first place, vol. iii. instead of commencing with the author's Life, begins with the Clerus Domini and other treatises, while the Life comes in at the end of the volume. Then the Clerus Domini is followed by a Dedication of Grammar, and is separated by three pieces from what ought immediately to follow it—viz. the Rules and Ad- vices to the Clergy: these two pieces we should naturally expect to find placed after The Whole Duty of the Clergy, which is given in vol. viii. After the Rules comes a single sermon separated from all the rest of the bishop's sermons. Here, however, I can readily conjecture that this single sermon was not discovered by the editor till the other volumes had been printed; but this is left to conjecture.

In vol. iv. we have the 'Ενιαυτός, or Course of Sermons for the Year: the Supplement to this appears in the middle of vol. viii., following the Worthy Communicant!

In vol. v. is given the Apology for Set Forms of Liturgy, and in vol. viii. we have the Collection of Offices or Forms of Prayer, which ought to follow the former, more especially as the preface to these two pieces is the same, excepting three additional sections prefixed to the Collection of Offices, which are given by themselves in this edition, apart from the rest of the preface, to avoid a long reprint.

In the title-page of vol. iii. (at least in my copy) there is a curious printer's error, which states this edition to be "In Twelve volumes" instead of in ten.

It would have been well if the charges against Bishop Taylor with reference to The Liberty of Prophesying had been more fully entered into and answered, than they are in Bishop Heber's reply to Orme. Coleridge, who heartily admired and loved the good bishop, has yet brought the heaviest charges against him, which he speaks of as proved; and has thrown out painful suspicions which he desires to see disproved. Thus, in speaking of the importance of collating the several editions of Taylor's "most popular" and most remarkable work, "particularly the first, printed before the Restoration, and the last published in Taylor's life-time, and after his promotion to the Episcopal Bench," he says:—

"Indeed I regard this as so nearly concerning Taylor's character as a man, that if I find that it has not been done in Heber's edition, I will, God permitting, do it myself."

Again, he says:—

"O! had this work been published when Charles I., Alp. Laud, whose chaplain Taylor was, and the other Star-Chamber Inquisitors, were sentencing Prynne, Bastwick, Leighton and others, to punishments that have left a brand-mark on the Church of England, the sophistry might have been forgiven for the sake of the motive, which would then have been unquestionable. Or if Jeremy Taylor had not in effect retracted after the Restoration; if he had not, as soon as the Church had gained broadsheet mentioned, which I have not seen noticed elsewhere, an account of which would be very acceptable; it is entitled:

"Toleration Tolerated; or, Bishop Taylor's Opinion concerning Toleration of Religion, with some Observations thereon. Lond." N. d. folio.

In Heber's Life, Taylor's Northern Episcopate is a mere blank, but it is hard to believe that there are no materials extant from which we could get an outline of his actual position, his life and history, while in that "place of torment," the see of Down. The valuable letters supplied by Mr. ENEN from the Carte MSS. throw considerable light on the state of affairs, but make us long for a detailed account of the seven weary years the good bishop spent in his troubled see. However, to speak of what is clearly practicable, the biographer of Taylor ought to give a concise account of the state of ecclesiastical affairs in the north of Ireland during these seven years, as far as our present knowledge goes. Such books as Dr. Reid's valuable History of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland,* as well as the historical writings of churchmen, will supply materials for this purpose. Taylor, though the gentlest and most tolerant of men, was placed in a position of much odium. There was a large colony of Scots in the North of Ireland, and they belonged to the most extreme and violent section of the Covenanting party. They had been supplied at their own earnest request† with ministers from Scotland who were chosen vessels of the Covenant. During the troubles, these ministers took possession of the churches and parishes of the ejected ministers of the Established Church. At the Restoration, the old form of church government and worship, never having been abolished by law in Ireland, was immediately set up; consequently, Bishop Taylor, about three months after his consecration, at his

* Edinburgh and London, 1834—1837. This is a work of research, ability, and historical importance. The learned author had made collections for a third and concluding volume, which unfortunately has never appeared. With an eye to a new edition, it may be observed, that an index to the work is much wanted; and that Dr. Reid had only the mutilated edition of Blair's Memoirs to refer to, when he was preparing his work.

† See The Humble Petition of the most part of the Scottish Nation in the North of Ireland to the General Assembly of Scotland, July 1642, and also that of August 1643, in which they desire "a competent number of Ministers that may erect Christ's Throne of Discipline, and help to bring in others," lest "in the meantime the Prelates and their Faction may step in and invest themselves of their old tyranny over our consciences, who if they once shall see us possessed of our own Inheritance, those Canaanites dare not offer to thrust us out." And in the language of the Canticles, they affectingly declare: "We have chosen you curators to your little young sister that wants breasts; there is none in earth to take her out of your hand." (Records of the Kirk of Scotland, edited by Peterkin, Edinb. 1843, pp. 331, 845-6.) Dr. Reid gives the first Petition entire, but omits the choicest parts of the second.

first Visitation, which he held at Lisburn,* was compelled to declare thirty-six churches vacant, after vainly using every means to conciliate the Scotch ministers in possession. This proceeding is thus recorded by W. Row in his Life of Robert Blair: †—

"April, 1661. In Ireland, one Taylor, made a bishop, did tyrannise over honest ministers, so that he deposed all the Presbyterian ministers in the north of Ireland, the most part whereof were Scotsmen."—P. 384; cf. p. 418.

It certainly was a hard case for the Presbyterians: their ministers were not only deprived of their livings and livelihood, but "debarred from the exercise of their ministry, and forbidden, under heavy penalties, to preach, baptize, or publicly exhort their suffering people." The only excuse for the intolerance of the Government is to be found in the violent and seditious character of the Presbyterians, and in the fact that toleration, in those unhappy times, was not admitted or allowed by any party. Taylor would never have countenanced the proceedings of the Government had he not been firmly convinced that the Presbyterians would neither give nor receive toleration.‡ He retained his bishopric against his own

* See the account of Bishop Taylor's first Visitation, given by Mr. Adair of Cairncastle in his MS. Memoirs, and quoted by Dr. Reid, vol. ii. pp. 344—348.

† "Famous Mr. Blair," or "precious Mr. Blair," as his admirers styled him, was son-in-law to Sir Hugh Montgomery, an Ayrshire laird, who was one of the chief planters of the Scottish Colony in the North of Ireland, and was created Viscount of Ardes by James I. Blair's memoirs are full of curious details respecting the state of ecclesiastical affairs in the diocese of Down. Having been presented to the living of Bangor in 1633, he arrived there from Scotland in time to see and convert his prelate predecessor, that "most naughty man," John Gibson, who was guilty of being Dean of Down. However, "the dying man professed great repentance that ever he was a dean," and made such an edifying end, that "some hearing his speech, and comparing it with his former ways, gave out that it was not he that spake but an angel sent from heaven." Nor less curious is his account of the ingenious, but not very creditable, device by which Bishop Echlin induced him to submit to episcopal ordination. It is to be noted that Stevenson's edition of these Memoirs, first published in 1764, contains but a portion of them, and even that greatly curtailed and abridged. In 1846, the learned Dr. M'Crie for the first time printed the whole MS. of Blair's Autobiography with the Supplement and continuation by Row, and edited it with his usual care and ability. I fear that "famous Mr. Blair" is not likely to take his place among "the Apostles of the Covenant" in the National Portrait Exhibition of 1866, as Dr. M'Crie was "not aware that any portrait of him exists."

‡ Taylor says of them in his University Sermon: "They are not content that you permit them, for they will not permit you, but 'rule over your faith,' and say that their way is not only true, but necessary; and therefore the Truth of God is at stake, and all indifference and moderation is carnal wisdom, and want of zeal for God: nay, more than so, they preach for Toleration whom themselves are under the rod, who when they got the rod into their own hands thought Toleration intolerable."

light on the uses of the immense bowls and vessels of metal, which Herodotus so often describes as having been dedicated to the shrines of Delphi and Delos, and other temples? The Samians gave one of brass to the Temple of Juno (L. iv. c. 153), and at a spot between the Borysthenes and the Hypanis was a cauldron six times as large as that dedicated by Pausanias at the mouth of the Pontus (ib. c. 81.) Another suggestive incident is mentioned by Herodotus. Pausanias, after the battle of Plataea, discovered amongst the baggage-waggons of Mardonius sacks which concealed kettles (λείβηρες) of silver and gold. Were these only the ordinary equipments, which Homer so often describes (λείβηθ' αμφο-νόεσσαν) amongst the paraphernalia of his military heroes? Or did the Persians, in the reign of Xerxes carry the regimental kettles in their van, like the Janizaries of Amurath and Mahomet II.?

J. EMERSON TENNENT.

KNIGHTS AND BANNERETS.

To the volume of Rishanger's Chronicles and Annals, recently edited by Mr. Riley (in the Master of the Rolls' Historical Series), is appended a short glossary, of which the following is an item:—

"BANERETTUS (441): a knight banneret. The knights banneret led their vassals to battle under their own flag; they were an intermediate order between the simple knight and the baron."

The passage in p. 441, to which reference is made, is admitted in a foot-note to be "evidently imperfect." It stands thus:—

"Scoti . . . delituerant in quodam passu fortissimo, ut nos explorarent, et irent de banerettis nostri exercitus, cum sometariis, ut moris est guerræ, ut illos et equos suos salvarent."

It seems to me corrupt as well as imperfect, and I think very doubtful whether it has anything at all to do with knights banneret or banners.

Another term, which is unnoticed in the glossary, "Miles vexillifer," is really used by the chronicler for a banneret: as when he states that, at the battle of Evesham in 1265, twelve bannerets were slain with the Earl of Leicester:—

"Ceciderunt cum eo, in illa pugna, Milites vexilliferi duodecim, videlicet, Henricus filius ejus, Petrus de Monte forti, Hugo de Dispensariis justiciarius Angliæ, Willelmus de Mandevilla, Radulphus Basset, Walterus de Crepingge, Willelmus de Eboraco, Robertus de Tregoz, Thomas de Hostele, Johannes de Bello Campo, Wido de Balliolo, [et] Rogerus de Rowlee; alii quoque minoris gradus in multitudine magna [i. e. with a great number of knights of the lower grade]; scutiferorum et peditum, et maxime Wallensium, numero excessivo."

From not perceiving the reference from the words "alii minoris gradus" back to the "milites vexilliferi," the editor has misprinted this passage, placing a comma after gru magna.

So in p. 21 it is stated Northampton in 1264, the lites Vexilliferos quindecim (1 and moreover about forty and not a few scutiferos, or

In regard to the glossary grade of banneret, given by remarked that, whilst it is senting that many banneret yet it is evident from the battle of Evesham, and on the field of battle were is, that one was a distinct other of chivalry only.

baroniam, and also by knigh were always made by pers were of two grades. A 1 by the accolade, and raise banneret by cutting off t which was thus made to 1 the standard of the sover chief. The distinction of be traced through the rol continually in the chroni able how much it has bee many authors and editors to be most conversant with

On turning to the Index my eye was attracted by more unaccountable misst entry:—

"OPA, Edward I. builds

But the statement of t is, that, during the camp the losses of the royal force that—

"Coactus est Rex intrare he was driven to take refug being said of his building place indicated as "Opa"?

CHARE TH

In Nares's Glossary I find

"Chare Thursday. The Th corrupted, according to the full from Shear Thursday, being shaving, preparatory to East Thursday:—

"Upon Chare Thursday Cl disciples, and bad them eat it, blood."—Shepherd's Kalendar.

"If a man aske why She may say that in holy churche our Lordes super day. It is al Thursday, for in old faders d day shere theyr hedes, and ell theyr hedes, and so make them For on Good Fryday they do but suffre penance in mynde fred his passyon for all mankynde. On Ester even it is time to here theyr service, and after service to make holy daye."

"Then, as Johan Bellet sayth, on Sher Thursday a man sholde do poll his here, and clype his berde, and a preest sholde shave his crowne, so that there shold nothing be between God and hym."—Festival, quoted by Dr. Wordsworth, in Eccles. Biog. vol. i. p. 297."

In my edition of Brand's Popular Antiquities (revised by Sir Henry Ellis), London, 1841, in the chapter headed, "Shere Thursday, also Maundy Thursday," the same derivation is given; and in one of the notes a passage is quoted from the Gentleman's Magazine, in which the writer says:—

"Maundy Thursday, called by Collier Shier Thursday, Cotgrave calls by a word of the same sound and import, Sheere Thursday. Perhaps—for I can only go upon conjecture—as sheer means purus, mundus, it may allude to the washing of the disciples' feet (John xiii. 5, et seq.), and be tantamount to clean. See ver. 10, and Lye's Saxon Dictionary, v. scip. If this does not please, the Saxon scipan, signifies dividere, and the name may come from the distribution of alms upon that day; for which see Archæol. Soc. Antiq. vol. i. p. 7, seq.; Spelman, Gloss. v. Mandatum; and Du Fresne, vol. iv. p. 400. Please to observe too, that on that day they also washed the altars: so that the term in question may allude to that business. See Collier's Eccles. Hist. vol. ii. p. 197."

Now Chare Thursday is the correct expression, and has nothing whatever to do with shearing or sheer, or scipan; and I am quite astonished at Brand's ludicrous derivation of the word, as in one of the chapters immediately preceding that on Shere Thursday; viz. in the chapter on Mid-Lent Sunday, he tells us that the Sunday before Palm Sunday was formerly called Care or Carr Sunday, and gives the correct etymology of the name from the German Char or Kar, without, however, having any idea that Shere is only a corruption of Chare = Char, Care, or Carr.

In Germany, up to the present day, Passion Week is called Charwoche, and Good Friday Charfreitag. But in former times Char was prefixed to every day of Passion Week, and we find Char-montag (Chare Monday) Chardienstag (Chare Tuesday), &c. The origin of Chare Thursday is therefore evident. Char is an old German word, signifying luctus, sollicitudo; Goth. kar, kara; Old Sax. cara; O. H. G. chara; A.-S. cearu, caru, allied to Lat. cara, &c.

The original signification Chare having become obsolete, a word of similar sound was substituted in its place, and hence Shere Thursday. In like manner we have the tavern signs, Goat and Compasses for "God encompasseth us," Bell and Savage for "La Belle Sauvage," Cat and the Fiddle for "Le Chat Intidèle," and many other expressions.

This matter has possibly been satisfactorily cleared up in some more recent work than my edition of Brand; but I presume my explanation of Shere Thursday will be new to many of your readers.

J. C. HAHN, Ph. D.

Heidelberg.

LORD PALMERSTON'S BIRTH-PLACE.—Not having seen any other allusion to the circumstance mentioned below, I send you a cutting from The Queen of Oct. 28, where I have met with it:—

"It is generally said that he was born at Broadlands on the 20th of October, 1784; but this statement has been called in question, so far as the place is concerned, and Dublin has been suggested very confidently. Feeling a little curious, we turned to the Gentleman's Magazine for the proper date, but found no record of the illustrious little stranger's advent. We then turned to the European Magazine, where we read the nobly simple announcement under the head of October, 'Lady Palmerston of a son.' This is every letter they could spare for one whose exit was to be a memorable event in our history. Not quite satisfied, we pushed our inquiries as far as the old Scots Magazine—a serial of good standing at that day. We were startled to read as follows: 'Oct. 20, at Park Street, Westminster, the lady of Lord Viscount Palmerston of a son.' If this is true, Lord Palmerston belongs neither to Hampshire nor to Ireland, but to that Westminster where he was so conspicuous for almost sixty years."

As Park Street is in the parish of St. Margaret's, it might be worth while to institute a search.
B. H. C.

LORD PALMERSTON.—Small and trifling facts (to say nothing of great ones) have often remained unexplained, because they were not inquired into while still fresh in the remembrance of persons acquainted with them. On this ground I offer a personal query about our late Premier. For years past the artists in Punch have made us familiar with the typical Lord Palmerston, often representing him with a flower or sprig in his mouth. What is the authority for this? We are accustomed to see ostlers and hangers-on about stable-yards mumbling a bit of straw or a flower-stalk, but gentlemen do not do so; and surely our late Premier was a gentleman par excellence. Those in the habit of frequently seeing him, can say whether he ever acquired a trick so strange and ungraceful.
J.

ZADKIEL'S PROPHECY ON LORD PALMERSTON.—In Zadkiel's Almanack for the year 1865 (p. 48), there occurs the following paragraph:—

"The Nativity of Lord Palmerston, born 27th October, 1784.—In the month of April, about the seventh day, the evil Saturn will transit the place of the Sun by retrograde motion, which is very threatening for health, and may well denote his resignation or his overthrow. But we find some serious trouble or suffering as early as in December, 1864; and then we find the great eclipse of the Sun on the 19th of October, close on the place of the Sun at his birth. This, if he overcome the earlier evil influence this year, will I expect put an end to his power and endanger his life."

This horoscope and Lord Palmerston's lamented death, the day before the eclipse, present a remarkable coincidence.
G. H. OF S.

SIR FRANCIS DRAKE.—In an old black-letter copy of Lanquet's Chronicle, 1559, is the following MS. note:—

chapters on nine pages), written to give "copy-right"? Who wrote this Fifth Part? Who was the man shadowed by "J. S."?

GEORGE STEPHENS.

Cheapinghaven, Denmark.

FITZGERALD PEERAGE.—Is there a pedigree extant of the extinct family Fitzgerald of Dromana, Lords of Decies? I am aware of the notice of the family in Lodge's Peerage.

KILLONGFORD.

HORACE GUILDFORD.—In 1834, and subsequent years, Mr. Effingham Wilson, of the Royal Exchange, published a periodical entitled The Parterre of Fiction, Poetry, History, and General Literature. This was a constant source of agreeable reading to me in my school days; and having lately become repossessed of four volumes of the work, I can hardly state the satisfaction with which I have re-read tales and stories which interested me so much thirty years ago. One of the writers, Horace Guildford, was very versatile in his contributions. Poetry and fiction were no strangers to his pen. A series of tales, under the general head of "Manorial Archives," are written with much dramatic power, a deep acquaintance with mediæval manners and customs, and freely enriched with quotations from early literature. I offer no critical opinion of their value further than to say, as a boy, they pleased me greatly; and now, after twenty years' connection with the press, their reperusal has the same effect. Perhaps I am at fault, but I cannot call to mind a writer of the name of Horace (Guildford; and should be obliged if any correspondent of "N. & Q." can tell me who and what was Horace Guildford? Was that name his patronymic, or a nom de plume, and where can I see any other productions of his?

MATTHEW COOKE.

ELIZABETH HALIBURTON, youngest daughter of Thomas Haliburton of Newmains, by Mary his wife, daughter of John Haliburton of Merton, born cir. 1640, is left without notice as to her marriage, &c., in Sir W. Scott's Memorials of the Haliburtons. Any information respecting her will greatly oblige. Could she be the Eliz. Haliburton, wife of Geo. Pringle in Trouburne, who died 1685, and is buried at Yetholm?

F. M. S.

229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

DIVA JANA.—Can any reader of "N. & Q." explain the following inscriptions?—

1. "D. Janæ quæ mihi summo rerum discrimine cœlorum Dei beneficentia in cœlo effulsit, centrum quo gloria Dei hominumque felicitas coalescunt.—H. F."

2. "O feminarum flos, siderum decus, gratiæ venustas, vivas! In perpetuum vivas! beneficentiæ veritatisque fonte perenni nuncia digna.

Dum memor ipse mei, dum spiritus hos reget artus
Semper honos nomenque tuum laudesque manebunt.

H. F."

3. "Dive Janæ eodem anno in cœlum translata quo hic liber editus (i. e. 1799), quæ per multos annos pro cœlorum domini deique gloriæ viros pessimos et potestates patuit Nuntia cœlestia.—H."

The above inscriptions a copy of the Oxford (Clonius Rhodius, 1779. T cut out from the fly-leaf the title-page.

The book is through by H. F. on the margins curate scholarship and m haps assist in identifying a verse of Pope's [Ad Psalm xix.,] written on and from corrections in sition of H. F.:—

"Fornix splendescens cœli
Plena, Dei narrat quæ
Artificis famam proclan
Omnibus et terris repet
Usque tuas perhibens q
Obducens terris tenebra
Incipit alma novum tib
Sideris choros noc
Quis fuerit celebrat rati
Hæc tacito gressu circ
Solemnique globum, co
Est divina manus nostr

But the question is, w

WILLIAM KING, D.D.

Can any one supply m scription on the stone (over the remains of A buried in the churchy Dublin (on the north i had directed), May 10 the Dublin Intelligencer is an account of the f erect a monument ove have been done; but i can now be found at Do MORISON'S "SCOTTISH the patronage of the I the well-known printer undertook the serial p the Scottish Poets in li engravings by the first ply a desideratum and t the productions of our the language of the pr number of the little vol seemed singularly inade of "a Complete Sett (brated Scottish Poets, Ferguson and Bruce;" admired duodecimos, n projectors found that ou limit. Can any reader were the entire doings c upon their original prog

I may as well note, that I have James I., 1786; Gawen Douglas, 1787; Douglas and Dunbar, 1788; The Gentle Shepherd, 1788; Ferguson, 2 vols., 1789; Henry's Wallace, 1790; Scottish Ballads, 4 vols., 1790; and find that Thomson, 2 vols., is announced as published that year.

What I ask is,—Was there no Barbour? No Sir D. Lindsay, Montgomerie, or Drummond? No more Ramsay, or any of the other names which will so readily occur to the reader as indispensable in the formation of such a Series; and for which subscriptions are invited, "that posterity may know who were the supporters of so elegant and useful a work"? A. G.

ANDREW MURRAY.—There was published at Hamburgh, duodecimo, 1718, a very learned treatise with this title: Andreae Murray Commentatio de Kinæis, qua varia codicis sacri loca illustrantur.

The dedication is as follows:—

"Viris amplissimis et nobilissimis dulcissima Prussie Civitatum mercatoribus inclitis Dn. Edw. Collins, Regionum, Dn. Jo. Murray, Memela, Dn. Th. Murray, Gedani, Patronis, Parenti et Agnato, omni officio, pietate et amore prosequendis opusculum hoc grati devinctique animi tessera consecrat, vitamque longam et omni modo beatam apprecatur AND. MURRAY."

This disquisition as to the descendants of Cain evinces great research, and much talent on the part of the writer. The name of Murray is peculiar to Scotland; and it is not unlikely that John, the father of the author (the merchant at Memel), was from that country. The expression "dulcissima," as applied to Prussia, is singular enough.

Perhaps some of your numerous correspondents may be able to give some information as to the ancestry of the author. The family "De Moravia" was peculiarly Scottish; and some of the cadets may have—like the Monros, the Bruces, and the Flemings—sought their fortune in foreign lands. Numerous Scotsmen embarked in the service of the Queen of Bohemia. J. M.

THOMAS SHADWELL, POET LAUREATE.—I am engaged in tracing the pedigree of the above, who was the eldest son of John Shadwell, and is said to have been born at Santon, Norfolk, in 1640. He was admitted to the Middle Temple in 1658, and died at Chelsea, 1692.

Can any of your readers supply any of the following particulars concerning him, viz.: Date and place (1) of his baptism, (2) of his marriage, (3) of the probate of his will or the administration grant, and (4) of his wife's death or burial. L. S.

SMOLLETT'S CHARACTERS.—I have somewhere seen, in an old magazine, the names of the originals in Smollett's Roderick Random and Peregrine Pickle; but omitted to make a note of it at the time. Can any of your readers furnish me with these names; and also, with the names of the originals in Smollett's first publication, Androcles and Reproof, two satires, 1746-7?

SMYTH OF LONGFORMACUS.—Any reference print or MS. to the Rev. Robert Smyth, episcopus incumbent of the above parish in Berwickshire from 1684 to 1714, will oblige me. F. M.
229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

PASSAGE IN SULLY'S MEMOIRS(?).—I inquired some time ago (3rd S. iv. 208) where the following passage, often quoted as if from Froissart, to be found: "Les Anglais s'amusement tristement selon l'usage de leur pays." I had in vain looked for it in Froissart's work. W. T. (3rd S. iv. 277) formed me that it occurred in the Memoirs of Sully where he is describing some festivities which took place while he was in London. I never attempted to verify W. T.'s quotation till a few days ago when I searched for it in a copy of the Mémoires de Maximilien de Bethune, Duc de Sully, &c., en ordre avec des remarques par M. L. D. L. D. (à Londres, 1747, 8vo, 8 vols.) The passage is to be found in this edition. Is it an imperium? Will W. T. kindly refer me to the edition he consulted? JAYDE

"TRACTATUS TRES," ETC.—Who was the author of an anonymous 8vo pamphlet, entitled, Tractatus Tres de Locis Quibusdam Difficilioribus Scriptis Sacris, &c., Francofurti, 1839? I have heard ascribed to a late eminent divine of the Independent branch of the United Church, but I know not upon what authority. ABEL

COLOURED WAX FOR SEALS.—To whom is the right of sealing with coloured wax forms confined? Under the title of Barons Von Volckersdorff, Spenser says (Op. Her. p. sp. p. 37) that in 1458 the Emperor Ferdinand granted this family a certain augmentation of their arms "et jus ceræ ruberæ signandi." Again, under the title of Counts and Barons de Volckrah, a similar concession to the Missendorf family is not "Hæc illis areola in scuto quadrifido à Ferdinando I., et jus ceræ ceruleæ utendi, 1525, concessa." JOHN WOODWARD

New Shoreham.

Queries with Answers.

PORTRAIT BY FLICCHIS.—There is, in the picture gallery at Newbattle Abbey, a portrait which I am anxious to affix a name. I shall be obliged to any of your readers who can assist me.

It is a two-thirds length of a somewhat stout man, with a full round brunette face. He has dark eyes, a moustache, and beard about three or four inches long of dark soft hair. He wears a velvet round cap, something like a Scotch bonnet with a white ostrich feather. He has a slash black and white doublet, and over his shoulder a rich black velvet cloak. Round his neck is and to be further imprisoned until such fine be paid, and to find security for his good behavior for two years, himself in 200*l.*, and two sureties in 100*l.* each. (Cobbett's State Trials, xxii. 1019.) After he had been incarcerated for two years, Hodgson printed "His Case," a pamphlet of fourteen pages, and dated "Newgate, Feb. 9, 1796," in which he says, "I am now detained for the fine and the bail, the former of which it is utterly impossible for me to pay, as I am not either worth the money, nor have I any likelihood of being so, at least while my habitation shall be within the stone walls and massive doors of Newgate."

Charles Pigott, commonly called Louse Pigott, was the author of The Jockey Club; he died on June 27, 1794, and was buried in the family vault at Chetwynd Aston, Salop. Some notices of him may be found in "N. & Q." 2nd S. ix. 462; 3rd S. iii. 122.]

LIBRARY CATALOGUES.—I shall be much obliged for references to any books, pamphlets, or articles in periodicals, treating on the subject of making Catalogues of libraries. The works I have already seen are:—

"Horne's Introduction to Bibliography: Outlines for the Classification of a Library submitted to the Trustees of the British Museum." 4to. 1825.

Also, by Mr. Horne:—

"The Art of Making Catalogues of Libraries, by a Reader at the British Museum." London, 1856. 8vo, pp. 60.

And—

"Exposé succinct d'un Nouveau Système d'organisation des Bibliothèques publiques, par un Bibliothécaire." Montpellier, 1845.

I may add, that I shall be happy to give a fair price for a copy of any of the three last-mentioned treatises. I should be glad, too, to learn who were the authors of the last two works? G. W.

Croydon.

[Although Bibliography may now rank as a science, we are still without any settled canon for the compilation of a Catalogue of our public libraries—one that will enable the student to find with ease and certainty the book of which he is in want. A library without an available Catalogue is like an unopened mine: the wealth is there, but it cannot be reached. Perhaps the most complete list of authors who have treated on the various methods for making Catalogues of Libraries, will be found in Meyer's Conversations-Lexicon, art. "Bibliothekswissenschaft." There is also a valuable article on Library Catalogues in the Quarterly Review, vol. lxxii. pp. 1—25; and a series of papers on the same subject in the Athenæum of 1848, pp. 1264, 1298, 1329; and in that of 1849, pp. 92, 116, 141, 169, 196, 224, 279, 489, 761, 878. Consult also Edwards's Memoirs of Libraries, 2 vols. 8vo, 1859, Book III., "Classification and Catalogues." The celebrated Pierre François Le Courayer, author of A Dissertation on the Validity of the Ordinations of the English Church, wrote "A Letter to M. l'Abbé Gerardin concerning a new project of a Library Catalogue." It is dated 1712, in folio, consisting of eight pages in double columns. The Art of Making Catalogues of Libraries, 8vo, 1856, is by A. Crestadoro, Ph. D., the Editor of the Catalogue of the Manchester Free Library, royal 8vo, 1864.]

RUINED ABBEYS.—Where can I find the best and fullest accounts of the now "ruined abbeys and monasteries" in this country, especially as regards those on the Thames, such as Bisham Abbey, Burnham Abbey, Medmenham, &c., &c.?

A CONSTANT READER.

[Bisham Abbey. No remains of the conventual buildings are now extant, except a doorway or entrance to the seat which goes by the name of Bisham Abbey. Dugdale's Monasticon, ed. 1830, vl. 527; Beauties of England and Wales, with plate, i. 192; Grose's Antiquities of England, with plate, vol. i.

Burnham Abbey is now a mere ruin, and only preserves, among its remains, some door cases and window frames of the original building, which, having been cut out of soft chalk, the mouldings remain uninjured by the atmosphere. All that can be traced of the rest of the building, formed apparently part of the monks' lodgings. This is situated about one mile distant from Burnham, a little southward of the Bath road. The principal part of the cloister and chapel, supposed to have been destroyed soon after the dissolution of religious houses, are no longer to be traced. Lipscomb's Bucks, iii. 206; Willis's History of Abbeys, ii. 15; Grose's Antiquities, with two plates, vol. i., and Buck's Antiquities of Castles, &c., vol. i. pl. 8, for a west view.

Of Medmenham Abbey, a very small portion of the conventual buildings remains. During the last century a club of wits and humorists, under the assumed name of the Monks of St. Francis, converted its ruins into a convivial retreat. For particulars of the old abbey, consult Langley's History of Deaneborough, 4to, 1797, pp. 349—344; Lipscomb's Bucks, iii. 614; Willis's Mitred Abbeys, ii. 29; Beauties of England and Wales, with plate, i. 375; and Grose's Antiquities, with plate, vol. i.]

STERNHOLD AND HOPKINS'S VERSION.—I have lately come across a very old Prayer-Book; printed in the year 1715, by a John Baskett. It contains a great many quaint engravings; one of which is the Gunpowder Plot, with the eye of God looking down upon Guy Fawkes as he is approaching the Houses of Parliament with his lantern. At the end of the book, the "Te Deum," "Magnificat," "Nunc dimittis," "Ten Commandments," and "Athanasian Creed," are put into verse. My query is, by whom were these versified?

T. T. DYER.

[These divine poetical pieces are by William Whittingham, "the unworthy puritanical Dean of Durham," notorious for having destroyed or removed many beautiful and harmless monuments of ancient art in his cathedral. To a man, who had so highly spiritualised his religion, conceptions, as to be convinced, like some modern fanatics, that a field, a street, or a barn, were fully sufficient for all the operations of christian worship, the venerable structures raised by the magnificent piety of our ancestors could convey no ideas of solemnity, and had no other charms than their ample endowments. Heylin says, that from vicinity of situation, he was enabled to lend considerable assistance to his friend Knox in the introduction of the presbyterian hierarchy into Scotland. Beside these hymns he translated sixteen of the psalms in Sternhold and Hopkins's version, all which bear his initials. He died in 1579. Wood's Athenæ (Bliss), i. 194, and Warton's History of English Poetry, iii. 147, ed. 1840.]

HONORIFICABILITUDINITY.—Can you inform me in what dictionary this word is to be found exclusively of Bailey's published in 1773, and Maunder's, 1840? and by so doing oblige THOS. WRIGHT.

London Docks.

[This word will be found in Blount's Glossographia, 1656; Coles's English Dictionary, 1685; and in Ash's Dictionary, 1785.]

Replies.

ΕΙΚΩΝ ΒΑΣΙΛΙΚΗ.

(3rd S. v. 484.)

I have allowed Mr. W. LEE's communication to remain so long unnoticed because, though the question is one about which I have long taken the greatest interest, I have until very lately been unable to meet with a copy of Dr. Wordsworth's reply to the objections to the arguments of his Who wrote Εικὼν Βασιλική? and, until I had seen this, I felt insecure in making any remarks on the subject. I am very glad that a query of mine once more revived the Icon in the pages of "N. & Q." because I think a step has been gained by Mr. LEE's communication, giving prominence to the fact, that the word "feral" occurs in editions published so lately as 1685. Mr. Hallam's argument was that, immediately on the publication of the book, the public noticed, or it occurred to Gauden that the public would notice, the coincidence of the use of this word in the Icon, and in his own writings, and that he altered it to escape the comparison. Mr. Hallam was the first who made the assertion (though the coincidence of the word, and of the rest of the sentence in which it occurs had been pointed out before), for, finding that the word does not occur in some editions, he used this fact with his usual haste to grasp any weapon against the royal party. Though the theory was exposed to serious difficulties, and it is not asserted by any one that Gauden superintended the printing of any other than the first edition (Mrs. Gauden says he was hiding for his life), yet there is no doubt the assertion was a telling one; for was perhaps of small if cowardice and conscious been most suspicious. I fancy that Mr. LEE was not consciously at conjecture falls to the ground.

Dr. Wordsworth expects that the truth (on which one day be made clear. fidence. Immense labor internal and circumstantial character, probability, & dence which will always will is opposed to the unless some fortunate discovery fear that every one will take that side to which his predilections lead him, and question will still be as is at present. One thin bared, there can be no as Gauden's claim is that I can be shown that the king part of it (as William opposed the king, said I did), the opponent's case has been acknowledged of the king's claim, that that any papers forming were in the possession time when Gauden says copy, there would be a tion. I venture to ask this end.

Where are the original found at Naseby?

The king's case states as far as then written among the king's papers Major Huntington; but one complete copy only no loose leaves, rough relating to the same subject found after the battle public depositories, some still be found.

Do any of the Herber the books and papers of distinctly states that as the Icon in the king's original

This MS. would not be others, yet Mr. Hallam far to establish the royal

It is a curious fact that publican government of the Icon (as described self), was not that the MS. from a friend and affirms, but that he had do with it, and could have had nothing, having been so closely watched. We are let into many more secrets of what was passing than were known even to the chief actors of the time, and among them into this one—that, while on the one hand the king was so closely watched and guarded from without, that it would have been, and was, a very difficult thing to convey anything (book or anything else) to him; yet he had so warm a friend in Sir Thomas Herbert, and in others set about him by the usurping government, that he had ample opportunities for writing in his room, in which Sir Thomas says he was never disturbed, and the instrument of the government, on whom they trusted to prevent the king from having any opportunities of writing the Icôn, is one of the principal witnesses that he did write it. It is further to be remarked that, whereas Mrs. Gauden asserts that the government knew the book was not the king's, and were even in possession of the MS. in Gauden's own handwriting, Milton, writing against the book by the order of, and with every assistance from, the government, says nothing of this, takes it for granted that most of the book is the king's, and only hints at some suspicions and gossip to throw discredit on the work, while he shows over and over again how consistent the book is with the king's known character and studies.

A correspondent has asked what has been written on the internal evidence? He will perhaps be interested in the following passage, which I confess convinces me that the king was writing the book at Holdenby:—

"What they call obstinacy," says the King in the twenty-third chapter, "I know God accounts honest constancy; from which reason and religion, as well as honour, forbid me to recede.

"It is evident now, that it was not evil counsellors with me, but a good conscience in me, which hath been fought against: nor did they ever intend to bring me to my Parliament, till they had brought my mind to their obedience."

Now in the "Clarendon Papers" is the following, sent from Holdenby for the information of Secretary Nicholas and Sir Edward Hyde:—

"March $\frac{16}{25}$, 1649. The King perseveres most patiently and magnanimously in his principles, and lately worsted Sir James Harington in his own argument. The Earl of Pembroke and Lord Montague, and other of the Commissioners, blame Harington's rashness in saying, it was not the evil counsellors, but his Majesty's obdurateness the parliament contended against." (Vide Wordsworth, Who wrote Eikôn Basilikê? pp. 357-8.)

If any further inquiry is to be made in this direction (the internal evidence, which I should not advise), I think something might be made of a comparison of the book, with a characteristic, which I think was one of the leading ones in the king's nature, that of regard to decorum. This ruling principle, which has been well touched upon by Sir Walter Scott in his Fortunes of Nigel, and which exposed him so often to the imputation of hypocrisy (as in Cromwell's reported speech on the Icôn), which led him once to refuse to escape, lest he should be discovered and exposed to indignity, and which finally influenced him on the scaffold, would I think be found to have influenced him in writing, as I have no doubt he did write, the Icôn. I do not advise this, for I believe that no good will come of a further expenditure of labour and talent on this part of the inquiry. MR. MACKAY (3rd S. vi. 216) would derive great entertainment from reading Dr. Wordsworth's exhaustive treatment of all that has been written on this part of the subject, both for and against the king's claim, but it can scarcely lead to more than entertainment. Each person goes to the inquiry with his own prejudices, as Mr. Hallam did, who contrasts, what he chooses for this occasion to call "the sound taste and practical piety of Charles" with the "puerility" and "senseless cant" which he thinks he finds in the Icôn. And, besides this, I do not believe that we can at this distance of time judge with certainty what any man then living, churchman or puritan, would be likely to do or to write.

There is a remarkable instance of this, which is very germane to the subject, though I do not know that its bearing on the internal evidence on the authorship of the Icôn has been mentioned. In Milton's tract (which seems to me to be chiefly valuable as showing the affection in which the king's memory was held by the mass of the people) he called attention, as is well known, to the fact that the first of the prayers, printed as composed and used by the king immediately before the execution (he says the king put them into Bishop Juxon's hand on the scaffold) is copied nearly verbatim from a prayer in Sir Philip Sydney's Arcadia. With Milton's deductions from this of course I have no sympathy. The prayer is a very beautiful one, as the following extract will show, which has so much of the ring of St. Augustine in it, that I cannot help thinking that Sydney must have been a student of the Confessions:—

"Only this much let me crave of Thee (let my craving, O Lord, be accepted of since it even proceeds from Thee), that by Thy goodness, which is Thyself, Thou wilt suffer some beam of Thy Majesty so to shine in my mind that I who acknowledge it my noblest Title to be Thy Creature, may still in my greatest afflictions depend confidently on Thee." (The words in italics are the king's.)

What I deduce from this fact is this—There never was any doubt expressed, that I know of, that these prayers were really drawn up by the king (except the absurd story, invented some forty years after, that Milton and Bradshaw bribed the printer to insert this particular prayer), and there is every reason to suppose that he wished them to be given to the world; if the king then, at so solemn a moment, in the face of the whole rampant puritan faction, saw nothing to fear or to be ashamed of in so bold an adaptation, what certainty can we have in judging what he would be likely to write in the Icon, or what he would not?

MR. LEE wishes to know the reasons for supposing that the "Embleme" was engraved with the first edition; will he kindly give his reasons for supposing that it was not? and, in conclusion, if he would, with the permission of the Editor, publish in "N. & Q." as complete a list of the editions of the Icon as he can, with any remarks on them which he may think of value, it would be, I think, a very interesting paper, and, not at all impossibly might bring to light some new fact.

J. HENRY SHORTHOUSE.

Edgbaston.

DILAMGERBENDI.

(3rd S. viii. 340.)

Many years have elapsed since I travelled from Ringwood to Southampton by the turnpike road through the New Forest; but I well remember a comfortable-looking house, situated on the elevated table-land about two miles from the former town, which commanded an extensive prospect, including the Isle of Wight and Isle of Purbeck, and which its clerical owner had christened "Dilamgerbendi Villa." The name was a puzzle to most people, I believe: it certainly was to me; though I heard it said that it had some occult signification to the Isle of Wight. Perhaps that gentleman might be found to throw light on the query of W. S. J.

In the mean time, may I be allowed to ask your correspondent on what authority he makes the statement that the Hampshire coast opposite the island, and the Isle of Purbeck, were occupied by a tribe of ancient Britons called "Bindocladii"? It is the first time I have met with the fact or the name; and it would, if substantiated, be of some archaeological interest, as we might then reasonably assume that the Station Vindo- or Bindogladia of Antonine's Itinerary, which is to be found some ten or twelve miles to the west from Ringwood on the Via Iceniana, as it traverses the Dorset Downs from Old Sarum to Dorchester, was the principal town or city of the "Bindocladii." With regard to the Romanized name Vindo- or Bindogladia, the prefix is generally considered by etymologists to be derived from the Cymric, Gwyn, or Gwen, fair, white; and the affix from gladh, stream; so that the Celtic town derived its name from the stream that flows below the hill on which it is situated; afterwards called the Win- or Wim-bourne. Bindon Hill may have derived its original appellation from its chalky nature, for its white entrenchments would be visible from a long distance. W. W. S.

In reference to the very interesting inquiry raised by W. S. J., under this heading—no less important an one than concerning a new name for the Isle of Wight—new, indeed, to us moderns, but known, it would seem, to those of yore—may I endeavour to contribute one or two additional considerations?

I have had the pleasure of living for many years on an elevated table-land in the New Forest, from whence the whole of the northern side of the island is on view, from Ryde to the Needles. The house being a newly-built one when I became its tenant, I caused the title to be painted on it—"Dilamgerbendi Villula"; my reason for so doing being to ventilate amongst antiquaries, who might happen to pass along, a matter of no common, but very uncommon recognition in scholarship, and of no easy settlement. The island is known to thousands to have had the name Vecta or Vecti (not Vecto), but not one in a million—not ten, perhaps, in England—have known it by the name Dilamgerbendi. I will venture, then, to assist the inquiry by one or two observations in the present stage of it.

I. It is not made clear in W. S. J.'s article, what is, nevertheless the case, that the same circumstance—the retiring of St. David to be under St. Paulinus, the disciple of St. Germanus—is recorded in one ancient record to have been into Vecta, by other into Dilamgerbendi: the same place, then, receives each of those names.

II. W. S. J. is quite on the right scent in seeking aid from etymological sources. I think, also, it may be capable of proof, or nearly so, that he is in the right track in his remark on the latter part of the name. In Dr. Butler's Atlas of Ancient Geography, in the map "Britannia Antiqua," the range of the Vindo or Bindocladii seems to extend from above Poole harbour and Purbeck, along the whole coast opposite the Isle of Wight. Very nearly within that range, then, we have at the western end of it the hill Bindon, the Bindon Liberty, Bindon Abbey; and there was once, it would seem, Bindon a town. (I find in the Encyclopédie of Diderot and D'Alembert, 1778, "Bindon, ville d'Angleterre dans la Province de Dorset.") We have at the eastern end of the range, Binsted and Binster Island, and inland, in East Hampshire, another Binsted; and on the northern side of the Isle of Wight, opposite the Bindocladii, we have another Binstead. On this part of the matter I would ask, then—

1. Is not this commencement of the names of places with the syllable Bin peculiar to this the Lord look down upon you, and give you peace, and fill you with every spiritual blessing, to the remission of all your sins, and the possession of everlasting life. Amen."

Then during the mass which followed, and just before the "Pax Domini," he pronounced the well-known nuptial benediction, addressed exclusively to the bride.

The same forms were retained in the uses of Sarum, York, and Bangor, though there is a little variation in some parts of the ceremonial, and in the prayers and benedictions following the placing of the ring; and the whole service was much longer than in our present use. The usual nuptial benediction followed before the "Pax Domini," but I wish particularly to call attention to the second portion of it, in which occurs this rubrical direction: "Hic incipit benedictio sacramentalis," followed by these words: "Deus, qui tam excellenti mysterio conjugalem copulam consecrasti, ut Christi et Ecclesie sacramentum praeignares in fœdere nuptiarum, &c."—precisely the same form which the Catholic ritual has at present.

How, after all this, it could be said that the bride did not receive her full blessing on the bridal day, I might well not understand. For, as to the Benedictio thalami, that is directed in the Sarum and the other rites, to be given at the close of the wedding day, "cum sponsus et sponsa ad lectum pervenerint": and as to any other blessings given later to the bride, they were much less solemn and important, in use only in some countries, and not found in any of our English rituals.

F. C. II.

REPHAIM: GIANTS.

(3rd S. viii. 271.)

My thanks to MR. BUCKTON for his remarks on the bed and stature of Og, King of Bashan. No doubt the height of those persons called "giants," both in ancient and modern times, has been greatly exaggerated. But at the same time it is quite evident that the giants mentioned in Holy Scripture, under the different names of—Nephilim, Rephaim, Anakim, Emim, Zamzummim, &c., were of an uncommon or extraordinary stature. Your correspondent, however, makes a remark on the word Rephaim, which I think is calculated to mislead an ordinary reader. He says: "The word Rephaim (rendered giants) means the dead, or the marvellous," &c. In one sense this assertion is correct, for in several parts of the Old Testament the Hebrew word seems to mean either the dead, the state of death, or perhaps in some passages hell itself. (See Proverbs ii. 18; ix. 18; and xxi. 16). But it is certain that the word Rephaim has also another meaning—viz. giants, or a race of giants, of whom we have a notice in Genesis xiv. 5. Besides, Winer, Newman, Buxtorf, Gesenius, &c., in their respective Hebrew Dictionaries, speak of the Rephaim as a race of giants, admitting at the same time that the word may also mean the dead, or the marvellous. This double meaning MR. BUCKTON should have mentioned.

But your correspondent probably had in mind the passage in Job (chap. xxvi. 5), where in the A. V. the word Rephaim is rendered by dead things. Now, with all due deference to MR. BUCKTON's biblical learning, I consider the translation to be incorrect; and many others appear to be of the same opinion. The Douay Version, following the Septuagint and other translations, renders the verse thus: "Behold the giants groan under the waters, and they that dwell with them." Luther translates the verse almost word for word the same as the preceding: "Die Riesen ängsten sich unter den Wassern, und die bey ihnen wohnen."

Again: I do not quite understand what MR. BUCKTON means by these words: "Augustine (St.) was much interested in keeping up the notion of ancient men being of excessively great stature, and seems to have made it a point of religious doctrine," &c. In what way or in what sense was this great and illustrious saint interested in making the matter a point of religious doctrine? What particular passage in his De Civitate Dei bears out MR. BUCKTON's view?

J. DALTON.

Norwich.

P.S. Since the above remarks were written, I have met with a copy of Dr. Samuel Lee's Translation of the Book of Job (London, 1837). On referring to chap. xxvi. 5, I find the learned Professor does not adopt the rendering of the A. V., but leaves the word Rephaim as it stands in the Hebrew. In his commentary, on chap. xxvi., p. 384, appended to the translation, he considers the Rephaim as "a terrific warlike race of people." He will not, however, admit that the word Rephaim means either dead men generally, or the manes of dead men.

BRAOSE.

(3rd S. viii. 86, 197.)

The early parts of the pedigrees of our ancient nobles are unfortunately generally defective. Dugdale, who is considered and constantly quoted as the great authority in these matters, I know by experience, is not at all to be depended upon: his references are often erroneous, and his quotations from chronicles contradictory. It is always necessary to examine the original documents he refers to. I feel some interest in the genealogy of the De Braose family, and shall feel obliged to the compiler of the "brief genealogical table" in p. 197, to state what is the authority for making

William de Braose, who married a daughter of Richard de Clare, the same person that married, 2ndly, Agnes de Moels; and 3rdly, Maria, daughter of William, Lord Ros? According to all the pedigrees that have fallen in my way, the William de Braose who married the daughter of Richard de Clare, whose name was Matilda not Isabella, died in prison about the year 1210 or 1211, and was buried in the Priory of Sele, in Sussex; and by an entry in the Close Roll, 3 Hen. III., 1219, we find his widow, Matilda de Clare, claimed her dower in his lands. The William de Braose who married Mary de Ros was grandson to the former, and died in 1290 or 1291, and was buried at Sele. His eldest son William did homage for his lands in Gower, in the latter year. This could not have been a son of Mary de Ros, for a reason which will presently appear, but of some former wife whose name I have not found.

Now arises another question: What is the authority, other than Dugdale and his copiers, that Maria de Ros, widow of William de Braose, was the same person as the wife of Ralph de Cobham and of Thomas de Brotherton. Notwithstanding the array of names quoted by HERMENTRUDE, I believe she was not. The probability is decidedly against the identity of the ladies. That William de Braose died in 1290 is clear, from the fact before mentioned, that his son William did homage for Gower in 1291. By Mary de Ros he left two sons, Richard and Peter. It is by no means clear which was the eldest; nor for our present purpose, does it much matter. Richard died in 1294 without issue; leaving a widow Alice, and his brother Peter, his heir (Inquisitions 24 & 33 Edw. I.): and Alice died 1301 (Originalia 24 & 29 Edw. I.). Peter did homage for his brother's lands, 1295 (Orig., 23 Edw. I.) Here we may remark that, if William, Lord of Gower, had been a son by Mary de Ros, he would have been the heir of Richard instead of Peter. It is clear, therefore, that Mary was not the first wife of William de Braose. As Richard de Braose, who died in 1294, was a married man, we must suppose that he was at least twenty-two; which would place his birth in 1272; and his mother we cannot suppose to have been less than fifteen or sixteen, which would place her birth in 1247 or thereabouts. Thomas of Brotherton was born in 1300, and his first wife Alice, daughter of Roger Halys, bore him three children: so that he could not have married a second wife before about 1330, when the widow of William de Braose must have attained the mature age of eighty-three, or thereabouts. Truly the statement is ridiculous. But there is positive evidence that she died in 1325 or 1326 (19 Edw. II.); in which year orders were issued to the escheators to seize all the lands of which she died seised in Kent and Wilts, into the king's hands; and it was recited that, in the latter county, she held one-third of the manor of Manyngford Brewis in dower, and the other two-thirds by gift of (her son) Peter; that Thomas de Brewose (son of Peter) was the heir, and the following year Thomas being of full age did fealty, &c. (Orig., 19 & 20 Edw. II.). In all the above records she is invariably styled "Maria que fuit uxor Wiit. de Brewos, meaning his widow, without the slightest intimation that she had ever had another husband. Be that as it may, she was certainly not the wife of Thomas de Brotherton, nor of Ralph de Cobham. The Inquisition post mortem of the Countess, as to her lands in Wales, &c., is dated July 6, 36 Edw. III., 1363; and she is there expressly styled "Maria Comitissa Norfolc, uxor Thome de Brotherton comitis Norfolc, relictæ Rad. de Cobeham militis." Ralph de Cobham died in 1324 or 1325; and as his heir was only one year old, we may assume that the widow was quite a young woman: perhaps not more than twenty at that time, about twenty-five when she married Thomas de Brotherton, and under sixty when she died.

The difficulty HERMENTRUDE feels respecting the heirs is easily explained: John de Cobham was the heir of those lands which the Countess held in dower from her first husband, but the heirs of the lands she held in dower from her second husband were his children by his first wife. His only son having died in infancy, these were Margaret, then wife of Sir Walter Manny, and Alice, who married Sir Edward Montague; but as she died young, her representative was their daughter Johanna, who, although returned as only thirteen years old, was the wife of William Ufford.

T. W.

NOTES ON FLY-LEAVES.

(3rd S. viii. 326.)

The lines quoted by HERMENTRUDE are part of a prophecy attributed to Merlin—

"Merling sayes in his Booke, who will read right;"

and as such, with more or less variation, to suit the times, have been printed in most collections of such rhapsodical rubbish.

It would be ridiculous to inquire, as suggested by HERMENTRUDE, into what is meant by the allusions to arms, persons, and places. One leading rule of the old prophecy writers, was to crowd as many incongruous images as possible into their predictions, trusting to the chapter of accidents, or doctrine of probabilities rather, that some one of them might bear some distant relation to a future event, and thus be accepted as a fulfilled prophecy. It is this simple fact that gives the really startling character to some of the alleged fulfillments of many of the prophecies of Nostradamus.

A curious instance of what I have just mentioned appears in the very lines as quoted by HERMENTRUDE —

"For they shall meet in the morning with moon full bright, Between Seton and the sea sorrow shall be wrought."

The battle of Preston Pans was fought and won by the Young Pretender's Highland forces; General Cope, with the regular army, being signally defeated in the autumn of 1745. The battle occurred very early in the morning, close to the village of Seton, and of course near the sea. Here was a fulfilment of the prophecy at once, not merely the prediction affecting Seton, but the whole prophecy must consequently have alluded to Charles Edward Stuart. He was then the Cock of the North, with Fortune as his friend, and Right was at last to have free entrance. Then Troy [London] might tremble for fear of the dead man [Charles I.]. The towns of Kent shall surrender him their keys; and, with the triumph of the Stuart, Truth shall rise, falsehood be punished, and gentle Justice shall amend all wrongs. I need not specify the many other allusions that the partisan and the prophecy-monger might draw from those lines. When Mr. Cumming interprets the simple English word "bulrushes" to signify "fast-sailing steam-packets," I may be excused for referring to those older interpretations of a very similar and much better kind.

HERMENTRUDE will find a complete version of her prophecy in —

"The Whole Prophecies of Scotland, England, France, Ireland, and Denmark; Prophesied by Thomas Rymer, Marvellous Merling, Beid, Berlington, Waldhave, Eltraine, Banester, and Sybilla. In Latin Verse and Scottish Meeter. Edinburgh, London, 1745."

W. PINKERTON.

It may interest HERMENTRUDE to know that, attached to the MS. of Lancelot of the Laik, lately re-edited by me for the Early English Text Society, there are some fragments, several of them in the same hand writing as Lancelot, and one of which begins, —

"Quhen the koke in the north halows his nest,"

I think this will be found to give a much better text than that which HERMENTRUDE has lighted on. The date of the handwriting is, perhaps, about A.D. 1500, but of this I am not very sure.

WALTER W. SKELAT.

Of the two punning epitaphs upon cobblers contributed to "N. & Q." by MR. W. CAREW HAZLITT and by W. C. B., the first (which MR. HAZLITT found written upon the blank fly-leaf of a copy of Camden's Remains) was printed in 1658 in Wit Restored. See p. 179 of the reprint, "On the Death of Cut. Cobler" —

"Death and an honest cobbler fell at bats," &c.

The second, transcribed by W. C. B. from Elegant Extracts, was probably taken from Wit's Recreations, selected from the finest fancies of Moderne Muses, published in 1640, or from the reprint of that work (p. 238). It is entitled "On a Cobler," and begins —

"Death at a cobbler's door oft made a stand."

W. CHAPPELL.

BATTER (3rd S. viii. 309.) — In Ireland, to be "on the batter," is used to signify, to be on the road, to be for some days in a state of drunkenness or debauch. I have always supposed the word to be the Irish botar, or bothar, which signifies "a road."

J. H. TOWN.

Trinity College, Dublin.

In further confirmation of MR. SALA's opinion as to this expression being a piece of trade slang, I beg to make an observation. In Holderness (and I suppose elsewhere) the sloping side or embankment of a ditch is called the "batter." To use MR. SALA's words, "a man falling away from the right path, and lurching and reeling about in dissipation" would not easily be kept "on the square" by the "batter," but would, in all probability, soon find himself in the "ditch."

W. C. B.

CURIOUS CUSTOM IN IRELAND (3rd S. viii. 325.) Surely the reason of the custom mentioned by S. REDMOND is simple enough. The front of the hat is thus comparatively preserved from the rain, and is again presentable when the shower is over. There cannot be any connection between this and the practice of the celebrated "Paddy from Cork." The reason of his buttoning his coat behind is expressly mentioned.

ELIADARBOB.

HEAD OF CHARLES I. (3rd S. viii. 263, 313.) — Since sending my note on the Head of Charles I. I have come across some lines in Byron's Works, which confirm Sir Henry Hallford's record of the opening the Royal Vault at Windsor, 1813, under the inspection of the Prince Regent: —

"Famed for contemptuous breach of sacred ties,
By headless Charles see heartless Henry lies;
Between them stands another sceptred thing —
It moves, it reigns — in all but name a king:
Charles to his people, Henry to his wife,
In him the double tyrant starts to life:
Justice and Death have mix'd their dust in vain,
Each royal vampire wakes to life again.
Ah, what can tombs avail! since these disgorge
The blood and dust of both to mould a George."

Genus irritabile vatum! That this ultra-cynicism in Byron was simply poetry is clear from his ultra-fulsome "Sonnet to George the Fourth on the Repeal of Lord Edward Fitzgerald's Forfeiture."

QUEEN'S GARDENS.

PARROTS (3rd S. viii. 335.)—In connection with the accomplishments of O'Kelly's parrot I beg to narrate the following extraordinary circumstance, which was related to me eight or nine years ago. A lady giving orders to her servant to prepare the tea, was overheard by the parrot, whose cage hung in the kitchen. Poll thereupon uttered, very slowly, these words, "Polly, put the ket—" Here, feeling drowsy, it suddenly stopped, and went to roost. On the servant coming into the kitchen early the next morning, the first words Poll greeted her with, were the continuation, "—tle on, we'll all have tea." For the truth of this remarkable statement I cannot vouch, nor have I any means of having the tale retold in order to test its veracity.

W. C. B.

BEN JONSON (3rd S. viii. 27.)—In my collection of autographs is one bought in England very many years ago. It is the printed octavo title-leaf of M. Beumler's Latin grammar:—

"Nova Latine Linguae Grammatica. . . . Tiguri Apud Johannem VVolphium. CIO IO VC (1595)."

At the very top is written, in a very firm old hand, "tanquā Explorer." Near the bottom is inscribed, in the same hand: "Sū Ben Jonsonij." This was bought by me some thirty or thirty-five years ago, when no one thought of forging such trifles, especially a name at that time so little talked of. I have always taken it to be in Ben Jonson's own hand, and think so still. It cost me almost nothing; so that the forger (if forged it be) must have worked gratis.

There is a peculiarity in the e, which may be decisive. It is here ε, as in the Greek stave-row.

If genuine, as I have no doubt, he thus writes his own name, "Ben Jonson."

GEORGE STEPHENS.

Cheapinghaven, Denmark.

JAMES CROPPER (3rd S. viii. 331), of the house of Messrs. Cropper and Benson, members of the Society of Friends, at Liverpool, died in the early part of the year 1840. See Gentleman's Magazine for that year.

ΑΛΙΕΙΣ.

CHARTERIS OF AMISFIELD: "SECOND TO NONE" (3rd S. viii. 261.)—The story narrated to J. M. by Gilbert Innes of Stow, is found, with slight variation, in the "Walpoliana" of The Monthly Magazine for May, 1790, p. 301. As the variations, though few, are somewhat important, I transcribe it for insertion if you think it necessary. It is headed:—

"STRANGE TALE.

"Lord  being out of town, his house was left in charge of a female servant. The plate was lodged at his banker's. A letter came to say that his lordship would be in town on such a day, and desiring that the plate might be got ready the evening before. The servant took the letter to my lord's brother, who said there was no doubt of the handwriting. The banker expressed the same certainty, and delivered the plate. The servant being apprehensive of thieves, spoke to their butcher, who lent her a stout dog, which was shut up in the room with the plate. Next morning a man was found dead in the room, his throat being torn out by the dog; and upon examination, it proved to be my lord's brother. The matter was carefully hushed, and a report spread that he had gone abroad."

J. S. G.

Dalkeith.

WHITE HATS (3rd S. v. 499; vi. 16, 57.)—

"In our time, a white hat has been regarded as a political distinction. Henry Hunt, the Radical, almost invariably wore a white hat; but the political significance was thought to be lost by the Hon. Mr. Stuart Wortley, an unshrinking Tory, one evening appearing in the House of Commons wearing a white hat. At the Oxford Commemoration, in 1864, we read of the wearer of a white hat being assailed with a storm of hisses. 'The white hat,' says the reporter, 'seems to act on the undergraduate as the red rag upon the Spanish bull—it absolutely infuriates him; and, until it is removed from sight, he yells and raves as if he were downright mad?' Probably this arose from the recollection of the old radical badge, the white hat; towards which, Oxford University is anything but Alma Mater. In the Poetical Note-book and Epigrammatic Museum, 1824, appeared the following solution:—

'THE WHITE HAT.

On being asked the reason of wearing one.

'You asked me the reason I wear a white hat:
'Tis for lightness I wear it, what think you of that?
So light is its weight that no headache I rue,
So light its expense that it wears me out two;
So light is its colour that it never looks dusty,
So light though I treat it, it never rides rusty;
So light in its fashion, its shape and its air,
So light in its turning, its twisting, and twining,
So light in its beaver, its binding, and lining;
So light to a figure, so light to a letter,
And, if light my excuse, you may light on a better.'"

The Quen, Oct. 7, 1865.

W. I. S. HORTON.

THE HOG'S PRAYER (3rd S. vii. 114, 427, 467.)

On further inquiry nothing can be discovered as to the Hog's prayer, though the Hag's prayer, or that against witches and evil spirits, is well known. I believe "the hieroglyphics on their pig-whips, which they use as a sort of a charm," will be found to be neither more nor less than certain nicks or marks showing the number of the herd, which are counted every now and then lest some be lost.

A. A.

EDUCATION OF GEORGE III. (3rd S. vi. 70, &c.)

Your correspondent has rightly stated that Earl Harcourt, and Stone,* Bishop of Peterborough, were appointed preceptors to George III., and he has given some account of the way in which they performed their functions; but he has omitted to mention that they were soon dismissed from office, and two other persons substituted in their room. I never heard any reason assigned, in sober prose; for the change; but a contemporary bard insinuates that Lord Harcourt, at least, lost his situation because his son did not make himself sufficiently agreeable to the Princess Dowager of Wales, the king's mother. He is speaking of the punishments to be inflicted on the revolted Americans, in case of their subjugation:—

[* Dr. John Thomas was Bishop of Peterborough A.D. 1747-1757.—Ep.]

"On the bare earth Charles Lee shall kneel;
Young Harcourt draws the shining steel,
And bids the party—'Fire!'"
'Why, my brave friend, that milky heart?
Had you performed Prince Orlow's part,
No frowns had sunk your sire.'"

N. F. H. for Wit, ii. 148.

Prince Orlow was one of the chief favourites of Catharine II. of Russia. (I feel some remorse for copying the above stanza, which contains a cruel calumny on a much-injured lady.) The picture of a military execution shows the hand of a military man, Fitzpatrick. W. D.

HUMAN SKIN TANNED (2nd S. ii. 68, 250, &c.) In a former series of "N. & Q." some very curious facts are recorded relative to the finding of human skin nailed to ancient church doors, and similar places; and believed to be the skins of Danes, or of criminals executed for sacrilege. A precedent for this strange custom may be found in the passage of Herodotus, which describes the manners and mode of warfare of the Scythians (B. iv. c. 64). He there explains the mode in which the scalp was detached, and the skin scraped, dried, and softened, so as to be either kept for wiping the hands (whence the origin of the "Scythian napkin," χειρόμακτρον), or to be sewed together till they formed a cloak. But the use most nearly resembling that which at one time existed in England was, when, as Herodotus says, the Scythians stripped off the skin from the hands of a dead enemy, together with the nails, and with them covered their quivers; or else flayed the body entire, and stretched the skin upon a wooden frame, διατείναντες ἐπὶ ξύλων, to be exposed as a trophy.

Looking to the close similarity between these savage customs and those still prevailing amongst the Indians of North America, do they not suggest some corroboration of the legends which preserve the memory of an intercourse, in a remote age, between the people of Scandinavia and the tribes inhabiting Greenland, and the territory south of it?

J. EMERSON TENNENT.

CONEY-GARE (3rd S. viii. 48, 78, 119.)—In addition to the places bearing this name, which have been quoted in England, it is worth noting that it occurs also in Ireland at Holywood (the birth place of Johannes à Sacro-bosco), a few miles from Belfast, on the south or county Down side of the bay. A considerable tract of land near the sea at that point is called the "Kinne-gar," a corruption of Coney gaer, or Coney gare. Within a short distance is a farm called Knock-na-gunny, or Knock-na-coney, which may mean the Coney Hill; and on the opposite side of the lough is the Cunny-berry, or coney-burrow.

J. EMERSON TENNENT.

P.S. The etymology of the word was discussed in "N. & Q." some years back. See 1st S. xii. 120, &c.

A portion of the gardens of Lincoln's Inn was so called from the quantity of rabbits found there. Spilsbury (p. 85) says that in the reigns of Edw. IV., Hen. VII. and VIII., penalties were imposed on the students' hunting them with bows and arrows or darts.

P. W. TREPOLFES.

NOLO EPISCOPARI (3rd S. vii. 42, et seq.)—The very first instance in the English church is perhaps the most remarkable,—that of Hooper, in 1550, who stoutly objected to the rites and restments of consecration, and petitioned the young king that he might be "excused from the ceremonial orders, or be discharged of his bishoprick." Thereupon Edward gave pledge under the royal seal to Cranmer, that if he yielded to Hooper's scruples he should not be subject to the penalty of præmunire. But the bishops would neither consent to release him from his office elect, nor to consecrate him without the prescribed ceremonial. The controversy became public, and even eminent foreign theologians engaged in the pro and con. Hooper was separated from his family, and confined in the house of Cranmer, who, however, soon gave up his conversion as a hopeless case. He was then sent to the Fleet, on scant fare and close imprisonment for two months, and significant hints were given that his obstinacy would endanger his life. At last he was induced to assent, "for the public profit of the church," and, as Fox remarks, "took it patiently." Hooper was a diligent and zealous bishop, and subsequently atoned for the obstinacy of his nolo episcopari by martyrdom. His conscientious scruples foreshadowed the Puritanism which afterwards rent the Church of England. See Fox, Burnet, Fuller, Strype, and Heylin.

J. L.

Dublin.

ROTTENBURG FAMILY (3rd S. viii. 333.)—There are several noble German families who spell their name Rotenberg, Rothenburg, or Rottenberg. In Prussia there are Counts Rothenburg; in both Austria and Prussia Barons Rottenberg. But it is probably about the old Counts Rotenburg (now, I imagine, extinct) that MR. PRIDEAUX desires information. Their arms, which are engraved in Siebmacher's Wappenbuch (Nürnberg, ed. 1732), vol. ii. plate 17, are Az. a chev. engoulé or; that is, the point of the chevron is passed into the mouth of a lion's head caboshed. An imperfect genealogy of this family is given in Henninge's Theatrum Genealogicum. (See Spener, Opus Heraldicum, pars specialis, p. 413.)

JOHN WOODWARD.

New Shoreham.

The following extract is from the Père Anselme's Histoire Généalogique et Chronologique de la Maison Royale de France, &c., tome ix. p. 300, Paris, 1733:—

"Conrad-Alexandre, Comte de Rottembourg, Seigneur de Moisevaux, de Rougemont, de Keivenheim, de Seintin et d'Oberbruck, brigadier des Armées du Roi, son Ambassadeur Extraordinaire en Espagne, et ci-devant Ambassadeur Extraordinaire et Plenipotentiaire au Congrès de Cambray et auprès du Roi de Prusse, est né le 26 Février 1684. Il est fils de Nicolas-Frédéric, Comte de Rottembourg, Maréchal des Camps et Armées du Roi, et d'Anne-Jeanne de Rosen, et a épousé par contrat du 10 Avril 1721 Jeanne-Madelene d'Helmsstat, fille de Blaicart, Comte de Helmsstat, Seigneur de Hingsange et de Bichofhaine, Baron du S. Empire et de Marie-Joséph de Poitiers."

J. MACRAY.

Oxford.

THE LEICESTER BADGE (3rd S. viii. 332.)—I beg to assure E. K. that there is just as little foundation for the tradition he mentions, as there is for the idea (still common in country places), that the badge of Ulster, in the arms of a baronet, is borne by way of expiating some murderous deed of an ancestor. A good instance of this Warwickshire idea is recorded in "N. & Q." 2nd S. i. 226.

JOHN WOODWARD.

MEYERS'S "LETTERS" (3rd S. viii. 107.)—Cuniger probably means Cynægeirus, the brother of Æschylus. According to Herodotus, when the Persians fled at Marathon, Cynægeirus seized one of their ships, but fell with his right hand cut off. The next version says, he then seized the ship with his left hand, which was also cut off. Justin completes the story by—

"Ad postremum morsu navem detinuit. Tantam in eo virtutem fuisse, ut non tot caedibus fatigatus, non duabus manibus amissis victus, truncus ad postremum, veluti et rabida fera, dentibus dimicaverit." (Lib. iii. c. 9, p. 74, ed. Lugd. Bat. 1701.)

See Smith's Classical Dictionary, i. 911.

E. N. II.

LORD NORTH'S "FOREST OF VARIETIES" (3rd S. viii. 284.)—On the title-page of my copy also of this rare and curious book, below the word "Varieties," is written in an irregular contemporary hand, "Or Rather A Wylderness." It is singular that these words are to be found in so many copies; and as the work was privately printed, and probably only for distribution to personal friends, it is not improbable that they were written by the author (as also a few corrections throughout), as an apology for the immethodic nature of his performance. My copy has also the dedication "To her Excellent Majesty of Bohemia," which MR. HAZLITT thinks peculiar to the one which came under his notice; but I do not find the two cancelled leaves at the end. A later issue of the book was entitled A Forest Promiscuous of Several Seasons' Productions, in 4 parts, folio, 1659. An account of this work is given in Sir E. Brydges's British Bibliographer, vol. ii. p. 299, and a notice, with copious extracts, will be found in Walpole's Royal and Noble Authors, ed. by Park. WILLIAM BATES.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL NOY (3rd S. viii. 190.)—As the eldest son of Noy died without issue, and the second son left three daughters, there are no representatives of the Attorney-General in the male line. W. PENDREA would do well to consult Davies Gilbert's History of Cornwall, who was descended from one of these daughters.

The family that lived at Pendrea was the only one of the name of Noy in Cornwall: but the estate of Camanton, in Ryder, belonged to them; and Edward Noyes, of that place, is mentioned by Norden.

The name is not nearly so uncommon as PENDREA supposes. There are several Noyes in Penzance, Galval, and St. Just; and probably other parishes. They are all ignorant of any connection with the Attorney-General; and those at Penzance disclaim relationship with each other.

P. W. TEEPOLFEN.

JAMES PRICE, M.D., THE LAST OF THE ALCHEMISTS (3rd S. viii. 290.)—There is a history of this gentleman in Brayley's History of Surrey, vol. i. pp. 454, 455, which refers to Brande's Journal of Science, vol. ix. p. 237. In the former work it is stated that the inscription on his tablet in the church of Stoke-next-Guildford, records that he died on the 31st of July, 1783.

W. J. TILL.

Croydon.

W. C. B. will find a correct account of Dr. James Price in Brayley's Surrey, also in Manning and Bray. Gorton's Biographical Dictionary and Chambers's Book of Days are both in error in regard to the date of his death. He took the name of Price on succeeding to the property of an uncle of that name, and took his degree at Oxford. Accounts of his experiments at Guildford were printed at the Clarendon Press in 1782 and following year. He was buried in Stoke Church, Guildford, where a tablet bears this inscription:—

"Near this place are deposited the remains of James Price, M.D., F.R.S., who died the 31st of July, 1783, aged 25 years. Heu! qualis erat."

His portrait, in crayons, by John Russell, R.A., and the two editions of his Experiments, are in the Guildford Institute. The tale in All the Year Round is one of the jumbles of truth and fiction too frequently found in modern publications. In Chambers's Book of Days (ii. 174) is a memoir of Abp. Abbot, a native of Guildford, in which is given the copy of a letter written to his wife respecting the sad accident at Lord Zouch's; but it so happens the archbishop never had a wife.

GILBERT.

GUBBINGS AND GIPSIES (3rd S. vi. 128.)—In the month of March, 1804, a man named Gubbins, who had been executed at Winchester for murder, was with his accomplice hanged in chains on Parley Common, near Christchurch, on the confines of Hants and Dorset.

In my youthful days parts of the skeletons were still visible, and the post remained till the winter of 1849-50. In the course of that severe season, some of the wild inhabitants of the district made a fire round it, after the Indian fashion, burnt it off at the bottom, and carried it away for fuel. It had been so secured with iron hoops that it could not be cut down by axe or saw.

This must have been one of the last gibbet posts standing in England. I believe the very last stood at some place with an ugly name in a northern county. Gubbins was a tall man, of swarthy complexion, like a gipsy; and I have seen a brother of his, who was keeper to a Dorsetshire baronet, and who was similarly distinguished. I do not think they were natives of that county, or of Hampshire; and it is not impossible that some adventurous Devonshire Gubbins might wander in quest of employment, or with some other object, through Dorset into Hants.

W. D.

CLEANING OLD SILVER COINS (3rd S. viii. 308.) It is a very difficult matter to clean a silver coin that has a crust of black sulphide of silver on it; it may be done, however, by boiling it in strong caustic potash or soda.

Red spots can be removed by sulphuric acid; but it requires some care, as silver is soluble in sulphuric acid. The temperature must not be raised at all, and the coin subjected to its influence only for a very short time (half a minute) and then immediately put into a large volume of hot water.

Cold concentrated hydrochloric acid can sometimes be used (it does not dissolve silver), but it is apt to leave the coin spotted.

Dilute sulphuric acid (1 of acid to 10 of water), about 80° to 100° F., cleans copper coins admirably, but they must be very well washed in hot water and dried with a warm towel.

Warm water, soap, and a soft brush will make old silver coins as clean as they are generally required to be.

JOHN DAVIDSON.

MAJOR COCKBURN (3rd S. viii. 309.)—The process by which this gentleman made his drawings, as described in Spahr's Autobiography, was no doubt by the use of the camera lucida, by means of which the landscape and objects can be thrown in reduced perspective there traced by hand with SPUR MONEY IN BE viii. 17.)—Further information will be found in C vol. ii. p. 541. The same by those who wore spur Charles Knight's Passea vol. i. p. 77, appears to time.

MARSHAL SOULT'S P In reference to CANON I lowing notice of Murill "Conception," from Vi the pictures in the Lo interest:—

"Acquis le 19 Mai 1852, Maréchal-général Soult, d 615,900 fr. (avec les frais) au Louvre en 1886, ainsi q rissant le paralytique, du me aux liens, également de M Ribera, et gravé sous le non Réveil. Ces trois peinture 500,000 fr. par le Roi Loui sur l'inventaire de son rè restèrent pas longtemps au le 13 Avril 1835, entre M. l Maréchal Soult, fut réalié rendit ces trois tableaux : marquis de Dalmatie, agiass

HORSES FRIGHTENED CAMEL (2nd S. viii. 354, v. 378; vii. 440.)—The little general importance to have more than suffice of this, therefore insert following, cut from 77 14, 1865:—

"SINGULAR ACCIDENT. living at Castleton, near Ro turnpike road between Old nesday morning with two The camels and elephant co theatre were making their ham, when one of the horse upon seeing such unusur knocked his driver down. Buckley's body, killing him

JOHN HOKER (3rd S. of Magdalen College, O; in 1535: "being then," "accounted excellently Latin authors, a good much commended for hi living," continues Wood 1543, being then B.D. I presume he died shortly: Bliss's edit, i. 138.) Dublin.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

A Round of Days, described in Original Poems by some of our most celebrated Poets, and in Pictures by eminent Artists, engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. (Routledge & Sons.)

Encouraged, we presume, by the success which attended their Christmas book for 1865—Home Thoughts and Home Scenes—Messrs. Routledge and the Brothers Dalziel have this year produced a volume of very similar character. The names of Allingham, Buchanan, Dora Greenwell, William and Mary Howitt, Jean Ingelow, Locker, Mrs. Norton, Miss Muloch, Tom Taylor, and other popular writers, figure among the literary contributors to the volume; and their lucubrations, varied in subject as the days of the year, but some of them especially good and appropriate, are ably illustrated by W. P. Burton, A. W. Bays, Warwick Brooks, E. and T. Dalziel, Paul Gray, A. B. Houghton, T. Morten, J. W. North, E. J. Pinwell, F. Walker, and J. D. Watson: and their drawings have been engraved on wood by the Brothers Dalziel with their accustomed success. No attempt at a classification of subjects has been made; for scenes of various and sometimes of very opposite kinds follow close together, as in the cloud and sunshine of man's actual experience. So in some cases the artist has illustrated the author, in others the poet has painted in words the ideas of the artist. The result of the whole being, a volume which must take a deservedly high place among the Christmas Books of the present Season.

Two of the Saxon Chronicles parallel, with Supplementary Extracts from the others. Edited with Introduction, Notes, and a Glossarial Index. By John Earle, M.A. (Macmillan.)

The Anglo-Saxon Professor of Oxford has done credit to his University and to himself by the publication of this critical edition of The Saxon Chronicle. Important as is this Chronicle, or rather these Chronicles, for the early history of this country, they have never been subjected to the critical examination, or edited with the care and learning, exhibited in the present volume, which presents to the student the two texts which are most remarkable in themselves, and most worthy of being compared with each other, together with characteristic parts of other texts, so as to supply a comprehensive view of the whole series without the omission of any important feature. In the notes, Mr. Earle has endeavoured to clear away some of the obscurities which still remain; and he has made the Glossarial Index as perfect as possible, in order to open up the Text, and to take the measure of the Saxon historical vocabulary. We need scarcely say a word as to the historical value of the present volume, so may point it out as a good book for any one to take in hand who desires to enter upon the study of Anglo-Saxon.

Essays of Montaigne. Edited, compared, revised, and annotated by the Author of "The Gentle Life." (Sampson Low.)

One is somewhat surprised to find that only two editions of the Essays of Montaigne have been published in this country during the present century, namely, one in three volumes published by Miller in 1811, and that edited by Mr. Hazlitt in 1841. We cannot doubt therefore that this handsomely printed volume which—based on the editions of 1759, with corrections, alterations, amendments, and fresh notes, and which includes all the most interesting biographical essays, and all which most come home to men's business and bosoms—will be welcomed by a large body of readers. "Downright Montaigne" is so very plain spoken, that we can well understand his being printed with the omission of an essay or two, and certain passages quite unsuited to the present age: and we are sure that the fact of such omission will, in the eyes of many, be an additional recommendation of this beautifully printed and carefully edited volume.

Histoire de la Caricature Antique, par Champfleury (Paris, Dentu; London, Williams & Norgate.)

In a pleasant dedication to our occasional correspondent, M. Philartète Charles, the author of this interesting little sketch of the Caricaturists of Antiquity tells us it owes its origin to the sympathy which that Professor showed in some of his Lectures for those "humoristes méconnus, qui manquant de respect pour l'humanité et en montrant les grimaces, sont nécessairement exclus des Almanachs de Gotha de la littérature." Be its origin, however, what it may, the book is replete with curious information, pleasantly written, nicely illustrated, and calculated to make us wish for its promised companion on Modern Caricatures.

Wine. The Advantage of Pure Natural Wine, and its Special Qualities for the Promotion of Health and Social Enjoyment. (Denman.)

Our notice of Dr. Druitt's Report on Cheap Wines has brought us this brochure from Mr. Denman, who has the merit of having been the original introducer of pure Greek wines into this country. Of course, though this tract is open to the objection of being an ex parte eulogy of the class of wines in which Mr. Denman deals, and to which he gives his especial attention, there is so much plain common sense in it, that we think few who desire to make acquaintance with pure though low-priced wines will read it without giving some of these Greek wines a fair trial.

Medical Systems. An Address at the First Meeting of a Medical Association at Birmingham. Delivered by the President, William Sharp, M.D., F.R.S. (Longman.)

A temperate, logical, and well-reasoned Address, which every medical man should read dispassionately. Those—and how large is the daily increase in their number?—who have lost faith in the old system will, we think, be struck with some of the views here enunciated by Dr. Sharp.

Original Notes on Dorchester and the Durotriges. By the Rev. Richard Cutler, M.A. (Dorset County Chronicle Office.)

A series of amusing and graphic Dorchester sketches, originally contributed weekly to the County Chronicle, which well deserve to be preserved in the present more convenient form. They exhibit a happy combination of deep reading, with interesting personal recollections.

Our Domestic Fire-Places; a Treatise on the Economical Use of Fuel, and the Prevention of Smoke; with Observations on the Patent-Laws. By Frederick Edwards, Jun. Second Edition. (Hardwick.)

A Treatise on Smoky Chimneys; their Cure and Prevention. By F. Edwards, Jun. (Hardwick.)

Though we do not agree with the Neapolitan Ambassador, who declared that in England we got all our sun from Newcastle coals, we are doubtless indebted to those black diamonds for much of our health, comfort, and enjoyment. The first of the volumes whose titles we have just transcribed gives much interesting information as to the economical use of these aids to enjoyment; while the second deserves the especial consideration of those who being spared two of the proverbially great sources of domestic misery—a smoking wife and crying children—are yet vexed with the third great evil, smoky chimneys.

RUBBINGS OF BRASSES.—I am instructed by the churchwardens of St. Helen's, Bishopsgate (Messrs. Rolfe and Richardson), to inform the readers of "N. & Q." that, during the repairs now in progress, any gentleman desirous of taking "rubblings" of the various brasses in the church can do so on application to the architects, Messrs. Wadmore and Baker, 35, Great St. Helen's.

R. H. HILLS.

EXHIBITION OF NATIONAL PORTRAITS, 1866.—We learn, with much gratification, that the Committee have already received many very important promises of assistance, and the offer of interesting contributions. The University of Oxford has, as we should have hoped of such a body, thrown open their treasures to the Committee. The Dean and Chapter of Christ Church have with the same liberality offered the fine portraits in their great hall and library; and other Colleges are, we believe, prepared to act with readiness in promoting the wishes of their Chancellor. We shall probably return to this subject next week.

THE PASTON LETTERS.—It has been generally understood that, at the opening Meeting of the Society of Antiquaries on Thursday next, a paper would be read by Mr. Bruce defending these interesting documents from the doubts cast upon their authenticity by Mr. Merivale. If however it be true, as is reported, that the originals of the Fifth Volume, together with some other old documents of the like nature—and the letters of Sir John Fenn to his publisher have been found by Mr. Philip Frere, the son of Mr. Serjeant Frere, among Sir John Fenn's papers—it is obvious that Mr. Bruce's paper must be postponed; at all events, till such originals have been examined by competent authority. If Mr. Merivale's doubts lead to the discovery of these, and to a successful search after the other long-missing originals, he will have done good service to the cause of historical truth; and will, we are sure, not the less rejoice at the result, although it is not that which he was originally prepared to expect.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES WANTED TO PURCHASE.

DUBAND'S ON SYMBOLISM.

••• Letters stating particulars and lowest price, carriage free, to be sent to Mr. W. G. SMITH, Publisher of "NOTES & QUERIES," 22, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books, to be sent direct to the gentlemen by whom they are required, whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—

POULSON'S HISTORY AND ANTIQUITIES OF HOLDBERNEST. Part IV.

Wanted by Mr. Frederic Ostry, 65, Lincoln's Inn Fields.

TAAFT'S DES BALLES, par Père Menestrieu.

Wanted by Mr. W. Stavenhagen Jones 79J, Gracechurch Street.

Notices to Correspondents.

MONUMENTAL BRASSES.—Our Correspondent from Huntley will, we think, find all the information he desires in the Rev. Herbert Haines's valuable Manual of Monumental Brasses, published by Parker in 1861.

T. F. F. (Hurstlepoint) thanked. We propose to use his last communication in our Christmas Number.

Fitz. Since the death of our Correspondent, J. B. Davidson, Esq., of Sectors, we know of no Devonshire genealogist except Mr. John Tuckett, of 66, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, and Editor of the Devonshire Pedigrees.

ARMED. In the marriage announcement of "Miss Smith on Crooked Staff" the word on should surely be of.

J. M. O. Mr. Cookes seems to refer to a plot of ground, not a measure, in his query on "Haul Plock" anti p. 29.

C. D. H. We cannot find any earlier edition of A Collection of Psalms and Hymns of that "Printed in the Year 1738."

JOHN MACLEAN. For notices of the land connected with the London Shrievalty "suit and service," see "N. & Q." 2nd S. viii. 261.

ERRATA.—3rd S. p. 319, col. i. line 29, for "Gennanus" read "Gernanus"; col. ii. line 39, for "fourth edition" read "first edition."

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

SMITH, ELDER, & CO.'S LIST OF NEW WORKS.

Life and Letters of the late Rev. Frederic W. ROBERTSON, M.A., Incumbent of Trinity Chapel, Bristol. Edited by STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., late Chaplain H.B.M.'s Embassy at Berlin. With Photographs and Seal & Traits. 2 vols. Crown 8vo. 3s.

The Conflict of Good and Evil in our Day. By the REV. F. D. MAURICE. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Raphael: His Life and his Works. I ALFRED BARON VON WOLZOGEN. Translated by F. BUNNETT. With Photographic Portrait. Crown 8vo. 5s.

Ethics of Dust. Being Ten Lectures I Little Housewives. By JOHN RUSKIN, M.A. Crown 8vo. [In December]

The Book of Wera-Wolves. By SABIN BARING-GOULD, M.A., Author of "Island," "The Son of a Saga." With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

A New Volume of Reminiscences. I CAPTAIN GRONOW. With Portrait of the Author. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Waterloo: A Story of the Hundred Day A Sequel to "The Conscript." From the French of ECKMANN CHATRIAN. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Companions of my Solitude. By the Author "Friends in Council," &c. New Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Irish Coast Tales of Love and Adventure By CAPTAIN L. ESMONDE WHITE. Fcap. 8vo.

The Red Shirt. Episodes by Alberto Mari Crown 8vo. 6s.

Three Years among the Working Class in the UNITED STATES, DURING THE WAR. By Author of "Autobiography of a Beggar Boy." Crown 8vo. 6s.

Transformation; or, The Romance of Monks Reprint. By NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE. New Edition. With Five Illustrations by W. CRANE. Crown 8vo. 5s.

Romantic Tales. By the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." New Edition. With Five Illustrations by E. WATKINS. Crown 8vo. 5s.

Lizzie Leigh, and other Tales. By MRS. GASKELL. New Edition. With Four Illustrations by GEORGE DU MAURIN. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Cousin Phillis, and other Tales. By MRS. GASKELL. New Edition. With Four Illustrations by GEORGE DU MAURIN. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

The Grey Woman, and other Tales. I MRS. GASKELL. New Edition. With Four Illustrations by GEORGE DU MAURIN. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 65, CORNHILL.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 303.

NOTES:—Filius Naturalis, 409—National Portrait Exhibition, 1865, 410—Illuminations of the Courts in Westminster, 410—Pury Papers, 411—Booksellers' Catalogues—Michael's Dinner—"Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John"—Winthrop Mackworth Praed—Sacrifice of Red Cocks in the East and West—Alchemists and Workers in Gold—Bernard Skelton: Bevil Skelton—"Our Ancient Bickerings," 412.

QUERIES:—Ben Jonson's Skull, 414—The Burning Bush as a Device—Collar of SS—"The Contrasting Magazine"—Death in Soundings—Egoism and Egotism—Rev. H. Erskine: Margaret Halcro—Mademoiselle de Fleury—Mrs. Fraser—Fyffot on Church Bells—The First Duke of Gloucester and Stephen Penny—"Hegemiti Illucentium"—Heraldic Queries—Hundred-weight—"Tattering a Kip"—Nicholas Linwood—Passage in Locke—Palmerston Queries: Family of Mee—Latin MS. of P. P. Rubens—Sheffield Family—Suicide—Unpublished Letters of Voltaire—The Duke of Wellington and Eton, 414.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—A Wooden Leg—Lady Denham—Greek Testament, 1642—"Lacke Wilson"—"Eiken Basilike"—William Shakespeare—The World turned upside Down, 416.

REPLIES:—Marshal Soult and the Battle of Toulouse, 419—Yeoman, 16.—Generals commanding the Enemy's Forces, 420—The Highwaymen of Stangate Hole, 421—The Churching of Women, 422—The Ostrich Feather Badge—Mrs. Mee—Curious Names—The Ferner Pedigree—Wasps, &c.—"Treen and Quarterlands"—The Dream of the German Poet—Coin of Tiberius—Platform—Dr. Smith, Founder of Brazenose—Lowcey Arms—Horneak Family—Scrase Family—Yorkshire Household Riddles—St. Augustine's Monsters, &c., 423.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

FILIIUS NATURALIS.

Although the term natural son, at the present date, is sufficiently indicative of illegitimacy, at a more distant period it was not so, and questions have arisen as to its exact meaning. Carnalis filius was, in the great case between the late Duke of Roxburghe and General Kerr of Littledean, alleged to fix bastardy upon an ancestor of the general; but all the learning and ability of the late John Riddell, the well-known Scottish genealogical and peerage lawyer, could not influence either the Court of Session or the House of Lords, and judgment went against the Duke.

The following abstract of a charter going back as far as 1451, is valuable; for the distinction between children lawfully begotten and natural children is shown plainly, by the substitution, or as it is styled, the remainder, under the entail created by William Earl of Douglas in favour of his counsellor and adviser George Kerr:—

"Charter by William Earl of Douglas, of Wigton, of Annandale Lord of Galloway, and of the Regality of Lauder, to his lovite George Ker for his counsel and service, "nobis multipliciter impensio et impendendo," all and hail the noble Earl's lands of Hutton-hawe," with the pertinents lying within the county of Berwick. The lands are entailed upon George and the heirs male lawfully procreated, or to be procreated, of his body; whom failing, the oldest natural son of the said George and the heirs male of his body lawfully procreated; whom failing, the second natural son of the said George and the heirs male of his body lawfully procreated; whom failing, his third natural son and the heirs male lawfully procreated of his body; whom failing, Andrew Ker of Auldetonburne, and the lawful heirs male procreated or to be procreated of his body; whom failing, Thomas Ker, brother german of the said Andrew Ker and the heirs male procreated or to be procreated of his body; whom failing, James Ker, brother german of the said Andrew and Thomas and his lawful heirs male procreated or to be procreated of his body; whom all failing, 'veris legitimis et propinquieribus heredibus masculis dicti Georgii, &c."

* Hutton-hawe, in process of time, is converted into Hutton-hall.

This deed, which is written on parchment, is dated at Edinburgh, 11th January, 1451, and is witnessed by Thomas de Cranston de eodem, William Lauder of Halton, and James Rudysforde of that ilk, all described as "armigeri."

The present house of Huttonhall was not erected till a later period. It is now falling to ruin, but at one time must have been a fine baronial residence. Some of the trees which are adjacent are evidently of considerable antiquity, and may rival those at Bemerside, the seat of the family "de Haga," which are celebrated for their beauty. Notwithstanding this careful entail and the number of substitutes, Hutton Hall long since passed from the Kerrs. Some forty or fifty years ago the estate belonged to one of the Johnstones—a well-known border family. Upon this gentleman's death it was sold. Since then, the mansion-house, not being inhabited, has been permitted to go to ruin, and one portion of it has fallen in.

Thomas de Cranston was the ancestor of the Lords Cranston. The Rutherfords were subsequently raised to the peerage, but failed after the Union. A claim was not long since preferred to the title, which did not find favour before a committee of privileges, although, probably in a civil action for recovery of a landed estate, the evidence of pedigree might have met with more countenance.

Lord Campbell, in adjudicating upon Lord Fitzhardinge's claim to be Baron Berkeley by tenure, asserted in positive terms the impossibility of a subject having the power of making a peer—a rash assertion as concerns Scotland, where nominations are well known, such as the Errol and Breadalbane substitutions, and of the inaccuracy of which the Rutherford peerage is a striking instance, for there the patent authorized the Earl of Teviot to name his successor to the barony of Rutherford by any writing even on his death bed. This he did, and by a last will and testament, proved in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, he named Rutherford of Huttonhall, who was thus made a baron and sat in Parliament, although an English testament could not have carried a single acre of land across the Tweed. The second Lord Rutherford, under the testament, is understood to have been the hero of Sir Walter Scott's romance of The Bride of Lammermoor. J. M.

NATIONAL PORTRAIT EXHIBITION, 1866.

The two following portraits, if thought worthy of admission, will be lent with great pleasure for the National Portrait Exhibition. They were both in the collection of William Boys, Esq., F.S.A. and F.L.S., the historian of Sandwich, who died in 1803. On his death, they passed into the possession of his son Admiral Boys, from whom they were inherited by their present owner.

1. A portrait of King James II. This is a good picture, though not in good preservation. The family tradition is, that it was painted either by Sir Peter Lely or by Sir Godfrey Kneller. Any uncertainty upon this point, however, appears to be removed by a copy of the portrait, namely, Vertue's engraving of James II. for Rapin's History of England, fol. edit. This engraving, with the exception of certain allegorical accessories which seem to be Vertue's own, was evidently copied by Vertue (as will be perceived at once on comparison) from the portrait now offered for exhibition; and Vertue's engraving is lettered thus:—

"Drawn and Engrav'd by Geo. Vertue from an Original Painting done for Secretary Pepys, and painted from the life by S^r GODFREY KNELLER, An^o Dnⁱ 1688."

Should it be asked, how a painting "done for Secretary Pepys" found its way to Sandwich, we may remark that Pepys was chosen Burgess for Sandwich in 1683; and that subsequently, when the portrait was executed, it may probably have passed from Pepys's hands into the family of that Sandwich man, whose portrait is next to be spoken of.

2. Sir John Boys, of Bonnington and Sandwich, gentleman of the Privy Chamber. In the civil wars he was a distinguished Cavalier; and he was subsequently engaged confidentially, as may be seen from Pepys's Diary, in the negotiations for the return of Charles II. But what most distinguished him was his famous defence of Dennington or Donnington Castle, in Berkshire, against the forces of the Parliament. On this subject the Archæologia Cantiana for 1860 (p. 183) says:—

"A few extracts from the Mercurius Aulicus (the Court Journal of those days), detailing the history of this glorious affair, cannot but be acceptable to our readers. We shall be much mistaken if they do not feel pride, in the distinguished loyalty and undaunted bravery of this gallant Cavalier, an honour to his name and to our country."

The following is Col. Boys's reply to a threatening summons of Jeremiah Horton, who was in command of the besiegers:—

"Sir,—Neither your high threatening language nor the rest of these honest men our Sovereign, but do the uttermost of our quarter, yours may expect sooner if you please. I servant,

"Octob. 7, 1644."

(See Mercur

The Archæologia C

"Sir John Boys, in the Castle, was honoured tation to his family and crown imperial or."

In the corner of this modern achievement appears on the head demi-lion. The pain seems to be a good resemblance to living

Your correspondent might have added to Mote, an admirable ancestor, Sir John Mote to those at Surrenden first baronet, the Sir mentary celebrity.

Harry Edmund W Lodge, North Leach, thentic portrait of W ancestor); two exquisite a miniature); and, if one of Hampden.

Mr. Hammond, of Wingham, has an ancestor Colonel Boys, Donnington Castle.

Lord Falmouth has miral Boscawen; and Esq., of Addington magnificent painting Prince of Wales and which, I have under herited from Lord A originally been presen

A WELL-WI

ILLUMINATIONS OF MI

The illuminations of Antiquaries in December recent publication of vol. xxxix., pp. 337 et an interesting description He attributes them to and supposing, from his not appearing to be tonsured, that the Chancellor represented is a layman, he fixes the precise date to be between April 2, 1454, and March 7, 1455, the 32nd and 33rd years of the reign; being the only period during which a lay Chancellor, Richard Nevill, Earl of Salisbury, held the seal.

Some confirmation of Mr. Corner's view appears in the representation of the Court of King's Bench, where five judges are on the bench. The former number of four was not increased to five till about 1445 or 1446: so that the pictures must have been taken after that time.

Again, seven judges are represented in the Court of Common Pleas; and that number did not sit on the Bench till 1450, which brings the date nearer to Nevill's Chancellorship in 1454. In 1452, there were for a short time eight judges; but one of them was also Chief-Baron of the Exchequer, and might not usually sit in the Common Pleas.

The representation of the Court of Exchequer, however, does not support Mr. Corner's suggestion, that it was made while Nevill was Chancellor in 1454-5: for, at that time, there were only four Barons—the chief, and three others; while the picture exhibits five. From 1449, to the end of the reign, the staff of the Court consisted of only four.

It seems probable, therefore, that the date of the illuminations was not in the year in which Nevill was Chancellor. There is no other reason for fixing on him, than that the figure is not represented with a tonsure, but in a cap, which might well conceal that mark of the clerical profession.

I cannot concur in Mr. Corner's opinion, that the centre of the five persons on the bench of the Exchequer was the Lord High Treasurer. He is dressed in scarlet robes, precisely similar to those of the judges in the other pictures; and he seems to me to be evidently the Lord Chief Baron, who held at that time the office of Judge of the Common Pleas also. The reason why the other barons are represented in yellow, or mustard-coloured robes, is, that they were not at that period "men of the law," and had no judicial authority. They were of an inferior grade to the puisne judges of the other benches, and were generally selected from the minor offices of the Exchequer, who were conversant with the details of the Revenue.

It is not known when the party-coloured robes of the serjeants represented in the pictures were discontinued; but it seems that barristers (and probably serjeants) put on mourning gowns on the death of Charles II., and continued to wear them till 1697; when Chief Justice Holt, in Michaelmas Term, made an order that they should appear next term "in their proper gowns and not in mourning ones," and that otherwise be would not hear them. What were their "proper gowns" is not mentioned; but Luttrell (iv. 800) tells us that the change would cost them 15*l.* a man.

EDWARD FOSS.

PURY PAPERS.

The present possessor of property in this parish, formerly held by the family of Pury—well known as active and influential partisans of the Parliament in the Great Rebellion—has lately placed in my hands some original documents, addressed to Colonel Thomas Pury, by several leaders of the day, which seem to me worthy of a place in your pages.

I select three, not as the most interesting of the number, but chiefly as being the most legible; and if you desire it, you shall have the others, as I may be able to spell them out. I would add that, in some of the letters, the signatures are very "dark."

The three which I now send are: 1st, Colonel Pury's commission under the Commonwealth; 2nd, his commission under Charles II., settling a point not generally known—that, although a zealous Parliament man, he served after the Restoration; and, 3rdly, the proclamation on the escape of Lord Lambert from the Tower—the circumstances of which are fully detailed by Lord Clarendon in his sixteenth book:—

"The Seal of the Councell of State appoynted by Author. of Parl.

"By virtue of the authority to us committed, we do hereby constitute and appoint you, Thomas Pury the Younger, Esq., to be Captain of a Company of foote, consisting of one hundred souldiers, besides officers, of such well affected persons as shall voluntarily list themselves under you in the City of Gloucester, for the perfect defence and security of the said City and the Commonwealth against any the enemyes thereof; which company you are, with all expedition, to list and muster. And all officers and souldiers of the same are hereby required to be obedient to y^r comands as their Captain by virtue of this comission given unto you. And you are also to observe and obey such orders and directions as you shall from tyme to tyme receive from the Parliament or Councell of State appointed by Parliament.

"Given att the Councell of State att Whitehall this, 20th Day of July, 1659.

"Signed in the name and by the order of the Councell of State, appointed by Authority of Parliament,

"Housron.

President.

"To Capitaine Thomas Pury."

The Seal (apparently Monck's private coat of arms).

"George Monck, Cap^t Gen^l and Comander-in-Chief of all His Ma^{ty} Forces in England, Scotland, and Ireland, Master of His Ma^{ty} Horse, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, and one of His Ma^{ty} most Hon^{ble} Privy Councill.

"To Thomas Pury the Younger, Coll. and Cap^t."

"By virtue of the power and authority to me given by his most excellent Ma^{ty}, Charles the Second, by the Grace of God King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, I do hereby constitute and appoint you, Thomas Pury the Younger, to be Coll. of a Regiment of Foote, and Captain of a company of foote in the same regiment of foote, under my Comand, for the Service of his Ma^y. You are, therefore, to take unto your Charge and Care the said Regiment as Coll. thereof, and duly exercise the officers and soldiers of the same in armes; and also to use your best care and endeavour to keep them in good order and discipline, commanding them to obey you as their Collonell. And you are likewise to follow and observe such orders and directions as you shall from time to time receive from His Ma^y, the Parliament, Privy Councill, or myself. And you are also to obey the superior officers of the army according to the discipline of war, in pursuance of the trust reposed in you, and your duty to his Ma^y,

"Given, under my hand and seale, at the Cock-pitt, the xiith day of June, 1660, and the xiith year of his Majesties Reign,

"GEORGE MONCK."

"For Col. Pury, or the Officer-in-Chief with his Regiment, at Hereford.

"Sir,

"The Lord Lambert, having escaped out of the Tower the last night, I desire you will be very carefull of your duty, and not suffer any officers to be away from their charges, and to have an eye that no agitators come amongst your soldiers to withdraw them from their duty; and if they do, to secure them and send them in safe custody to the Martiall Gen^l at the Mewes; and in case that any officer or soldier shall apprehend the Lord Lambert, you may give them notice that they shall have one hundred pounds for their paines. I would have you take care that there be still _____ a Commission officer of your Regiment. I desire you _____ to take.

"Your very loving friend and servant,

"St. James's,
11 April, 1660."

"GEORGE MONCK.

C. Y. CRAWLEY.

BOOKSELLERS' CATALOGUES.—Thomas Osborne's series of Catalogues appears to have extended from 1729 to 1755. They contained the choicest articles from the libraries of the second Earl of Oxford (the Harleian Harley), Hearne, Roger Gale, Philip Duke of Wharton, and others. Payne & Sons' series seems to have had a run of sixty-three years, 1740 to 1803; and we find, in connexion with these, the names of many celebrated scholars, whose collections came into the market in that interval. Third in order stand the Catalogues of the Messrs. White, 1754—circa 1850. They traded successively and successfully under the names of John Whiston and Benjamin White; Benjamin White; Benjamin White & Son; Benjamin White & Sons; Benjamin and John White; John White; White & Cochrane; and William White. Fourthly, among bookselling stars of the first magnitude, occurs Thomas Thorpe, 1818—1851. In these lists, we meet with the most extraordinarily curious articles, MSS. and printed books, accompanied by notes, which made them more than lists of information for such tunity of consulting the MICHAEL'S DINNER.

"To the Editor.—Sir,—
I insert in your paper of this date verses published in the 'Michael's Dinner,' and the late Mr. Theodore H. that gentleman stated to appearance in his paper—the extraordinary sale of it that he did not know who had received the manuscript Treasury envelope and by any name being attached; his honour, that he did not am, Sir, your obedient servant
Nazing Park, Waltham

"To the Editor.—Sir,— republished from The Quaker he found the song in the and that he never could do it to Sir Alexander Boswell

(From t

The above letters show there is no evidence that the smart, but vulgar Michael's Dinner." So that he was a gentleman need not care who did. what was the "Treasure" have an impression the sent shape is the creature before which each separate letter. The ministry of to use, but were not in John Bull; and I can solemn assurance of it was brought to him at messenger."

Garriok Club.

"MATTHEW, MARK, not aware whether this "N. & Q." A servitor say it by his mother, somewhere in the west

"Matthew, Mark, Luke
God bless the bed that Four corners to my Four angels lay as
Two to foot, and two
And four to carry me
I go by sea, I go by
The Lord made me
He's the branch and Pray God send me a
Not only me, but the
And dear to me, this

The College, Hurstpierpoint

* Words quite illegible.

WINTHROP MACKWORTH PRAED.—There has been some speculation in "N. & Q." as to why the first of these names was given to Praed at his baptism, and some of your correspondents have gone as far as America for a solution. I think the following extract from the Gentleman's Magazine for April, 1795, will settle the question:—

"April 1. Wm. Mackworth Praed, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, to Miss Winthrop, of John Street."—List of Marriages, p. 346.

W. D.

SACRIFICE OF RED COCKS IN THE EAST AND WEST.—The Buddhists of Ceylon, and the low castes in the south of India, sacrifice red cocks to evil spirits. In Croker's Researches in the South of Ireland the author mentions that, in the year A.D. 1305, a woman was charged with having sacrificed nine red cocks to her familiar spirit. H. C.

ALCHYMISTS AND WORKERS IN GOLD.—Bishop Berkeley was of opinion that M. Homburg made gold by introducing light into the pores of mercury. I marvel that the alchemists, among other absurdities, never affirmed that gold was solidified flame. They conceived, from its colour, that sulphur entered largely into the composition of gold. Lord Bacon writes as follows: "The world hath been much abused by the opinion of making of gold; the work itself I judge to be possible." The Mahomedans of India have always practised alchymy, and possess some books on the subject. Some of them consider that mercury is the base of the philosopher's stone; others say that there are certain fakeers who pass their lives in jungles and sequestered places, endeavouring to discover the leaf of a plant which transmutes the baser metals into gold, and solidifies quicksilver. Their experiments are dignified with the name of Kimia, from the Arabic Ilm-al-Kimia, the science of chemistry; from which is probably derived the English word chemistry. Captain — of the 6th Madras Infantry, possessed a bright ball of some white metal, which he asserted was quicksilver fixed by the said leaf. The art of making the Trinchinopoly chains for a considerable time was enveloped in mystery. Europeans have, I believe, discovered the secret. It is an interesting fact that Dr. Joseph Ferlini, of Bologna, discovered in 1834, in an Egyptian tomb, gold chains of precisely the same pattern and style of art. Mr. F——n, when at one of the stations on the west coast of Africa, saw a negro goldsmith, who returned exactly the same quantity of gold, in shape of ornaments, he had received as material for the work, not one grain's weight having disappeared in the course of the work, as wastage for filing, &c. When any part of the article so wrought was submitted to the test, it was discovered to contain no alloy. H. C.

BERNARD SKELTON: BEVIL SKELTON.—Mr. Pepys, in his immortal Diary, under date 10 Oct. 1662, records with evident delight his sitting in the Regent House at Cambridge, and giving his vote for Bernard Skelton, an old schoolfellow and acquaintance, as one of the taxors of the University. On the name of Bernard Skelton, the late Lord Braybrooke made the following note:—"Afterwards agent in Holland for James II., who made use of him to inveigle over to England the Duke of Monmouth." This is altogether a mistake. Bernard Skelton, M.A., Fellow of St. Peter's College, sometime taxor of the University, was rector of Cantley, in Norfolk, 1668 to 1690. (Blomefield's Norfolk, vii. 230.) The agent of James II. in Holland was Bevil Skelton, a colonel in the army, who also went on embassies to Venice and France, was sometime a prisoner in the Tower, and ultimately lieutenant of that fortress. He left England with James, who raised him to the rank of major-general. His death occurred at Paris, May 14, 1736. He was one of the pages of the body of Charles II. at least seventy-five years previously, so that it is probable he was nearly a hundred years old.

Particulars respecting Bevil Skelton may be collected from MS. Addit. 5756, f. 249; 15,750, f. 72, 74; 15,892, f. 42, 280; Browne's Cal. Venetian State Pap. cxlviii.; Burnet's Own Time; Clarendon Diary, ed. Singer; Ellis Correspondence; Green's Cal. Dom. State Pap. c. ii.; MS. Harl. 1515, f. 143, 144, 209—217; 1518, f. 39, 354, 355, 384; Luttrell's Diary; Macanlay's Hist. of England; Noble's Contin. of Granger; Roberts's Life of Duke of Monmouth; Salmon's Chron. Hist. i. 245, 247, &c.; ii. 320; Hen. Sidney's Diary; Thomas's Hist. Notes; Strickland's Queens of England, ed. 1835, vol. v. 452, 455—458.

Noble and Bromley call him Sir Bevil Skelton, and so does Mr. Geo. Roberts. We can find no evidence that he was knighted.

The instances in which his Christian name is suppressed are numerous, and one usually well-informed historical compiler was thereby so perplexed that he could only suggest that his name might have been Ralph.

C. H. & THOMPSON COOPER.

Cambridge.

"OUR ANCIENT BICKERINGS."—Our dictionaries generally suggest that the word bicker, to wrangle, is probably derived from the Anglo-Saxon pycan, or the German picken, "to peck like a bird."

In Italy the term for a wine-cup is bicchiere, and for a wine-glass bicchieretto. From the former we probably got our name for a drinking-cup, namely, a bicker. And is it not likely, that the words bicker and bickering come from the same source; namely, quarrelling over our cups?

J. E. T.

Queries.

BEN JONSON'S SKULL.

In sending you this cutting, which, I feel, if there be any truth in it, must be investigated through "N. & Q.," I shall abstain from all but a short comment, leaving the learned Editor to treat it at large. What pressure, I ask, can be put, other than an open confession of the parties, that can satisfy any one that this precious relic is that which this blind gentleman avows it to be?

Was it with the intent that this priceless relic, when alive, should be made a market of when dead, that this partial revelation was made by this visually blind, but otherwise wide-awake gentleman? I follow these questions by hoping that Dr. R.'s intent was not to enrich (or rather desecrate) the Shakspeare Museum by the spectacle of the remains of him "who loved him this side idolatry": but to compel the restoration of the honoured caput to the skeleton from whence it was so recklessly, if not profanely ravished:—

"THE SKULL OF BEN JONSON.—In the course of a paper read this week by Dr. Kelburne King, president of the Hull Literary and Philosophical Society, before the members of that society, on 'The Recent Visit of the British Association to Birmingham,' the Doctor, in speaking of a visit which he and Dr. Richardson, of London, had made to Shakspeare's birthplace, at Stratford-on-Avon, narrated the following curious incident:—He said that a blind gentleman, who thought that no one but the guide was present, mentioned that a friend of his had a relic which would be a valuable addition to the Shakspearean Museum at that place—the skull of Ben Jonson. This friend had attended the funeral of Dr. —, at Westminster Abbey, where he perceived that the next grave, that of Ben Jonson, had been opened, and he could see the skeleton of the body in the coffin. He could not resist the opportunity of putting in his hand and extracting the skull, which he placed under his cloak, and thus carried it off. From a remark which the blind gentleman dropped, Dr. Richardson thought he could identify the offender, and he asked if the person's initials did not consist of certain letters. The blind gentleman, who was not a little startled at finding that his secret was out, admitted the fact, but prayed that no advantage might be taken of the discovery. This was promised; but as Dr. Richardson is an ardent admirer of the Avonian bard, he is determined that, without going to extremities, he will bring the necessary pressure to bear on the possessor of the skull, so that it shall be placed in a more worthy repository than the cabinet of an obscure individual.—Manchester Guardian." (Times, 11th Nov. 1865.)

J. A. G.

[Have we not heard a different story about this relic of Rare Ben Jonson? We have a recollection of hearing a very popular writer on Natural History, who had peculiar opportunities of knowing the truth give a very different version.—Ed. "N. & Q."] —

THE BURNING BUSH AS A DEVICE.—Can you tell me when the Established Church of Scotland adopted its striking and admirable device—a Burning Bush, with the motto, Nec tamen consumebatur? This ancient type of the Church, suffering yet enduring, was naturally a great favourite in the seventeenth century, and constantly occurs in Presbyterian writings. Thus in the Petition of the General Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland to Parliament in Feb. 1646, it is said: "The Lord hath not left us in the fiery Furnace, but dwelleth still in the midst of the Burning Bush." There is a Scottish pamphlet, which I have never seen, dated 1717, and entitled The Burning Bush not Consumed. In ancient times, the Burning Bush was also taken as a Type of the Incarnation.

ERIBONTSACH.

COLLAR OF SS.—On the south side of the choir of Ely Cathedral is a canopied altar-tomb supporting three effigies, one of them represents a man in armour, and the other two are figures of ladies. This is said to be the monument, and these the effigies of John Tiptoft, Earl of Worcester, and his two countesses. The earl, an ardent and distinguished Yorkist, was executed by the Lancastrians, Oct. 15, 1470. This effigy displays the engrailed saltire, the armorial ensign of the Tiptofts; but about the neck of the figure there also appears the Lancastrian Collar of SS. Gough (vol. ii. p. 226) describes these effigies with his habitual minuteness, but he takes no notice of the collar. I wish to ask upon what authority these effigies have been assigned to the Earl and Countesses of Worcester? also, how an effigy with the SS. collar could have been sculptured as the monumental portraiture of a Yorkist nobleman? Did Tiptoft, like his father-in-law, the "king-maker," at different times wear both the red and the white rose?

I am endeavouring to form a collection of examples of effigies, &c. with the collars of both York and Lancaster, and I shall be truly grateful for any references and any information.

CHARLES BOUTELL.

"THE CONTRASTING MAGAZINE."—Who was the author of this Magazine, which terminated its existence with its eighteenth number on Michaelmas day, 1827. Published by Hunt & Clarke?

F.

DEATH IN SOUNDINGS.—Is it possible to account for the extraordinary circumstance that in many well authenticated cases, invalids on board ship, who had lingered for many weeks while the vessel was in blue water, died almost immediately after reaching soundings?

H. C.

EGOISM AND EGOTISM.—Is there any appreciable difference of meaning between egoism and egotism?

K. R. C.

REV. H. ERSKINE: MARGARET HALCRO.—I am anxious to know more of "Margaret Halcro, a native of Orkney," wife of the celebrated Henry Erskine, of Chirnside, founder of the Secession Church in Scotland. Where could he have met her in those non-locomotive times? Is there any life of Erskine which supplies any particulars regarding her? F. M. S.

229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

MADemoisELLE DE FLEURY.—In the letters of the Princesse des Ursins to Madame de Maintenon, I find mention made of a young girl of the name of Mademoiselle de Fleury (a natural daughter of the eldest son of Louis XIV.), and that she was brought up by the Princesse de Conti, and married to a M. —, by Philip V. of Spain, her half-brother. Can any of your readers or correspondents inform me of the name of Mademoiselle de Fleury's husband? She died soon after her marriage. H. DE H.

MRS. FRAZIER.—That delightful book, Evelyn's Life of Mr. Godolphin, edited by the Bishop of Oxford, is doubtless familiar to most of your readers. In the note (p. 256) by Mr. Holmes, of the British Museum, is an account of the celebrated "Play at Court before their Majesties." * Who was "Mrs. Frazier, Maid of Honour to the Queen," who, with other Court ladies, was one of the "Nymphs attending on Diana"? F. M. S.

229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

FYLFOT ON CHURCH BELLS.—At Appleby, in Lincolnshire, is a bell with the inscription sc̃a maria u p s̃. In the situation usually occupied by a cross is a fylfot within a Lombardic D standing on its straight side, and at the end a mutilated shield with the Lombardic letters T B and the upper part of a cross between them. At Scotherne the same fylfot in D standing as usual is on a bell with two fleurs-de-lys and h̃t̃, but no trademark. At Hathersage, in Derbyshire, is a fylfot within the letter G in the first word of

"GLORIA IN EXCELSIS DEO 1617 h̃t̃a h̃t̃a."

The letters here are small ornamental Roman, such as were frequently used by this founder (Henry Oldfield of Nottingham.) I have been informed by Mr. Boutell that the fylfot is supposed to have had a mystical signification. Can he or any of your other correspondents throw any light on this, or on the origin of the name, or on its use on bells in particular?† J. T. F.

The College, Hurstpierpoint.

THE FIRST DUKE OF GLOUCESTER AND STEPHEN PENNY.—A writer in The Athenæum of Oct. 28, reviewing Dr. Shirley's Catalogue of Wyclif's Works, and correcting an error of Dr. Shirley's as to the first Duke of Gloucester, Thomas of Woodstock, the sixth son of Edward III., says, "that Stephen Penny, not many years since sexton of

[* John Crowne's comedy, Calisto, or the Chaste Nymph, 1675: see anté, p. 374.]

[† There are seven articles on the Fylfot in heraldry in our 3^d S., vols. v. vi. vii.—Ed.]

St. George's, Hanover Square, was the sole representative of this first Duke of Gloucester." Where can I find evidence of this curious fact? G. P.

"HEGENETII ITINERARIUM."—Can any of your readers afford information about a small, but beautifully printed little volume, with this title?—

"Gotfr. Hegenetii Itinerarium Frisio-Hollandicum, et Abr. Ortelii Itinerarium Gallo-Brabanticum, in quibus quæ visu, quæ lectu digna. Accedit Georgii Loysii C. V. Pervigilium Mercurii, in quo agitur de præstantissimis Peregrinantis virtutibus. Editio ultima, auctior et emendatior. Lugd. Batavor. Apud viduam Henrici Verbiest, cto. ioc. lxxvii [1667]."

The treatise by George Loysius, "De peregrinatione," is interesting. J. M.

HERALDIC QUERIES.—In July, 1792, arms and a crest were granted to A. B., and to the descendants of his grandfather. In October of the same year, licence and authority were granted to A. B. (in prospect of a marriage with C. D., co-heiress apparent of her father then living,) to take the name of D. in addition to B., and to quarter her arms: in the 1st and 4th quarters, D.; in the 2nd and 3rd, B.; "and for the crest of D., on a wreath," &c., as exemplified in the margin. When C. D. became her father's co-heiress, should A. B. have borne her arms on an escutcheon of pretence in the centre of the arms of D. and B. quarterly? Had A. B., or have his descendants, any right to bear two crests: that, namely, of B. in addition to that of D., which last only is mentioned and exemplified in the grant of Oct. 1792?

JOSEPH RIX, M.D.

St. Neot's.

HUNDRED-WEIGHT.—When was this term first generally used to signify 112 lbs.? And was the "hundred-weight" (as the word would seem to imply) ever only 100 lbs.? And what is the origin of cwt., or €, which are both used as abbreviations for the word? W. S. J.

"TATTERING A KIP."—What is the meaning of this bit of old slang? It occurs in the Vicar of Wakefield, chap. xx., where George is describing his employments in Mr. Thornhill's service. J.

NICHOLAS LINWOOD.—Wanted, information respecting the genealogy of Nicholas Linwood, Esq., M.P. for Aldborough, Suffolk, 1768, whose seat was at Itchell, near Crondell, Hants.

H. W. T.

PASSAGE IN LOCKE.—Locke says:—

"We have that degree of comprehension which is suited to our state. Had we more, the circumstances in which we are placed might become intolerable, and the extension of our intellect produce only an extension of misery."

Where can I find any other illustration of this thought? K. R. C.

PALMERSTON QUERIES: FAMILY OF MEE.—I shall be much obliged for any particulars relating to the family of the late Lord Palmerston's mother, who is simply described as "daughter of Benjamin Mee, Esq."

Where, also, are the verses written by his (the late Premier's) father, on the death of Miss Poole, his first wife, to be seen? S. T.

The wife of the first Lord Palmerston was daughter of A. Houblon. What was her mother's maiden name? And what was A. Houblon's mother's name? D.

LATIN MS. OF P. P. RUBENS.—De Piles, in his Abregé de la Vie des Peintres, translates a passage from a MS. by Rubens, written in Latin, respecting Leonardo da Vinci; and adds, "Rubens, after this, enlarges on Leonardo's skill in anatomy, and gives a particular account of all the studies and drawings which he made, and which Rubens had seen amongst the curiosities of Pompeo Leoni of Arezzo."

These are the very drawings and studies now in the Royal Collection at Windsor, of which, as "N. & Q." has most obligingly announced, I am about to publish a fac-simile. I should, therefore, be very grateful for any information respecting this MS. of Rubens. De Piles says it was in his own possession then. Does it exist still, and where? And would it be possible to obtain a correct copy of the whole of what the great painter of Antwerp says of the greater artist of Milan? And, last of all, could not the whole MS. be printed? B. B. WOODWARD.

Royal Library, Windsor Castle.

[As the MS. is probably in France, would our valued contemporary, L'Intermédiaire, kindly transfer this query to its columns?—Ed. "N. & Q."]

SHEFFIELD FAMILY.—Can the family of Sheffield of Seton, co. Rutland, be connected with the Sheffields of Butterwick, in the Isle of Axholme, co. Lincoln? If so, at what period did they branch off from the parent tree?

A. O. V. P.

SUICIDE.—Where does the English word suicide, or its Latin equivalent suicidium, first occur? They are both words of modern formation.

I should be glad of references to foreign books describing the burial of suicides and the indignities to which their bodies were subjected.

EDWARD PEACOCK.

UNPUBLISHED LETTERS OF VOLTAIRE.—A series of fifty-two letters by Voltaire to the Margravine of Beyreuth, sister of Frederick the Great, and one written to the Marquis d'Adhemar, between the years 1742 and 1758, have just been discovered at Beyreuth, in Bavaria, contained in a portfolio, the cover of "Lettres de Voltaire," comparison are proved, from Germany, to have gravine herself.

* They were first printed in the Gentleman's Magazine for 1777, vol. xlvii. p. 240.

Has any of your reading of these letters considered it Voltaire's? Tl Berlin, accompanied by the connection between gravine's well-known communications from Versailles, Broussais.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.—Has any of the distinguished to your pages inform me been stated that the considered "the battle won in the playing fiction has been often mentioning what foundati

Queries &

A WOODEN LEG.—Of this invention. Was

[We are disposed to this present day, as usually in public use by Ambroise Paré, the fifth edition of which we have met with, appears p. 905 he pictures a wooden leg, its construction, and in its from such wooden legs as a particularity of Paré's engraving, would seem he was presenting to his readers known at the time when he that he had obtained his artificial arms and legs "d'un rurier demeurant à Paris, l We suppose that to Paré's tion, though not the invention present in common use. I pass over the claims of the "born with a wooden leg" ing been similarly furnished yond what Paré tells us, we

It will appear, however, a wooden leg of some sort was days of Ambroise Paré, and revert to antiquity. We that for the true origin of back upon a primitive mythical consciousness that to answer mythology may by some pleading ignorance.

It is clear that the "crus ligneum," or wooden leg, was known to the Romans:—

"Inepte, frustra crure ligneo curres."

When a certain littérateur stole Martial's verses and circulated them with his own, the poet, in his epigrammatic way, compared his plagiarist to a man that attempted to run with a wooden leg. (Epig. x. c.). This description of wooden leg is occasionally met with still.

Going back from the Romans to the Greeks, we find Hegesistratus referred to, both by Herodotus and by Plutarch, as having—not indeed a wooden leg, but—a wooden foot, 'Ο ἔχων ξύλινον πόδα—Πόδα ξύλινον προσεποιήσατο, Herod. Hist. IX. xxxvii.; and Plut. in his short Tractate De Frat. Amore. Indeed this instance of a wooden foot comes nearer, perhaps, to the case of a wooden leg than may at first be supposed. Hegesistratus, imprisoned by the Lacedemonians, escaped, it is said, from his fetters by cutting off his own tarsus—ἀπέταψε τὸν τάρσον αὐτοῦ: and it was this act of self-mutilation which obliged him subsequently to use a wooden foot. Now it is hard to conceive what sort of fetters those could have been, from which a man could escape by amputating only his tarsus; and if the Lacedemonians had no better device for securing their prisoners than such fetters as these, they could hardly have been such conjurors as we are disposed to consider them. Hence some learned men have conjectured that the word tarsus here includes the metatarsus; that is to say, that Hegesistratus, in order to get away, had to sacrifice not only a part of his foot, but pretty well the whole. This accords with the statement that he had a ποὺς ξύλινος, a wooden foot; not merely that part of his foot was wooden. And if we may be permitted to suppose that in executing the dire mutilation he knew what he was about, and was not such a goose as to operate at the articulation, but made the division a little higher up (and that seems to have been the only way in which he could have slipped his shackles), then he would have wanted in after life not only a wooden foot, but something more like a wooden leg.

Now this, be it observed, is a very convenient conjecture for us, as it countenances the idea that we have found traces of the wooden leg among the Greeks, as well as among the Romans. However that may be, some record of the wooden leg may be found among the Rabbies, under the name of g'loogt'ka, though not very clearly distinguished either from the crutch, or from the stump used for the support of a leg that is deformed, not amputated. Buxtorf's rendering of g'loogt'ka is "Scipio, vel Contus, Crus ligneum."

Having thus investigated ancient records for traces of the wooden leg, but without discovering its origin, whither can we direct our further search but to the pantheon; and to which of its fabled deities, if not to Vulcan? Vulcan (or Hephestus) was lame; and not only that, Vulcan, as the consequence of his lameness, used some kind of mechanical appliance to support his steps. The exact nature of this support, as well as of the lameness itself, is unfortunately undetermined. We might have hoped for some light on this subject from ancient statues. But, says Montfaucon, (Antiq. Ez. I. 96,) "Quoique tous les mythologues disent Vulcain boiteux, ses images que j'ai vues jusqu'à présent ne le représentent pas tel." Sculptors had their reasons for not representing Vulcan as lame, though mythologists so described him. According to some accounts Vulcan, in consequence of his fall when kicked out of heaven, suffered from weakness in both his legs; according to others, one leg was actually broken. This point, however, is settled at any rate; that Vulcan, in consequence of his lameness, could not walk without artificial support. This support, a mechanical invention of his own, was of gold, not wooden. But gold is not for every cripple; and every myth is backed by a reality. Vulcan's fabled contrivance for his lameness, then, may but present to us the shadowy record of some old-world invention, which culminated, as time rolled on, in the WOODEN LEG.]

* LADY DENHAM.—G. STEINMAN STEINMAN wishes to know where Lady Denham, second wife of the poet, who died January 6, 1666-7, was buried? At the time of her death, her husband resided in Scotland Yard, St. Martin's-in-the-Fields; but she found no sepulchre in that parish.

[The lampoons of the day more than intimated that the lively and beautiful Miss Margaret Brooke (afterwards Lady Denham), was deprived of life by a mixture infused into some chocolate. It is certain, however, that three contemporary writers, Aubrey, Count Hamilton, and Pepys, affirm that her death was produced by unfair means. Pepys says in his Diary, Jan. 7, 1666-7, "Lord Brouncker tells me that my Lady Denham is at last dead. Some suspect her poisoned, but it will be best known when her body is opened to-day, she dying yesterday morning." The Duke of York is troubled for her; but hath declared he will never have another public mistress again, which I shall be glad of, and would the King would do the like." Count Hamilton unhesitatingly lays her untimely death at the door of her husband. "As no person," he says, "entertained any doubt of his having poisoned her, the populace of his neighbourhood threatened to tear him in pieces as soon as he should come abroad; but he shut himself up to bewail her death, until their fury was appeased by a magnificent funeral, at which he distributed four times as much burnt wine as had ever been drunk at any funeral in England." Lady Denham was buried in the chancel of St. Margaret's, Westminster, on Jan. 9, 1666-7.

As connected with the slander of the times, which imputed her death to the jealousy of the Duchess of York, the late Joseph Hunter found the following curious note in a manuscript of Henry Newcome, of Manchester:—"Tis said that the Duchess of York was troubled with the apparition of the Lady Denham, and that through anxiety she bit off a piece of her tongue. She eat a plentiful dinner the day before she died, and being dead, was all rotten except her lungs. When she lay a dying, a popish priest was waiting in the outer chamber to give her absolution, and the Bishop of Oxford also, expecting which of them should be called in, but neither of them were." Addit. MS. 24,489, p. 316, Brit. Museum.]

* From a letter of Lord Orrery, we learn that her body was opened at her own desire, and no sign of poison found. (Orrery's State Papers, fol. 1742, p. 219.)

GREEK TESTAMENT, 1642.—I purchased for a few shillings from Cadly's second-hand book shop in this town, a copy of the New Testament in Greek, large folio. It has lost the title-page, but on the next page there is an emblematic print of an angel inscribing on a pyramidal column, "νόμος ἑσπέρτος ἐν τῇ ὄρει Σιών." The text is very fine, but full of contractions. Is it valuable? I suspect it is a Parisian edition. J. L. P. Birmingham.

[The emblematic print is intended for the title-page, at the bottom of which is the imprint, "From the Royal Press in Paris, 1642." It may be interesting to remark that an angel is writing on a pyramid a Greek inscription, importing "The Law of Love in Mount Zion;" while another figure is writing on a rock below a Hebrew inscription, the meaning of which is "The Law of Fear on Mount Sinai." Prefixed is the following half-title: "Η ΚΑΙΝΗ ΤΟΤ' ΙΗΣΟΥ ΧΡΙΣΤΟΥ ΔΙΑΘΗΚΗ." This magnificent edition, which was compiled at the solicitation of Cardinal Mazarin, is formed on those of Robert Stephens, but more particularly on the third of 1550: it has, however, omitted the introductory part of this edition, and the various readings there placed in the margin are here collected into one body, and placed at the end of the volume. Dibdin says, "It is a work which, along with the Juvenal, Horace, and Virgil, from the same press, ranks among splendid, rather than critical productions."]

"IACKE WILSON."—Of many Shakespeares on my book-shelves, the only one which names "Iacke Wilson" in Much Adoe about Nothing, and shows that he was the first personator of "Balthasar," is Booth's verbatim et literatim reprint of the celebrated folio of 1623. In all the others the name of "dumbe John," and of "Iacke Wilson" are omitted, and, of course, the fun of making a professional singer a mere walking character, then chaffing him for his taciturnity, and afterwards adding to Italian names that of "Iacke Wilson," is altogether ignored and lost sight of. May I ask if the "John Wilson," thus briefly referred to in the Handbook of Biography, is the same with Shakespeare's "Iacke Wilson"?—"Wilson, John, a composer of sacred music, born at Faversham, in Kent, 1594, died 1673." Any particulars of Shakespeare's musical contemporary will be much esteemed. R. W. DIXON.

Seaton Carew, co. Durham.

[Our correspondent will find some interesting particulars of Shakespeare's musical contemporary in the following work: "Who was 'Jack Wilson,' the Singer of Shakespeare's Stage? An attempt to prove the identity of this person with John Wilson, Doctor of Music, in the University of Oxford, A.D. 1644. By E. F. Rimbault, LL.D., F.S.A. Lond. 1846, 8vo. Consult also an article by Mr. J. P. Collier in the Shakespeare Society's Papers, ii. 33, "N. & Q." 1st S. ix. 439; 2nd S. x. 520.]

"EIKON BASILIKÉ."—I possess a small edition of the Eikon Basiliké, and am desirous of knowing its value, &c.:—

"C. R. EIKON ΒΑΣΙΛΙΚΗ. The portraiture of His sacred Majesty in his solitudes and sufferings, with the papers that passed at Newcastle betwixt His Majesty and Mr. Al. Henderson concerning church-government. Anno Dom. 1646. Also, prayers used in the time of his restraint. Rom. 8. "More than conqueror," &c. Bona agere, et mala pati, regium est. Hereunto is annexed A Letter from the Prince of Wales. London: printed for R. Royston at the — in Ivy-lane, 1649."

The words in italics are rubricated. On one side of the title-page is the shamrock, on the other the thistle; on the back an epitaph to King Charles, beginning:—

"So falls that stately Cedar," &c.

Quaint little woodcuts, in which the king is always the prominent figure, form the initial letters to some of the chapters. Who is the author of the epitaph, which is signed J. H.?

J. W. M.

[It would seem that our correspondent is the fortunate possessor of the edition thus described by Dr. Bliss: "Among the various editions of the Eikon Basiliké, the most curious, I say nothing of authenticity or intrinsic merit, is one printed for Royston, 1649, 24mo. The title-page is printed in the form of a pillar, supported by the rose and thistle, and the initial letters are wood-cuts, rudely executed, representing the king addressing his parliament, conversing with his son, &c. It possesses also a head of Charles II., when a boy of nineteen, which has been generally cut out from the volume. An edition of Reliquiæ Sacre Carolinæ, of the exact size, printed 'Hagve, 1657,' forms a valuable companion to the former: indeed the two volumes are of very rare occurrence." The author of the epitaph upon Charles I. is supposed to be Dr. John Hewett, who was executed for his loyalty by Oliver Cromwell on Tower Hill, June 8, 1658.]

WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE. — I subjoin an extract from James Savage's Genealogical Dictionary of the First Settlers of New England (vol. ii. p. 528):—

"In an Indenture between the Right Honourable Sir Richard Saltonstall, Knight, Lord Mayor of London, and two other Commissioners of her Majesty, 40th year of Queen Elizabeth, and the parties deputed to collect the first of three subsidies granted by Parliament the year preceding, bearing date Oct. 1, 1598, for the rating of St. Helen's Parish, Bishopsgate Ward, I find the names of Edward Jackson, John Alsop, and Thomas Child (all in a following generation repeated among N. E. people), chargeable with William Shakspeare, the great poet of humanity, as liable with others to that rate. Among the details of minute circumstances in the life of our immortal bard by a score of pens, I do not recollect, that his residence in that parish of London is mentioned."

Where is this Indenture to be seen?

S. Y. R.

[This document was discovered by the late Joseph Hunter, and is printed in extenso in his New Illustrations of the Life, Studies, and Writings of Shakespeare, ed. 1845, vol. i. pp. 77-79.]

THE WORLD TURNED UPSIDE DOWN.—Steevens mentions "an ancient print" so entitled. Where is a copy of it to be seen? H.

[There is a rude wood-engraving of this description in a chap-book entitled, "The World turned Upside-down; or, the Folly of Man, exemplified in Twelve Comical Relations upon Uncommon Subjects, illustrated with twelve curious cuts, truly adapted to each story." Printed and sold in London." The copy before us belonged to Joseph Haslewood, and is now in the British Museum. We doubt, however, whether this is the print inquired after.]

Replies.

MARSHAL SOULT AND THE BATTLE OF TOULOUSE.

(3rd S. viii. 252, 340.)

The accompanying extract from the papers of my father, the late Major-General the Hon. Sir Frederick Ponsonby, makes it clear that neither the Duke nor Soult were aware of peace having been concluded before the Battle of Toulouse:—

"On the 11th April, 1814, Col. Cook and St. Simon, A.D.C. to Marshal Ney, arrived at Bordeaux from Paris with the news of Bonaparte's abdication. Our communication with the Duke's army was by a considerable round. Lord Dalhousie wished them to go by the great road, and as I was well acquainted with the country, I preceded them. I knew the Mayor of Tourneines; he conveyed me over the River Lot in a small boat, and on the other side we found a French Picket. Cook had given me the French Moniteur, and as soon as the officer had read it he allowed me to proceed. I arrived at Aigues. The General there insisted upon keeping the Moniteur, and gave me a Gend'armes by way of escort. I was riding post, and whilst the Horses were getting ready, a great crowd of People had collected in the Streets. They were crying out 'La Paix! la Paix!' and begged me to ride as hard as I could, for they heard a Battle was expected; they would not allow me to stop for a moment. Near Montauban we met about 300 Infantry marching. The Postilion told me they would not know me for an English officer, and only begged me to do what he did. When we approached he roared out, 'Vive l'Empereur!' and waved his hat. They spread out for us, and all joined in the cry.

"At Montauban the General Officer told me he could not allow me to proceed, and he showed me a letter, signed by the Empress, to say that the Allies were in possession of Paris, and the Emperor at Fontainebleau; but that all would be well if the Army in the South would do its duty, and above all, not to believe the report spread by the Enemy. I did all I could to persuade him, but finding it to no purpose, I told him I was his prisoner. He was very civil, and begged me to eat something. He said there had been a sharp battle near Toulouse on the 10th, in which we had been beat. In about an hour he came to me, told me Cook and St. Simon were arrived, and desired me to get on as fast as I could. I was not long in getting to Toulouse. The Duke had entered that night. I went into his room and told him the news. At first he would not believe me, and I had great difficulty in convincing him of this extraordinary business. Cook arrived in the evening. I was nineteen hours on the road, delayed one hour at Montauban. The distance was 150 miles.

"It has often been said that Bonaparte's abdication must have been known to Soult before the battle of Toulouse; but I can assert positively that it was not; and this was proved by what occurred at Montauban."

HENRY F. PONSONBY, Colonel.

Guards' Club.

YEOMAN.

(3rd S. viii. 286.)

In commenting on verse 101 of the Prologue to the Canterbury Tales:—

"A yeman hadde he, and servantes no mo."

Tyrwhitt says:—

"Yeman or yeoman is an abbreviation of yeongeman, as youth is of yeonthge. Young men being most usually employed in service, servants have, in many languages, been denominated from the single circumstance of age, puer, garçon, boy, groom. As a title of service or office, yeoman is used in the stat. 37 E. III. c. 9 and 11, to denote a servant of the next degree above a garçon or groom; and at this day in several departments of the royal household, the attendants are distributed into three classes of serjeants or squiers, yeomen and grooms."

The knight's yeman is mentioned as a servant, although very likely a favourite one, and gaily decked out for the pilgrimage, for verse 115—to which, however, Tyrwhitt remarks: "I do not see the meaning of this ornament. By the stat. 37 E. III. yeomen are forbidden to wear any ornaments of gold or silver."

"A Christofre on his brest of silver shene;"

It would also appear to me that the yeoman was originally nothing more than a common menial servant in the royal or baronial household, and that he was called yeongeman to distinguish him from the boy, whose age and strength would not permit him to perform laborious duties. In later writers I also find the yeoman spoken of as a servant of low degree, and often with contempt; e. g. Nares speaks of the yeoman fletcherer, as the keeper of the dogs, a servant under the huntsman, one who fed and exercised the dogs; and mentions further that the office was reckoned a low one: for a saucy page, out of mere insolence, thus addresses an unknown domestic:—

"You, sirrah, sheep's head,
With a face cut on a cat-stick, do you hear?
You, yeoman fletcherer, conduct me," &c.

Mass. Maid of Honour, Act II. Sc. 2.

In Shakspeare's First Part of King Henry VI., Act II. Sc. 4, the yeoman is also contemptuously spoken of as a person of low and mean rank:—

"Som. Away, away, good William De-la-Poole!

We grace the yeoman, by conversing with him.

"War. Now, by God's will, thou wrong'st him, Somerset;

His grandfather was Lionel, Duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward, King of England;
Spring crestless *yeomen from so deep a root?

"Plan. He bears him on the place's privilege,
Or durst not, for his craven heart, say thus.

"Som. By him that made me, I'll maintain my words:
On any plot of ground in Christendom:

Was not thy father, Richard, Earl of Cambridge,

For treason executed in our late king's days?

And, by his treason, stand'st not thou attainted,

Corrupted, and exempt from ancient gentry?

His trespass yet lives guilty in thy blood:

And, till thou be restor'd, thou art a yeoman."

And does not the following passage from King Henry V., Act III. Sc. 1, seem to allude to the above-mentioned occupation of the yeoman, as a servant under the huntsman:—

"And you, good yeomen,

Whose limbs were made in England, show us here

The mettle of your pasture; let us swear

That you are worth your breeding: which I doubt not;

For there is none of you so mean and base,

That hath not noble lustre in your eyes.

I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,

Straining upon the start. The game's afoot;

Follow your spirit: and, upon this charge,

Cry—God for Harry! England! and St. George!"

The office of the yeoman fletcher was also to let the dogs loose at a proper time, which has been thus explained: "The popular hunting in those times was that of the hart, and to this the dogs were led in ships or couples, not loose in a pack," as in our present hunting. Thus when the huntsman had traced the game by the usual marks or by the scent, the fletcher was to uncouple the dogs.

In the Second Part of King Henry IV., Act II. Sc. 1:—

"Host. Master Fang, have you enter'd the action?

"Fang. It is enter'd.

"Host. Where is your yeoman? Is it a lusty yeoman?
Will a stand to it?"

We find the yeoman in another subordinate position—in that of a bailiff's follower,† and Lord Byron's "staunch yeoman," in his celebrated "Good Night" was William Fletcher, his valet, a very faithful servant, but a man of low origin, and, at least at the time referred to, of no property.

We have in English the term younger or yonker, a young man, a stripling, from the A.-S. geong; Old Eng. geong; and, in my opinion, yeoman is only a further corruption of geong or yeong with the terminal—man. I have no opportunity of investigating how the first companies of yeomanry were formed or levied. Perhaps some of your correspondents will kindly supply information on this point; but it appears to me they were originally only picked or chosen "young men," sons of villains from the royal or baronial estates, trained for military service; and we all know how highly they distinguished themselves in the wars of the Middle Ages. "These (the ancient yeomen) were the good archers in times past," says Sir Thomas Smith, "and the stable troop of footmen who affraide all France." Many of these "young men" were no doubt on their return home rewarded with their freedom, and small grants of land: their low birth precluded their being elevated to the rank of a gentleman or an esquire, and hence originated an intermediate class between the gentry and the villains, now known as the highly respectable class of yeomanry. I cannot, therefore, adopt the etymology of Mr. T. J. BUCKTON, who derives yeo from Gothic gauja, related to Greek gaia, implying that the yeoman was always a proprietor of land, as I do not believe he possessed any land whatever originally, but only acquired it as a reward for military services or other duties at a later period.

* "Spring crestless yeomen;" i. e. those who have no right to arms."—Warburton.

† A bailiff's follower was in Shakespeare's time called a serjeant's yeoman.—Malone.

J. C. HART, Ph. D.

Heidelberg.

P.S. I avail myself of this opportunity of referring your readers to the following words uttered by Hamlet, Act V. Sc. 2:—

"I eat me down,

Devis'd a new commission; wrote it fair:

I once did hold it, as our statist do,

A baseness to write fair, and labour'd much

How to forget that learning; but, Sir, now

It did me yeoman's service."

Stevens, in his note on yeoman's service, says:—

"The meaning, I believe, is—This yeomanly qualification was a most useful servant, or yeoman, to me. The ancient yeomen were famous for their military valour."

Is it not more likely that yeoman is here to be taken in the same sense as in the above quotation from the Second Part of Henry IV., viz. as meaning a bailiff's follower or clerk, who was no doubt often expected to write a fair hand?

GENERALS COMMANDING THE ENEMY'S FORCES.

(3rd S. viii. 288.)

I beg to inform GIBSON that at Badajoz, 1812, the commander of the French garrison was Gen. Philippon, the celebrated engineer, who retreated into the citadel, and there surrendered.

An uncle of the writer, Lieut. Jas. Stuart of the 88th Light Company, was badly wounded in the arm at Badajoz, while with the forlorn hope at the storming, and on the ladders, with Picton's division, and the 5th regiment under Col. Ridge. For musketry the French fired five or six small bullets from their pieces, inserted into pieces of hollow cane or soft wood, a large bullet surmounting the top. Thus many of our men were wounded. My uncle received a ball above the left elbow, which shivered the bones as far up as the humerus. Notwithstanding this dreadful wound, the military authorities refused him a pension because the arm was not amputated, and he could make some trifling use of it. At Orthes he was again wounded in the thigh by a ball ricochetting from a tree, and once again with a spent bullet at Plattsburg, in America, 1814.

As an Anglo-Canadian, present during the war of 1812, I beg also to state that at Fort Detroit the American commanding officer was Gen. Hull, an old soldier of the revolution. The British (41st regiment, militia, and Indians) were led on by the gallant and ever to be lamented Sir Isaac Brock, previously colonel of the 49th regiment, and second in command at Copenhagen, where the 49th served as marines, and suffered not a little by the fire of the Crown Batteries, particularly the grenadier company. At Detroit, the explosion of a shell terrified Hull so much that he surrendered at once. That shell killed or mortally wounded four of his officers. The firing continued till night; the officers' wives were in the room making musket cartridges at the time in the barracks; 2500 men surrendered to less than 500 British. Hull was cashiered after being sentenced to be shot for cowardice.

"Colonel Cass looks very dull Since his surrender under Hull," was a distich made on General Cass,—a sort of lampoon on his political bias.

Chateauguay, Lower Canada, Oct. 26, 1813, near Montreal railway to Rouse's Point. At this gallant affair, the British Canadian troops were commanded by Lieut.-Col. de Saluberry of the Canadian militia (now Adj.-Gen. of the Canadian forces). The force consisted of militia detachments of French Canadians, of Chateauguay Chasseurs, Beauharnais contingent, and two companies of the Canadian fencibles (regular troops). The Americans were under the guidance of Maj.-Gen. Hampton and Col. Purdy, and were very numerous. The battle was sadly bungled by them. In the night they fired on each other, the Maj.-Gen. was inebriated, and Purdy, who proved fearfully inefficient, was perdu sans ressource. Col. de S. protected his men by powerful abattis, and obstructing the roads. Ninety Yankees were found dead. Of the Canadians, the Duchesnay family deserve notice (old French noblesse, Jucherau D. and his brother) for their prowess on this occasion; also Capt. Daly (wounded). The colours of the Canadian militia, granted to them on this occasion, are hung up in the Roman Catholic Cathedral of Quebec. They bear "Chateauguay and Carillon." I saw them there in 1853.

Carillon refers to Ticonderoga in 1758 (on the outlet from Lake George into Lake Champlain), where their forefathers were distinguished under the celebrated Montcalm, who baffled both Lord Loudon and Abercrombie at the time, and caused Braddock's defeat near Pittsburg (old Fort du Quesne) in 1757. BREVIS.

THE HIGHWAYMEN OF STANGATE HOLE.

(3rd S. i. 155.)

In the issue of this journal for Feb. 22, 1862, is a note descriptive of Stangate Hole, "on the great North Road, near Alconbury Hill," Huntingdonshire; which note concludes by saying:—

"If your correspondent S. has any information respecting the doings at Stangate Hole in the last century, I shall be very glad if he will communicate it, or give any references where it may be found."

The writer of this note was the REV. HENRY FREEMAN, Rector of Folkestone, Hunts, and Rural Dean, who died Dec. 23, 1864; and whose valuable library was afterwards sold by Messrs. Puttick and Simpson. It contained a copy of the original edition of Brathwait's Drunken Barnaby,* in which a peculiar adventure is described as having taken place at "Stonegate-hole;" and this was the solitary mention of the locality that MR. FREEMAN was enabled to discover, although his researches into the history of the county were directed through the greater portion of his valuable life.

I have accidentally stumbled upon a notice of Stangate Hole, in which also Brathwait's version of the name Stonegate-hole is hinted at; and the extract may prove interesting to Huntingdonshire collectors, and also to those of your correspondents who have written on Stangate (and Standgate) Hole. The passages are taken from vol. iii. of "A Tour thro' the Whole Island of Great Britain, by a Gentleman," 6th edition, 1762 (corrected to end of year 1761), 4 vols., and they run thus:—

"The Hermann Street, after this, becomes notorious by the name of Stangate. Near Stilton some Parts appear still paved with Stone, which strengthens the Conjecture that the Name Stangate was given it from thence. It traverses great Woods between the Two Saltries."—P. 26.

"... Sawtery Lane, a deep Descent between the two Hills, in which is Stangate-hole, noted for being the greatest Robbing-place in all this part of the Country."—P. 44.

I have made many inquiries concerning the deeds of highwaymen at Stangate Hole (or Stangate Hill, as it is also called), and have obtained many scraps of information; some of which I will here make a note of.

* Sold at the sale May 29, 1865, for 18*l.* 5*s.*

An old man, who in his youth served as hostler at the Wheatsheaf Inn, on Alconbury Hill, tells me, that "some folks said as how the highwaymen once kept their horses in the cellars of that inn! but I don't reckon much of that myself, and count it to be a tale. But it's true what I'm going to tell you, Sir: that there was a hostler at that inn as was used to help to put in the coach-horses, and then nip across the fields, and come round and meet the coach and rob the passengers; and, if you'll believe me, his shiny-barrell'd pistol was nothing more than an old tin candlestick. I mind the time when they lowered the Hill, and altered the Hole: and when they dug down, they found a sight o' buns." "Buns?" I said. "Yes, Sir, buns." "What sort of buns?" I asked. "Christian buns," he replied. And, as I was pondering over Good Friday buns, and the probable reason for burying them in that locality, not far from Sawtrey Abbey, the old man dissipated this notion by saying: "They was supposed to be the buns of folks as had been murdered and buried there by the highwaymen." So I was made aware that "bones," in the Huntingdonshire vernacular, are converted into "buns."

"I mind, too," said the old man, "the last gibbet as ever stood in Huntingdonshire. It was put up on the other side of Alconbury, on the Buckden road. Matcham was the man's name. He was a soldier, and had been quartered at Alconbury; and he murdered his companion, who was a drummer-boy, for the sake of his money. Matcham's body was hung in chains, close by the road side: and the chains clipped the body, and went quite tight round the neck; and the skull remained a long time after the rest of the body had got decayed. There was a swivel on the top of the head, and the body used to turn about with the wind. It often used to frit me as a lad; and I've seen horses frit with it. The coach and carriage people were always on the look out for it; but it was never to my taste. Oh yes! I can mind it rotting away bit by bit, and the red rags flapping from it. After awhile, they took it down; and very pleased I were to see the last of it."

One of the latest freaks of highwaymen in this locality has been thus told to me: A carriage with a pair of poststers had gone from the Bell at Stilton to the Wheatsheaf at Alconbury, and had been met by highwaymen; but the postboy contrived to evade them by galloping his horses. In revenge, they waited for his return with the pair of poststers. They then stripped him naked, and bound him to his saddle (as in Drunken Barnaby—

" . . . nudum misit; Manibus vinctis sellæ locat,")—

and started the horses on the road. Obedient to their instincts, they trotted on until they had gained their own stable; and the postboy returned to the Bell in a more primitive costume than that in which he had left it.

At p. 473 of vol. vii. (3rd S.) of "N. & Q.," I have told the story of the "Bagman and the Mayor of Huntingdon," in which the highwaymen of the Stangate Hole locality are spoken of.

CUTHBERT BEDE.

THE CHURCHING OF WOMEN.

(3rd S. viii. 327.)

I am led to offer a few remarks on this Office in "the Book of Common Prayer and the administration of the Sacrament and other rites and ceremonies of the Church," from a foot-note appended to Juxta Turrill's investigation of the age of Mary Downton—a "love child"—registered at Thorncomb, near Chard, about 100 years ago—an authentic centenarian. I might take up my parable, and enlarge on authentic instances of "longevity," but this subject seems exhausted, and I am content, with the writer of the foot-note, to believe what the Thorncomb Register confirms—"that Mary Downton was 'nearly a hundred at the time of her decease.'" But I am not satisfied with the assertion in the same foot-note, that the mother of a base-born child would, as a rule, be "churched" when the "love-child" was baptized. From my own experience as curate fifty years ago, in a village in the same diocese as Chard, I should say at that time the contrary to that rule was the practice in the West of England. The daughter of a dairy-farmer in the parish, the cure of which I then held, had a "love child" by a married man (the story, though locally interesting, would be out of place in "N. & Q."), and this base-born child was brought to the font about a month after its birth: but no mother came to be "churched." Indeed the honest matrons of the parish would have been shocked at such an ecclesiastical scandal as churching an unmarried woman. Dinah, the daughter of Jacob, was frequently a subject of matronly conversation; and the fierce anger of Simeon and Levi against Shechem for "dealing with their sister as with a harlot" was unanimously approved of. Being then very young in the ministry, I conferred with more experienced clergymen in the neighbouring parishes, and they pointed out to me, in Dean Comber and Wheatly, the proper explanation of Psalm cxvi.: "I will receive the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord," which the rubric requires the woman herself to repeat after the priest. Now what an awful mockery it would be for a "harlot" to pronounce these solemn words, as the rubric expressly orders, kneeling at God's altar, and afterwards to take the sacred elements, the body and blood of Christ, at the Communion! Indeed any woman (though she might be a penitent sinner) would shrink from such mockery of religious observances, through the mere feeling of decent morality. In these days of revived ritualism and the enforcement of neglected canons, it may seem unnecessary to point out the strict interpretation of "The Churching of Women;" but the innate female feeling on the use of this office after "child-birth," in a primitive country village fifty years ago, cannot be out of place in "N. & Q.," which professes to record the past for the benefit of the present generation.

QUEEN'S GARDENS.

In your editorial comment on JUXTA TURRIM's communication, you observe that a base-born child "would, as a rule, be baptized when the mother was 'churched.'"

I believe you will find, on inquiry, that as a rule, the practice is for the child to be baptized like any other; but not that the mother should be churched.

Persons in the circumstances alluded to, as a rule, altogether shrink from coming to be "churched." In the experience of twenty-four years as a clergyman, I have never known one present herself for the office.

Neither would it be consistent with the rules laid down by such prelates as (e.g.) Archbishop Grindal, who promulgated amongst his "Articles for the Province of Canterbury," the subjoined rule and question respectively:—

"If she be an unmarried woman, the form of thanksgiving shall not be said for her, except she hath either before her childbirth done penance for her fault, or shall then do it at her coming to be churched, by appointment of the Ordinary." (A.D. 1576.)

"Whether your parson, vicar, curate, minister, or reader do church any unmarried woman?" &c. &c. Art 22, Grindal's Remains, p. 164, quoted in the Directorium Anglicanum, second edition, just issued, p. 171, note.

H. W. T.

REGISTER OF CHURCHING OF WOMEN (3rd S. viii. 333.)—Under a different form of expression, there are some entries in reference to this subject on the last page of the first volume of the Sidmouth Parish Register. The earliest date in the book is 1586, but the entries in question are under 1611. The writing is much defaced. They run thus:—

"John Parsumus [?] wyfe made here pwyryfy-cacyon	2d. [?]
Andrew Coolye for hys marryeage	vijd.
Robert Halfanes wyfe here purfyfecacion	2d. [?]
Charles Mayeres wyfe mad herre purfyfecacion	2d."

The above are all that occur. P. HUTCHINSON.

These registers are very rare. The Roman Ritual directs that in every parish, "Liber Confirmatorum habeatur in Ecclesiis in quibus confertur Chrisma." This may have involved a record of churchings. The chrisom put on the head of a child at baptism was to be worn seven days. After the Reformation it was to be worn till the mother's churching, when it was to be returned to the church. If the child died before the churching, it was buried in the chrisom. (Douce.)

The History of Parish Registers notices an entry of churchings in that most curious register at Staplehurst:—

"1 Mary (1558). The xij day of May was churched Wylliam Bassoke's Wyffe and Wylliam Foller's Wyffe."

JOHN S. BURN.

The Grove, Henley.

THE OSTRICH FEATHER BADGE (3rd S. vii. 440.) In Peterborough Cathedral I have lately observed some examples of this most interesting badge, which I have not seen described. The string beneath the windows of the south aisle of the easternmost part of the cathedral is studded with sculptured pateræ; one of them is formed of three ostrich feathers, erect, and set parallel to each other, their tips all bending over to the sinister, and their quills shown below the coronet of conventional leaves which encircles the group. In the corresponding string on the north side is a group of three similar feathers, set upon what appears to be a kind of cushion, without any coronet; here the tips of the central and the dexter feathers bend over to the dexter, while the tip of the other feather bends in like manner to the sinister. The former of these two groups is repeated on the exterior of the same part of the cathedral, in the string below the parapet of the easternmost bay on the south side. All this eastern part of the edifice was erected between the years 1440 and 1580.

Again, over the gateway to the present deanery, in a large quatrefoiled panel, the three ostrich feathers are boldly sculptured, much in accordance with the present mode of arranging and treating them; the two side feathers severally bend over to the dexter and the sinister, and the central feather has its tip bending over towards the spectator. A large and very rich coronet of foliage ensigns the group, but there is neither scroll nor motto. In the archway of this same structure, the work of Abbot Kirton (1496—1528), there is a patera formed of the three feathers, treated after the manner of the example last described, with a coronet.

I have also had my attention directed to two other examples of the ostrich feather badge encircled by the garter and motto of the order. One occurs in the very beautiful binding of the Bible reputed to have been used by Charles I. in his last moments; the initials C. P. are placed, with an imperial crown, above the garter. This relic is figured in the Literary Gazette for 1856, p. 113, and it there is said to be the property of Robert Skene, Esq., of Rubislaw. The other example is blazoned on the dexter margin of the Patent of Peerage, granted in 1641-2, by which Sir Edward Littleton was created by Charles I. Baron Littleton of Mounslow, co. Salop. This document, which is described at length in the Herald and Genealogist, i. 435, is now in the possession of the present Lord Lyttelton, at Hagley Park.

I repeat my request for information concerning other early examples of the ostrich feather badge.

CHARLES BOUTELL.

MRS. MEE (3rd S. viii. 289.)—In reply to S. Y. R.'s query, I can state that Mrs. Mee died May 28, 1851, and that her Christian name was Anne.

One of four beautiful sisters, she was a highly gifted woman, being musician, poetess, and painter. Her artistic powers began to be displayed when, as a child, she attended Madame Pomier's school in Queen Square. Little Nancy was one day threatened with bread and water for dinner, if a sum was not done before the arithmetic master left; instead of a sum, however, she sketched his portrait, and her slate being shown to Old Romney, his remark was, "Don't let that child be taught drawing, Nature has made her a painter." Mrs. Mee retired from her profession in 1830.

B. B.

CURIOUS NAMES (3rd S. viii. 236.)—In addition to the curious juxtaposition of names mentioned by your correspondent, SIR T. E. WINNINGTON, I may mention that about eight years ago at Brighton, Mr. Catt married Miss Mew; and within the last few weeks I saw in the marriage list of (I think) the Summer Advertiser, that Mr. Tee had married Miss Kettle. Among odd names The Times lately had Mrs. Fatherbairns. I also remember two butchers named Taverner and Venus, the latter a particularly ugly man. Tripe, a baker; Virgo, a seedsman; and Wapham, a tailor.

L. C. R.

THE FERMOR PEDIGREE (3rd S. viii. 300.)—The Oxfordshire branch of this family was there settled before 1550, and descended from the Fermors of Easton Neston, in Northamptonshire. The original name was Ricards, and the mother of Thomas Ricards, being daughter and heir to the family of Fermor, he took that name and died in the first year of Henry VII., leaving by his second wife Emmotte, daughter of Simkin Hervey, Esq., and widow of Henry Wenman, two sons, Richard and William. It is noticeable that this Richard was the first master of Will Somers, the celebrated jester of Henry VIII. He was merchant of the Staple of Calais, and married Anne daughter of Sir Wm. Browne, Lord Mayor of London, and had three sons and five daughters. Joan married first, Robert Wilford, secondly, Sir John J. daunt. Anne married William Lucy, Esq.; Elizabeth to Thomas Lovet, Esq.; Ursula to Rich. Fienes; Mary to Sir Richard Knightley. Sons were Sir John, Thomas, Jerome. Sir J. married Maud, daughter of Nicholas Lord Viscount of Harrowden, by whom he had issue, from whom sprung the Baron Lempster, afterwards Earl of Pomfret, of Easton Neston.

William, the second son of Thomas Ricards alias Fermor, had the Manor of Somerton granted unto him, but though married four times, (without issue, and left Somerton to his nephew Thomas, who was M.P. for Chipping Wycombe 1572, and died August 8, 1580. They have up to the present century continued to reside at T. more, but are now extinct, and the estates go into the family of the Ramsdens. Their burial aisle is on the south side of Somerton church where very handsome monuments are erected the memory of the family for many generations. Arabella Fermor, the daughter of Henry Fermor was the Belinda of Pope's Rape of the Lock. a pedigree of the Oxfordshire branch, and of particulars, see Baker's Northamptonshire, vol. p. 599; Proceedings of the Archaeological Institute 1850, Oxford, p. 83.

W. H. TURNER

8, Turl Street, Oxford.

WASPS, ETC. (3rd S. viii. 341.)—For the information of those interested in the subject, I have to report from Sidmouth, Devonshire, that was during this past summer, have been remarkably scarce in that neighbourhood; that earwigs have been disgustingly abundant; and that the beautiful insect the humming-bird hawk moth, Macroglossa stellatarum, has been strikingly frequent. Throughout the day in the bright sunshine it was continually hovering over the flower beds, and came into the open windows of the houses.

P. HUTCHINSON

"TREEN AND QUARTERLANDS" (3rd S. viii. 310, 381.)—Treen, signifying a division into three, may possibly owe its origin to the Latin tres or ternus, from the latter of which we have the English tern. In Gaelic we find trian correspond with treen.

W. C.

THE DREAM OF THE GERMAN POET (3rd S. viii. 370.)—The extract sent by K. R. C. resembles so much Schiller's short poem "Die Grosse Welt," that it is not impossible it may be found on the latter; if so, it is a curious instance of liberties sometimes taken by translators. Should I be mistaken, however, and an original be discovered, I think the similarity of ideas worthy notice.

DENKMA

The quotation sent by K. R. C. will be found in De Quincey's Selections, Grave and Gay, in article on Lord Rosse's Telescope.

De Quincey there claims the piece as in a great measure his own, and explains that, though the original is somewhere in the writings of Jean Paul Richter, his version was given from memory after an interval of nearly twenty years. He supposes that in that length of time he must have varied considerably from the original. I agree with K. R. C. in his admiration of the passage. I should be glad if some of your German correspondents would oblige us with a correct translation.

G. W. TOMLINSON.

Huddersfield.

COIN OF TIBERIUS (3rd S. viii. 310.)—The coin described by ELUY is of Utica, the M. M. I. V. being significant of "Municipes Municipii Julii Uticensis." If the legend on the reverse has been correctly read, the coin seems to present the name of a new Duumvir, M. Tullius Judex. Judex is, however, a cognomen of the Vettia gens rather than of the Tullia.

J. E.

PLATFORM (3rd S. vi. 334, et antè.)—I have just read the following:—

"If the libellous pen of Martin Mar-Prelate was a thorn to the rulers of the Church, they had still more cause to take alarm at an overt measure of revolution which the discontented party began to effect about the year 1590. They set up, by common agreement, their own platform of government by synods and classes: the former being a sort of general assemblies; the latter held in particular shires or dioceses, agreeably to the Presbyterian model established in Scotland."—Hallam's Constitutional History, vol. i. cap. 4, p. 206, edit. 1850.

CLARRY.

DR. SMITH, FOUNDER OF BRAZENOSE (3rd S. viii. 353.)—Has H. S. G. consulted Churton's Lives of the Founders of Brazen-nose College, Oxford, MDCCC. The author of which seems also to have been greatly puzzled concerning the father of Dr. William Smith:—

"William Smyth, Bishop of Lincoln, and Founder of Brazen Nose Coll., was the fourth son of Rob^t Smyth of Peel-house in Widdows, or, as it is now written, Widnes, in the Pars^h of Prescot, and County of Lancaster. His Grandfather was Hen^y Smyth, Esq., of the adjoining township of Cuerdley; where the ancient genealogies, varying in many other respects, uniformly place the family, both before and after the birth of William, the principal subject of these Memoirs."—P. I.

To which is added the following note:—

"Having carefully investigated and compared these ancient documents, I have adopted from them that account which seems upon the whole most consistent and probable; submitting, at the same time, the pedigrees themselves to the reader's better judgment."

The work is replete with information, and there is not an assertion but is derived from some good authority.

T. B. ALLER.

LOWCEY ARMS (3rd S. viii. 309.)—The coat described by your correspondent, but within a border gules, was borne by a family of the name of Roscey.

Arg. a chev. gu. between three harts, I find assigned to a family of Lucas; and I find it is harts, and not hearts, which Berry assigns to the name Lowceys, evidently a gross corruption of Lucas.

H. S. G.

HORNECK FAMILY (3rd S. vi. 38, &c.; viii. 277.) Castle Horneck, near Pensance, does not take its name from this family, and never belonged to them. The name is said by the local historians to mean "Iron Castle," and the property has been in the possession of the Borlase family for considerably more than a century, and before them belonged to the Levelis. Norden mentions "Castle Hornocke, an ancient ruyned castle standing on a mounte near Pensance, and, as it seemeth, in former times of some account."

The Hornecks are not mentioned by either Lysons or D. Gilbert as possessing property in Cornwall, and probably had none. The rule of the Cornish Club was not "originally very strictly adhered to."

P. W. TREFOLEN.

SCRASE FAMILY (3rd S. viii. 310.)—This family is not of Norman, but of Danish descent; and is said to have held lands in Sussex before, and at the period of, the Conquest.

Tuppin Scras, of Bletchington, entered his pedigree at the Sussex Visitation of 1634; and his arms, granted by Segar in 1616, were: Azure, a dolphin naiant, arg. between three escallops or. It is now represented by the Dickins family, originally from Worcestershire. See the pedigree in Berry's Sussex.

H. S. G.

YORKSHIRE HOUSEHOLD RIDDLES (3rd S. viii. 325.)—The little collection of Yorkshire household riddles, made by MR. BARKING-GOULD, has reminded me of one which an old nurse from the neighbourhood of Northallerton used to ask:—

"As black as ink, and isn't ink;
As white as milk, and isn't milk;
As soft as silk, and isn't silk;
And hops about like a fifty-shel.
What's that, Miss?"

Answer. "A magpie."

C. W. BUNNAN.

ST. AUGUSTINE'S MONASTERY (3rd S. viii. 90, 117, 178.)—Is not the direct source of these stories to be found in the 87th sermon, "Ad Fratres in Eremito"? This is the passage:—

"Ecce ego jam Episcopus Hipponensis eram, et cum quibusdam servis Christi ad Aethiopiam perveni ut eis sanctum Christi evangelium predicarem, et vidimus ibi multos homines ac mulieres capita non habentes, sed oculos grossos fixos in pectore, cetera membris equalia nobis habentes. . . . Vidimus et in inferioribus partibus Aethiopiae homines unum oculum tantum in fronte habentes."—S. Aug. Op., tom. vi. App. p. 345, Paris, 1686.

The above is alluded to as occurring in the 83rd sermon, "Ad fratres," in Household Words, vol. xi. p. 197 (Am. Rep.). I scarcely need add that these sermons are considered spurious.

U. C.

Toronto.

THE WORD "BEING" (3rd S. viii. 331.)—I cannot give any earlier examples of the peculiar use of this word, than those referred to by E. K. from the middle of the seventeenth century; though I have no doubt that plenty are to be found, and that as we go farther back, we shall find them still more abundant. For the word is evidently used in the same sense as the French étant, meaning whereas, since, or because; and therefore has come to us from the Norman French so long in use in England. E. K. does not seem aware that in some parts of the country this use of the word being still prevails. In Norfolk you hear it commonly, and every day, in such phrases as these: "I thought you would have employed him, being he has been so long in the place."—"I could not get here yesterday, being I was not well."—"I wonder he has not written, being he promised to write directly."—Forby, in his Vocabulary of East Anglia, notices the use of this word, but was evidently ignorant of its etymology: though it is unquestionably a mere translation from the French word étant, which is used precisely in the same manner.

F. C. H.

CAPTAIN ANDREW CORBETT (3rd S. vi. 472.)—Thomas Corbett, of Nash, co. Pembroke, was father of William Corbett, who married Eleanor, daughter and coheirress of John Jones of Nantoes, co. Cardigan, and had issue Thomas, Vincent, and William. The last-named William Corbett was cashier of His Majesty's navy, and was twice married; first, to Mary, daughter of Thomas Stamford, Esq., serjeant at law; and, secondly, to Sarah Dighton. He had issue by both wives, but by the second he had a son Andrew, and a daughter (Charlotte, wife of John Phillips Adams. (See Burke's Commoners). Andrew Corbett, Esq., Captain in the Blues, was buried at All Saints' church, Leicester, Feb. 23, 1793, having married in 1773, the Lady Augusta, fourth daughter of John third Earl of Bute, and by her, who died Feb. 5, 1778, left issue an only son, the late Venerable Stuart Corbett, D.D., Archdeacon of York.

W. St.

POYLE ARMS (3rd S. viii. 332.)—The author of the article on the "Descent of the Manor of Hamton Poyle," in the Herald and Genealogist, begs to inform ELUX that the arms of De la Poyle are: Argent, a saltire gules, within a bordure bezantée.

B. W. G.

BASIL (3rd S. viii. 369.)—Respecting the derivation of the word basil, or the connection between the same expression for the ring, or fetter, worn formerly round the knee of English convicts, I cannot give, nor have been able to find a satisfactory reply. But I have heard watch-makers call the ring, which contains the glass of the watch, a "basil." Has this anything to do with MR. SALA's query?

BARON LOUIS BENAS.

Liverpool.

JAMES CROPPER OF LIVERPOOL (3rd S. viii. 331) was my wife's grandfather, and I can furnish full information concerning him to S. Y. R. No one was better known here in connection with both the Liverpool and Manchester Railway, and the abolition of slavery.

J. S. HOWSON.

Liverpool College.

LONGEVITY: WIDOW ROWBOTTOM (3rd S. viii. 327.)—The papers of the past week record the death of one Sarah Edwards, afterwards "Widow Rowbottom," who is said to have died in her cottage near the church at Stanmore, on the 5th instant, at the age of 106. They give the following as a copy of the entry of her baptism at the age of five years, at the parish church of Shebbington, Bucks:—"Sarah, the natural daughter of Elizabeth Edwards, a travelling woman, was baptised December 16 [17 in some papers] 1764," and state that her daughter, nearly eighty years of age, will follow her to the grave. Can any of your readers residing in the neighbourhood of Stanmore and Shebbington furnish corroborative evidence, such as the identity of Widow Rowbottom with the "Sarah Edwards," of the baptismal certificate, the date of Widow Rowbottom's marriage, and the baptismal certificate of her "octogenarian daughter," in support of the foregoing statements?

GWILYM GLAN TYWI.

Carmarthen, Nov. 11, 1865.

[We trust that some correspondent will kindly look into this case. Like that of Mary Downton (ante p. 327), this supposed centenarian is a "love child," and not baptised till some years after her birth.

We have to thank our valued correspondent, H. B. C., for an interesting photograph of Widow Rowbottom.]

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

Some Words for God; being Sermons preached before the University of Oxford, by H. P. Liddon, M.A., Student of Christ Church, &c., &c. (Livingtons & Parker.)

The modest title of this volume is as far from doing justice to the learning and eloquence of its author, as it is from explaining the momentous character of the religious problems which are discussed in it. It is a volume of Academical Discourses, in which a profound study of Scripture and patristic authors, a general acquaintance with foreign theology, and an acute observation of the intellectual tendencies of the age, are employed with no ordinary force against the Rationalism, the Pantheism, and the Positivism, which are lifting up their heads among English thinkers. And it is with pride, and with thankfulness, that we find the cause of God and of Revelation so ably and eloquently defended.

Libri Precum Publicarum Ecclesie Anglicane Versio Latina, a Gul. Bright, A.M., et Petro G. Mead, A.M., facta. (Rivington.)

This little volume, by two accomplished scholars, is a Latin version of our Book of Common Prayer, which is noticeable for one or two peculiarities. Being based upon the well-known "Sealed Book"—the authorised exemplar of our Prayer Book—it does not contain the Thirty-nine Articles. The Psalms are taken from the old Sarum Breviary, and the Epistles and Gospels from the Vulgate. While the Collects, and other formularies, which were originally translated by our Reformers from the Latin Office Books, are here given precisely in their original form.

A Century of Potting in the City of Worcester; being the History of the Royal Porcelain Works from 1761 to 1851, to which is added a short Account of the Celtic, Roman, and Mediæval Pottery of Worcestershire. By R. W. Binns, F.S.A. Illustrated. (Quaritch.)

When we consider the position which the productions of Worcester now take among ceramic manufactures, we feel that they fully deserve to have their history recorded. It is little more than a century since, that a combination of circumstances—one of which, strange to say, was party spirit—induced an eminent medical man of Worcester, Dr. Wall, to turn his attention to porcelain manufacture, and eventually led to the establishment of a Company for the carrying out of such manufacture in "the faithful City." The rise, progress, and development of the Porcelain Works thus established, and the gradual improvements in the material, style, &c., of the Worcester porcelain, are described by Mr. Binns in a clear, unpretending, and very satisfactory manner: and his volume will, doubtless, be properly appreciated by all collectors of old china.

Common Words, with Curious Derivations. By Archdeacon Smith, Vicar of Erith. (Bell & Daldy.)

Intended for young students of English, at a time when a knowledge of English is a main branch of public examinations, this little work is well calculated to prove of use to them. It professes to give the derivation of words which are at the same time common and curious, or, as the author elsewhere expresses it, are at the same time conversational and abstruse; meaning by abstruse, first, words of which the derivation is not in itself obscure, but is hardly explanatory of the word, which has, so to speak, wandered away from such derivation, or been curiously applied; secondly, such words as are curiously corrupted from plain originals, and of which the difficulty consists in the disguise of such transformation. We doubt, however, if all the derivations will pass undisputed.

Moxon's Miniature Poets. A Selection from the Works of William Wordsworth, Poet Laureate. Selected and arranged by Francis Turner Palgrave. (Moxon & Co.)

The merits and beauty of Wordsworth's poetry are too universally admitted, to call for remark; while the good taste, and indeed elegance, which characterise Moxon's Miniature Poets, have been already frequently insisted upon in these columns. All therefore that we need do, to commend to the notice of our readers this admirable and beautifully got up Selection from the writings of the great Poet of the Lakes, is to announce its appearance; unless it be to add, that such Selection has been made by Mr. Palgrave, who introduces it by a loving and appreciative Preface.

SIR T. PHILLIPS'S HISTORICAL PUBLICATIONS.—We understand that Sir Thomas Phillips, of Middle Hill, has now completed the whole Series of the Index to the Inquisitiones post Mortem from Henry VII., where the Government Publication ends, down to the end of Charles I., when these Inquisitions ceased. They were printed at the Middle Hill Press. He has also just completed Part I. of the Rolls of Wales, which throw much light on the history of the unfortunate Llewellyn, the last Prince of Wales. Sir Thomas has also finished the Cartulary of Caernarthen, a book which was supposed to be lost. The value of these documents for genealogy and county history is well known.

SCOTTISH CONFESSION OF FAITH AND NATIONAL COVENANT.—A correspondent of Edinburgh has kindly called our attention to the announcement in the North British Advertiser of Nov. 11th, that an original copy, on vellum, of "The Confession of Faith and National Covenant subscribed at Edinburgh in the year 1638," with the signatures of Argyle, Montrose, and upwards of fifty others, will be sold at Edinburgh on Tuesday next. This copy appears to have been the property of the late Earl of Breadalbane.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books, to be sent direct to the gentleman by whom they are required, whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—

ANNUAL EDITIONS for 1688.

Wanted by Messrs. Henningham & Holle, 5, Mount Street, Grosvenor Square, W.

UNIVERSAL PARALLEL CHRONOLOGY FROM THE CREATION TO THE PRESENT TIME. Lond. Hope & Co., 16, Great Marlborough Street, 1854.

Wanted by Mr. G. Weston, Croydon, S.

PEARSON ON THE CARDS, by Logan, 1682; or either of the folio editions dated 1683, 1684, or 1685.

GWILF'S ENCYCLOPEDIA OF ARCHITECTURE.

Wanted by Messrs. Bell & Daldy, 165, Fleet Street.

GIBSON'S ROMAN, 8vo. Vol. I.

FOX'S LECTURES TO THE WORKING CLASSES. Vol. I.

Wanted by Mr. Thomas Millard, 25, Ludgate Hill, City.

Notices to Correspondents.

C. (J. U. S. C.) There can be no documents of the House of Lords containing records of matters in which the Lords Falkenstein are concerned, other than the Journals; and these can only refer to their claims to the Irish Peerage, &c. The only account of any Proceedings of a Member of the Irish Parliament of George I. will be found in the Journals and Parliamentary History.

GALLUS. A white feather in the tail of a cock is a sign of a cross bred bird. Hence the allusion.

"God tempests the wind to the shorn lamb." W. H. R. will find much illustration of the well-known quotation from Stones in "M. & Q." 1st S. I. 226, &c.

E. H. H. Probably the best work to consult on fabulous animals is Berger de Xivrey, Traditions Étiologiques, 8vo, Paris, 1851.

ESSEX'S ESSAYS ON JAMES TAYLOR.—The continuation of this article, reached us too late for insertion this week. We will endeavour to find room for it in our next.

WILL OF BLANCHET PARRY. F. G. has our best thanks for this will, which has reached us safely.

W. S. J. "The three E's" is commonly, but very unjustly, attributed to the late Sir William Curtis.

W. WILLEY. The epitaph on Isaac Greaves, erroneously attributed to Lord Byron, was found written in pencil on a tomb at Marston. It is printed in "M. & Q." 2nd S. I. 35 (Jan. 10, 1865).

W. H. The Countess Dunott's Court of England is noticed in "M. & Q." 1st S. xii. 450 (Dec. 22, 1855), and in 2nd S. II. 450 (Nov. 12, 1856).

G. F. We never met with a prose translation of the hymn "Veni, Creator Spiritus."

G. W. (Croydon.) The late Mr. Fisher's stock, Part I. was sold by Sothby & Wilkinson on March 25, 1854. The remainder in the course of the same year.

"MORNS & QUERNS" is registered for transmission abroad.

CURE OF DISORDERS OF THE LUNGS AND WHEE.—TWENTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE OF THE EFFICACY OF DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—FROM MR. W. LEBLANC, Chemist, Epsom, Surrey.—MAY 1855. "For twenty years I have recommended the Wafers and regard them as a very excellent medicine for coughs, colds, and all disorders of the chest and lungs. I take them myself during the winter season, for irritation of the throat and occasional coughing, and as a preventative of chest and chest affections generally. I confidently recommend them in diseases of the chest and lungs." They have a pleasant taste. Price 1s. 1d. per box. Sold by all Chemists.

FOR SALE.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE.—The present Proprietor finding it necessary to reside abroad the greater part of the year on account of health, wishes to retire from the proprietorship. Particulars for transfer may be obtained on application to MESSRS. J. H. & J. PARKER, 377, Strand.
Oct. 28, 1884.

TO BOOKBUYERS.

NATTALI & BOND'S NEW CATALOGUE of ANCIENT and MODERN BOOKS, comprising all their recent purchases, is now ready. Post Free for One Stamp.

NATTALI & BOND, 22, Bedford Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

BAGSTER'S POLYGLOT BIBLES. In BAGSTER'S flexible bindings.

At all the principal Booksellers'; and at 15, Paternoster Row, London.

NOTICE.—DR. HUNTER'S LETTERS. Now Ready, the FIFTH EDITION of DR. HUNTER'S CELEBRATED LETTERS on DISEASES of the THROAT, LARYNX, and LUNGS, their Nature, Causes, and Cure. Price 2s. 6d., per post 2s. 9d. This Edition contains a NEW PREFACE by HENRY MEIVILLE, M.D., and a statement of English Cases showing the progress and success of the Treatment by Inhalation in this country.
London: C. MITCHELL & CO., 12 and 13, Red Lion Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Just published.

THOS. DE LA RUE & CO.'S INDELIBLE RED LETTER DIARIES FOR 1885, edited by JAMES GLAISHER, Esq., F.R.S. With an Engraving of Lunar Mountains, and an original Article on the Moon by FREDERICK PHILLIPS, F.R.S. In various sizes, suitable for the Pocket or Desk, and in a great variety of bindings. May be had of all Booksellers and Stationers.

NOTICE.—PAYNE'S GUIDE TO JERSEY, in a few days. Price 1s.

ADAMS & FRANCIS, 59, Fleet Street, E.C.

OLD BOOKS AT UNPRECEDENTED LOW PRICES.

CATALOGUE OF A PORTION OF THE MISCELLANEOUS STOCK OF RARE, OLD, and SECOND-HAND BOOKS OF T. & W. BOONE, 29, New Bond Street. Comprising Books in every Department of Literature, English and Foreign.

PART I. (containing 600 Articles) will be issued immediately, and forwarded on receipt of 2 Stamps.

Address, T. & W. BOONE, 29, New Bond Street, London, W.

Published by J. Clements, Little Pulteney Street, price 7d., a new Work on the Teeth, entitled

PURE DENTISTRY, and WHAT IT DOES FOR US. By A. ESKELL, Grosvenor Street, W.

"We feel certain all who make themselves acquainted with the contents of the book through our instrumentality, will thank us for having directed their attention to Mr. ESKELL's work, as assuredly none can read it without deriving the greatest benefit."—The Sun, Aug. 28.
Sold by SIMPKIN & MARSHALL, and may be had of all Booksellers.

BOND'S PERMANENT MARKING INK.—The original invention, established 1821, for marking CRESTS, NAMES, INITIALS, upon household linen, wearing apparel, &c.

N.B.—Owing to the great repute in which this Ink is held by families, outfitters, &c., inferior imitations are often sold, which do not possess any of its celebrated qualities. Purchasers should therefore be careful to observe the address on the label, 10, BISHOPSGATE-STREET WITHIN, E.C., without which the Ink is not genuine. Sold by all respectable chemists, stationers, &c., in the United Kingdom, price 1s. per bottle; no 6d. size ever made.

CHIANG, the MAGIC GIANT.—A new Sensation.—This marvellous figure, which created such an extraordinary sensation at the Court of the Emperor of China, performs daily at 252, Strand, from 10 till 6. Sent post free, with full instructions, for 14 Stamps.—H. G. CLARKE & CO., 252, Strand.

THE GALANTY SHOWMAN.—How to MAKE a GALANTY SHOW, and act the Enraged Cobbler, the Broken Bridge, Billy Button, Mother Goose, and Punch in 150 Engravings, post free for 12 Stamps.—H. G. CLARKE & CO., 252, Strand.

THE MAGIC DONKEYS.—Roars of Laughter.—These wonderful animals go through their extraordinary evolutions daily at 252, Strand, from 10 till 6. The pair sent post free for 14 Stamps.—H. G. CLARKE & CO., 252, Strand.

DOTESIO'S FRENCH WINE CELLARS.

Bordeaux, 18s.; Medoc, 24s.; Graves, 24s.; Chablis, 24s.; Beaujolais 24s.; Ay Champagne, 48s. and 60s.; Cognac, 60s. and 72s. per dozen. List of all other wines on application, to be tasted at the depot, 25, Regent Street Quadrant.

OLD MARSALA WINE, guaranteed the finest

Imported, free from acidity or heat, and much superior to low priced Sherry. One guinea per doz. A genuine fine old port 24s. per dozen. Terms cash. Three dozen rail paid.—W. D. WATSON, Wine Merchant, 72 and 73, Great Russell Street, corner of Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C. Established 1841.—Price lists post free.

CHOICE OLD SHERRIES.—Warranted pure Cadiz Wines as imported direct, soft and full flavoured.—Pale, Golden, or Brandy, 30s., 34s., 40s., 44s., 48s., 54s., 60s. per dozen. Terms Cash. Three dozen, railway carriage paid.

W. D. WATSON, Wine Importer, 72 and 73, Great Russell Street, corner of Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C.

Established 1841. Full Price Lists post free on application.

THE TIMES WINE COMPANY.

THE "Times," in a leading article on the 8th September, treated at some length of the heretofore existing difficulty that the Public experienced in obtaining good Wines at reasonable prices. The formation of the Times Wine Company has removed that difficulty by supplying the following genuine Wines at prices, quality considered—unprecedented:—Beaujolais, 12s. and 14s.; Champagne, 30s.; Aig, 30s.; Sillery, 40s.; Bouzy, extra, 60s.; Charet, 12s., 14s., 16s., 24s., and upwards; Chablis, 12s., 14s., 16s., 24s., and upwards; Sherry and Port from the Wood, 12s., 20s., 24s., 30s., and upwards. The finest Cognac Brandy, bottled in France, 40s., 44s., 48s., and 60s. per dozen. bottles and cases included. Terms, cash only, which must accompany the order. All wines not approved of will be allowed for if returned within a week. Samples sent on receipt of P. O. Order, payable to

T. LAXTON, Manager, 79, Great Tower Street, E.C.

HEDGES & BUTLER, Wine Merchants, &c., recommend and GUARANTEE the following WINES:—

SHERRY.

Good Dinner Wine, 24s., 30s., 36s. per dozen; fine pale, golden, and brown Sherry, 42s., 48s., 54s., 60s.; Amontillado, 48s. and 54s.

CHAMPAGNE.

Sparkling, 30s., 42s.; splendid Epervay, 40s., 60s.; pale and brown Sillery, 60s., 72s.; Veuve Clicquot's, Furrer and Joubert's, Moët and Chandon's, &c.

PORT.

For ordinary use, 24s., 30s., 36s., 42s.; fine old "Bevering" 60s. 60s.; choice Port of the famed vineyards 100s., 120s., 140s., 160s., at 72s. a 180s.

CLARET.

Good Bordeaux, 18s., 20s.; St. Julien, 24s., 30s., 36s.; La Rose, 40s. Leoville, 48s.; Latour, 54s.; Margaux, 60s., 72s.; Lafite, 72s., 84s., 96s.

BURGUNDY.

Macon and Beaune, 30s., 36s., 42s.; St. George, 40s.; Chassagne, 40s., 48s.; Côte Rôtie, 60s., 72s., 84s.; Corton, 72s.; Bourgogne, 40s.; Vosges, 40s.; Chablis, 24s., 30s., 36s., 42s., 48s.; Montmagné and St. Vrain sparkling Burgundy, &c.

HOCK.

Light Dinner Hock, 24s., 30s.; Niersteck, 30s., 40s.; Kockelshammer, 40s., 60s., 72s.; Liebfraumilch, 60s., 72s.; Johannisberger and Steinberger, 72s., 84s. to 120s.

MOSEILLE.

Still Moselle, 24s., 30s.; Zeltinger, 30s., 42s.; Brunnshausen, 40s., 60s.; Muscatel, 60s., 72s.; Scharnberg, 72s., 84s.; sparkling Moselle, 60s., 72s., 84s., 96s., 108s.

Foreign Liqueurs of every description. On receipt of a Post-office order, or reference, any quantity will be forwarded immediately by

HEDGES & BUTLER,

LONDON: 155, REGENT STREET, W.

Brighton: 30, King's Road.

(Originally established A.D. 1697.)

"Purity and Excellence of Quality."

COLMAN'S PRIZE-MEDAL MUSTARD bears their Trade Mark, the BULL'S HEAD, on each Package. It was the only Mustard which obtained a PRIZE MEDAL at the GREAT EXHIBITION, 1883.

Their GENUINE and DOUBLE SUPERFINE are Qualities particularly recommended for Family Use.

FOR MEDICINAL PURPOSES NOTHING FINEER CAN BE PRODUCED.

Sold by all Grocers and Druggists.

J. & J. COLMAN, LONDON.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 204.

National Portrait Exhibition, 1866, 429.

NOTES:—Mr. Eden's Edition of Bishop Taylor's Works, 430 — Shakspeariana: "The Tempest" — Longville: "Love's Labour's Lost," and "The Bloody Brother" — "All's Well that Ends Well," 432 — "Johannes Hunt, Ereptus Vivi-Comburio," 433 — Portraits of Edward James, M.D. — St. John's College, Cambridge — Various Pronunciations of "Ough" — Curious Names — Sir Edmundbury Godfrey: Primrose Hill — Human Foot-prints, &c., on Rocks — Hippophagy not New, 434.

QUERIES:—Ismael Fitzadam, 435 — Sir John Acton on Human Sacrifices — "All the world and his wife" — Bode Ale — Bellfounders — Biblical Distichs — "Composita solvantur" — Defoe's House — "Klipping" — La Belle Sauvage, &c. — Media Vita — Merquisotted? — The Rev. Nicholas Owen — Poor Court — Quotations — Rhyming Alphabet — Suspension Bridge — Tenure not in Blount — Tilson's Lincolnshire and Warwickshire Pedigrees — Treasurer of Edinburgh — Wroxeter Dindars, 435.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Governor Wall — Grimsby — Cote Manor House — Moldart — Articles of the Church of England, 438.

REPLIES:—Junius, 439 — The monumental Stones at Helpston, Northamptonshire, 440 — "Amicus Plato," &c., 441 — Ebrietatis Encomium, 442 — Dilamgarbendi — Belfast Bible — Lord Palmerston — Seals of the Emperors of Germany — Marshal Soult's Pictures: highest Price ever given for a Picture — Sir John Davies — Head of Charles I. — Heraldic Puzzle — Dermot, King of Leinster — Ralphston Family — Daughter pronounced Dafter — Rev. D. Blair — The Constellations — Elizabeth Heyrick, &c., 442.

Notes on Books, &c.

NATIONAL PORTRAIT EXHIBITION, 1866.

From the favour with which Lord Derby's proposal for a National Portrait Exhibition has been received, and the numerous offers of pictures which are being made, it is clear that the great difficulty with which the Committee of Advice will have to contend will be, not a want of interesting pictures, but the means of availing themselves of the numerous portraits placed at their disposal.

There can be little doubt but at least a Second Exhibition must take place in 1867.

It will, therefore, be necessary that a right decision should soon be come to, as to whether the Exhibition shall, as Lord Derby hinted might possibly be necessary, "be divided into two or three sections representing distinct historic periods exhibited in successive years," or whether there shall be two or three Exhibitions each embracing the whole period of English History.

The simplest and most obvious course would be, to resolve upon a series of Exhibitions applicable to "distinct historic periods," and include in the First Exhibition Portraits illustrative of our history up to the Restoration, or some other definite period.

But though this will have many advantages in illustrating the history of Art, and some advantages in bringing together all the known portraits of certain parties, the very numbers of such portraits will in itself form a difficulty, namely, that of determining out of the many remarkable portraits known to exist—say of Queen Elizabeth or of her great rival, Mary—what portraits shall be exhibited. We will, in addition to calling attention to the numerous portraits of Mary exhibited at Peterborough, at Edinburgh, and at the rooms of the Archaeological Institute, mention one or two facts to show the importance of this question. In Sir Frederic Madden's interesting Priory Purse Expenses of the Princess Mary, afterwards Queen Mary, published by him in 1861, he enumerates no less than thirteen portraits of her as Princess, and twenty-four as Queen—in all, thirty-seven portraits, and doubtless since that period others have been recorded. Again: Mr. J. Gough Nichols, in his Literary Remains of King Edward the Sixth, printed for the Roxburghe Club in 1859, describes about fifty known portraits of that youthful sovereign. Now, though it may be very desirable to exhibit some dozen portraits of Mary or Elizabeth, it is surely a question whether it might not be better to display some portion of them in 1866, and the others in the following Exhibition.

But there is another, and, as it appears to us, a still more important reason for considering whether each exhibition should not embrace the entire period of English History. We do not stop now to insist upon the educational advantage of making each exhibition a Pictorial Commentary upon the History of our country and having two such commentaries instead of one. But experience has shown that during the progress of the Exhibition, the interest which it excites, and the attention which will be drawn to it, will be the means of bringing forward many curious and hitherto unknown portraits. Lord Derby has well observed that, exclusive of the large collections in many great houses, there are very many (portraits of historical interest) scattered about by ones, twos, and threes in private families, "the owners of which, though they could not be persuaded to part with them, would willingly spare them for a few months for a public object." Now these are the portraits which are among the most desirable and the most difficult to bring to light. The pictures in the great collections are more or less known. The majority of the pictures in more private hands, have never been seen; and we would again impress upon our readers, how desirable it is that they should bring under the notice of the Committee (through the medium of "N. & Q." if they think fit), any such portraits with which they may be acquainted. The late Exhibition of Miniatures called forth in its progress many valuable contributions. In the same way the Exhibition of 1866 will bring the subject home to many possessors of the "ones, twos, and threes," whom no other irritation to exhibit will ever reach. Now if the subsequent Exhibitions, like the First, should embrace the whole cycle of English History, all such pictures will be properly available for them. Whereas, if the several Exhibitions embrace only "distinct historic periods," such pictures as may crop up during each Exhibition, which refer to the earlier periods, will be lost, unless the Committee should be prepared to announce their readiness to form a Supplemental Exhibition, should the number of interesting portraits offered them for that purpose justify such a step.

Notes.

MR. EDEN'S EDITION OF BISHOP TAYLOR'S WORKS.*

The bibliography of some of Bishop Taylor's works seems to be but imperfectly known. I observe that MR. EDEN, backed with the Bodleian Library and all the resources of Oxford, in several instances is unable not only to consult but even to specify the original editions. Such of your readers as can help to supply this deficiency would do good service by sending their contributions to "N. & Q." A complete bibliographical collection of an author's works, besides serving other useful purposes, often supplies valuable historical and biographical information. Thus, when we have before us the original quarto edition of Taylor's "Sermon on the Gunpowder Plot," 1638, we have the date of his first publication, he being then twenty-five years of age, and the earliest date at present known at which he was chaplain to Archbishop Laud.

Again, had we the date of the first edition of his two Sermons on The Whole Duty of the Clergy "preached in so many several Visitations," we might probably be able to determine a question of some interest; viz. whether we possess the Sermon which he preached at his first Visitation; if so, we should also probably get the exact date of this Visitation, which is as yet unknown. I may here observe that, in a letter to Evelyn, dated November 16, 1661,† Taylor mentions that his publisher, Royston, had lately printed "two Sermons and a little collection of Rules for my Clergy." Now these Rules were given to the clergy of Down and Connor at his first Visitation in the April previous. Query, are these "two Sermons," which seem to have been printed along with the Rules, the aforesaid Visitation Sermons, or are they his Parliament and University Sermons? Lowndes mentions an edition of the Rules, 1661, 8vo, but says nothing about the two Sermons, which I suppose to have been printed in the same volume. As I before observed, for want of the first edition of the University Sermon, we do not know its exact date.

Adair's account of Bishop Taylor's first Visitation must be received with great distrust, as, like the generality of his brethren, he viewed everything through the distorting medium of odium theologicum in its darkest form. It is completely at variance with Taylor's disposition and character, as well as with the Rules and Advice which he gave his clergy on that occasion, and with his own account of his dealings with the Presbyterian ministers in his letters to the Duke of Ormond. Adair describes him as, so far from attempting conciliation, acting in the harshest and most repulsive manner; replying to the reasonable and temperate statements of the Scots ministers, that "if they should make profession contrary to law in the Visitation, they should smart for it;" and instead of commiserating their painful position, treating them with mockery: "he perceived they were in a hard taking; for if they did conform contrary to their conscience, they would be but knaves, and if not, they could not be endured contrary to law; he wished them therefore depone conscientiam erroneam." At his Visitation Sermon, Adair tells us "none of the Brethren except two went to hear him. Thereafter in his Visitation all were called and none appeared." Carte states that before the close of the following year, "the great majority of the ministers had yielded, if not to his arguments, to his persevering kindness and Christian example." On the other hand, Dr. Reid states that "the total number of ministers, associated together in presbyteries at this trying period throughout Ulster, was nearly Seventy: of these, Seven only conformed to Prelacy."

That Taylor uniformly manifested the angelic patience and sweetness of temper for which he was noted, and which characterised Francis de Sales, Leighton, and Fenelon under similar circumstances, I do not venture to say. We know that even St. Austin himself became somewhat soured by his contests with the Donatists, and it is not wonderful if Taylor contracted some sternness or asperity in the course of his dealings with desperate fanatics who would have no scruples about killing a Canaanite, but think it was doing God service. Nevertheless, had the Presbyterians met him in a right spirit instead of with threats of assassination,—had they temperately represented that they could not conscientiously conform to the Established Church,—I am convinced that Taylor would rather have resigned his bishopric than see them disturbed in the peaceable exercise of their religion, or in the enjoyment of their just rights.

There are passages in his Sermons of 1661 in which Taylor seems to take refuge in Erastianism in its most extravagant and absurd form, and to lay down principles not only false in themselves but inconsistent with Toleration. Thus, in his Sermon before Parliament, pp. 340-353, he apparently sets up the statute book as the rule of faith, and the king or civil ruler as supreme pontiff; he regards State

* Continued from p. 386.

† It is certain that it was in April, 1661. Adair goes on to state that the summons to the Visitation was issued five days after the burial of "the Lady Clotworthy, th of the new Lord Massarene."—Reid, ii. 311.

* A True Narrative of the Rise and Progress of the Presbyterian Government in the North of Ireland, &c. &c. from the Record of the Presbytery, ter of Cairncastle.—Reid, ii. vol. i. p. 205.

and Church as necessarily one, and declares that the State Religion is to be obeyed under penalties! The monstrous absurdity of this he had already clearly demonstrated in his Liberty of Prophecy:—

"For if it be necessary for all men to subscribe to the present established Religion, by the same reason at another time [or place] a man may be bound to subscribe to the contradictory, and so to all Religions in the world."—Vol. v. p. 535.

Again, in this same Sermon, at p. 356, he exhorts the powers that be to "suffer no evil tongue to speak against this truth;" viz. episcopacy! If this were Taylor's "conclusion of the whole matter," there would be no help for it but to throw up the brief, and let Coleridge and Orme take possession of his "character as a man." However, at the expense of much violence to consistency of argument and logical reasoning, he comes to another conclusion himself, and while he urges that Uniformity should be strictly enforced within the Established Church and upon its voluntary members, he advocates the fullest Toleration to all peaceable Dissenters:—

"We find that all Christian Churches kept this rule; they kept themselves and others close to the Rule of Faith, and peaceably suffered one another to differ in ceremonies, but suffered no difference amongst their own; they gave liberty to other churches, and gave laws and no liberty to their own subjects: and at this day the churches of Geneva, France, Switzerland, Germany, Low-Countries, tie all the people to their own laws, but tie up no man's conscience; if he be not persuaded as they are, [they] let him charitably dissent, and leave that government, and adhere to his own communion. If you be not of their mind, they will be served by them that are; they will not trouble your conscience, and you shall not disturb their government. But when men think they cannot enjoy their conscience unless you give them good livings, and if you prefer them not you afflict their consciences, they do but too evidently declare that it is not their consciences but their profits they would have secured."—Epist. Ded. pp. 338-9.

Again:—

"But whatever ye do, let not the pretence of a different religion make you think it lawful to oppress any man in his just rights: for Opinions are not, but Laws only, and 'doing as we would be done to,' the measures of Justice: and though justice does alike to all men, Jew and Christian, Lutheran and Calvinist; yet to do right to them that are of another opinion is the way to win them; but if you for conscience' sake do them wrong, they will hate you and your religion."—P. 357.

These two passages, I believe, give the true scope of this Sermon, and plainly show what Bishop Taylor's principles were. At the same time I think he fairly lays himself open to the charge of confusion, if not contradiction, in the expression of his views.

The two Visitation Sermons are on the same text, and are so connected together that they are evidently intended to be preached, with little interval, at the same Visitation. In some respects they are very different from what we should expect under the circumstances: marvellous, but cumbrous and far-fetched learning mingling with most practical advice; catacombs of mediæval writers long since consigned to dust, overgrown with honeysuckles and wild roses. And as for tolerance of spirit, his model of a good pastor is the Good Shepherd of the East:—

"In the East the shepherds used to go before their sheep, to which our blessed Saviour alludes, My sheep hear My voice and follow Me; but our shepherds are forced to drive them, and affright them with dogs and noises; it were better if themselves did go before."—Pp. 509-10.

In the second of these sermons the bishop makes some allusions to the state of affairs in his diocese. After enjoining his clergy not to trouble their people with controversies, he continues:—

"Is it not a shame that the people should be filled with Sermons against Ceremonies, and declamations against a surplice, and tedious harangues against the poor airy sign of the Cross in Baptism? . . . Can the definition of a Christian be, 'a man that rails against bishops and the Common-Prayer-Book?' And yet this is the great labour of our neighbours [the Scots] that are crept in among us; this they call 'the work of the Lord'; and this is the great matter of the desired 'Reformation'; in these things they spend their long breath, and about these things they spend earnest prayers, and by these they judge their brother, and for these they revile their superior, and in this doughty Cause they think it fit to fight and die. If S. Paul or S. Antony, S. Basil or S. Ambrose, if any of the primitive Confessors or glorious Martyrs, should awake from within their curtains of darkness, and find men thus striving against government for the interest of disobedience, and labouring for nothings, and preaching all day for shadows and moonshine; and that not a word shall come from them to teach the people Humility, not a word of Obedience or Self-denial; they are never taught to suspect their own judgment, but always to prefer the private minister before the public, the presbyter before a bishop, fancy before law, the subject before his prince, a prayer in which men consider not at all, before that which is weighed wisely and considered; and in short, a private spirit before the public, and Mas John before the Patriarch of Jerusalem: if, I say, S. Paul or S. Antony should see such a light [sight], they would not know the meaning of it, nor of what religion the Country were, nor from whence they had derived their new nothing of an institution. The Kingdom of God consists in wisdom and righteousness, in peace and holiness, in chastity and purity, in abstinence from evil, and [in] doing good to others; in these things place your labour, preach these things, and nothing else but such as these; things which promote the public Peace and public Good; things that can give no offence to the wise and to the virtuous, for these things are profitable to men and pleasing to God." Vol. viii. pp. 532-3.

The mention of the Patriarch of Jerusalem has perhaps led Mr. Eden astray with regard to "Mas John,"—who is not that mysterious personage Prester John, but Jack Presbyter—and caused him to append the note: "Otto Frising, Chron. vii. 31.—Moreri, 'Prête-Jean.'" Mas is a popular contraction for Master, and "Mas John," or "Mass John" was a representative name for a Presbyterian preacher, as "Sir John" was a representative title for the English clergy. This arose from the title Mas having been formerly given to the Scotch ministers, as the Knightly title was given to ecclesiastics in England; e.g. Mas Robert Blair, Mas John Greg. In Galt's delightful Annals of the Parish, the Rev. Micah Balwhidder, minister of Dalmailing, having been "put in by the patron" instead of by the people, gives a graphic description of the reception he met with from his "outstrapolous" flock in consequence of this: amongst other things, he tells us that the morning after his military induction, when he began to make his round of visitations, "I found the doors in some places barred against me: in others, the bairns, when they saw me coming, ran crying to their mothers: 'Here's the feckless Mess-John!'"

A little before the passage above quoted from the Visitation Sermon, Taylor says: "What have your people to do [with the question] whether Christ's body be in the Sacrament by consubstantiation or transubstantiation? . . . and who but a madman would trouble their heads with the intangled links of the fanatic chain of Predestination?" In this passage the words within brackets are omitted, and "fanatic chain" is to me a new reading. I have been accustomed to see "fantastic chain." Is "fanatic" the true reading, or a printer's error, such as that of "light" for sight, which I have already indicated?

If these two Sermons were delivered at Bishop Taylor's first Visitation, we have an additional reason why the Rules and Advices to the Clergy given at this Visitation should be placed after them.

As a note upon Bishop Rust's reference in his Funeral Sermon to Taylor's unfinished Discourse upon the Beatitudes, which unfortunately has not come down to us, I may give an extract from the preface to Norris of Bemerton's treatise on the same subject:—

"What has been here the performance of my pen was (as I learn from Dr. Rust) intended and in part performed by the excellent Bishop Taylor, who, while he was meditating upon the Beatitudes, was received up into the enjoyment of them. And I have lately spoken with a gentleman who told me that he himself saw a MS. of it in the Bishop's own hand."

EIRIONNACH.

Shakspeariana.

"THE TEMPEST," Act III. Sc. 1.—

"Most busy lest, when I doe it."

This reading of the First Folio has received almost as many conjectural emendations as there have been editors of Shakespeare; yet, though the editors pronounce this reading as corrupt, they retain substantially the reading of the folios. The reading is certainly most unsatisfactory: for myself, I have always thought that of Spedding had the greatest claims to consideration, though not entirely acceptable.

Spedding—"Most busiest when idlest." To this the Cambridge editors (see the Works of William Shakespeare, edited by William George Clark, M.A., and John Glover, M.A., vol. i. Cambridge and London: Macmillan & Co. 1863), in a note suggest, as I think, an improvement.

Clark and Glover—"Most busy left when idlest;" and the object of this present note is to give you what appears to me as a still better reading, viz.—

"Most busy lost when idlest."

Ferdinand, in his soliloquy over the charms of his mistress, is suddenly reminded that he forgets his labours: and so absorbing are these sweet thoughts of Miranda, that he is lost in them, and consequently idlest at such times with his work.

It is quite possible that this emendation has been made before. Relying on the Cambridge Shakespeare for all examples before 1863, and on subsequent editions of Shakespeare, in The Tempest, the reading suggested here I have not met with before.

G. W. WHISTLER.

Frankfort-on-the-Main.

LONGAVILLE: "LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST" AND "THE BLOODY BROTHER."—Henry Wellesey, D.D., in his lately-published Stray Notes on the Text of Shakespeare, points out "a miserable skirmish of puns" in Love's Labour's Lost (Globe ed. vol. ii. 242-250) on the name Longaville—"long calf veal," and "langue half veal."

In Beaumont and Fletcher's Bloody Brother there is a similar pun—

"I'll bring you in the Lady Loin-of-veal,

With the long love she bore the Prince of Orange."

Bloody Brother, Sc. II. Act 2.

JOHN ADDIS.

"ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL," Act I. Sc. 2—

"King. Who were below him,

He used as creatures of another place;

And bowed his eminent top to their low ranks,

Making them proud of his humility,

In their poor praise he humbled."

This passage has caused the editors and commentators much trouble, and it is not yet explained. Warburton, who has a long note upon it, proposed to substitute the word "and" for "of;" "Making them proud and his humility in their poor praise he humbled"—that is, he says, "by condescending to stoop to his inferiors, he exalted them and made them proud, and in the gracious receiving their poor praise, he humbled even his humility," adding, "the sentiment is fine."

Mr. Staunton, taking the same view of its meaning, suggests changing "he humbled" into "he humbled," "Making them proud of his humility in their poor praise be humbled." But they both agree in this, that it was his humility that he humbled.

Now, the meaning of the passage is, in my opinion, the very reverse of this, and shows, if I am right, that Shakspeare was well aware that the humility of the great is but too often only "the pride that affects it" —

"Making them proud of his humility,
In their poor praise he humbled;"

i. e. making them, whom he humbled by the poor praise he bestowed upon them, proud of his humility.

"Their poor praise" was not, as the commentators have supposed, the praise that they, the people, bestowed upon the count, but the praise that he, the count, bestowed upon them: it was the instrument by which he humbled them. They were the recipients, and not the donors of praise; and we all know that praise may be very humiliating.

J. NICHOLS, M.R.C.P.

13, Savile Row.

"JOHANNES HUNT, EREPTUS VIVI-COMBURIO."

The horrors of the Marian Persecution were remembered for many generations, and more particularly, as was natural, in the families of its victims. There still linger the memories of several who narrowly escaped, by the death of Queen Mary, the extremities of suffering which had visited many of their friends, and who were regarded during their subsequent lives, with honour and respect, as "brands plucked from the burning." One of these was John Hunt, father of George Hunt, who was afterwards for fifty years Rector of Collingbourne Ducis, in Wiltshire; and the merciful providence of his escape was commemorated in the next century in the epitaph of a great-granddaughter, which was placed "upon a blue marble tablet fixed on the chancel wall," at Leominster, in Herefordshire (which I am permitted to transcribe from Thomas Dineley's History in Marble, a valuable MS. in the possession of Sir Thomas Edward Winnington, Bart.): —

"In memoriam ELIZABETHÆ UXOR, opt. char. Henrici Scudder, Rectoris Ecclesiæ de Collingbourn Ducis in agro Sarum. e Brigida ux. filia Georgii Hunt ejusdem Ecclesiæ ad annos quinquaginta Rectoris, filii Johannis Hunt vivi-comburio, cui pro fide Evangelica adjudicatus erat, morte Mariæ Reg. erepti, Johannes Tombe, hujus Ecclesiæ Vicar. mœrens posuit.

"*Filia Praeconis Verbi, Praeconis et uxoris,
Proco acus et proavus, qui prope martyris erat:
Hæres ejusdem fidei et pietatis, Eliza
Hic posuit carnem, spiritus astra tenet.
Filia quæ primum, dein conjux optima, summis
Jam fruatur Christo conjuge, patre, Deo.*

ORIT { ANO. DOM. MDCXXXIII.
DECEMB. XV.
ÆTAT. XX. MENS. IV."

Above the tablet, a death's head; below it, an hour-glass between a pair of wings.

This monument was destroyed when the church was accidentally burned in the year 1690, but the inscription has been printed (derived from MS. Blount,) in the two Histories of Leominster: by Price, 1796, p. 106; and by Townsend, 1802, p. 234; but by both very incorrectly. The name of Scudder is by both authors converted into Studder. Price has "vive combusto" for the compound substantive vivi-comburio. Mr. Townsend has printed "et Briga," for e Brig[id]a: and "qui" for cui: and "ereptus" for erepti. In the second line of the verses, all the copies have "cui" where qui seems requisite.

The committal of one Hunt and Richard White to gaol at Salisbury is mentioned in the Autobiography of Thomas Hancock (p. 74), printed in Narratives of the Days of the Reformation; and Foxe has given, at considerable length, under the year 1558, "The story and condemnation of John Hunt and Richard White, ready to be burnt, but by the death of Q. Mary escaped the fire;" adding in a side note, that Richard White was Vicar of Marlborough at the time when Foxe wrote.

In further illustration of the parties, I may be allowed to transcribe the following passages from a paper by the late Rev. John Ward, Vicar of Great Bedwyn, in the Collectanea Topographica et Genealogica, vol. vii. p. 74: —

"George Hunt was instituted Rector of Collingbourne Ducis in 1581, on the presentation of Richard Kingsmill, Esq.; and again (or another person of the same name) in 1614, on the presentation of the King for that turn.

"Henry Scudder was instituted in 1633, also on the presentation of the King. Scudder was a Presbyterian, and a great admirer of William Whately, Vicar of Banbury, whose Life he wrote. Whately married a daughter of George Hunt, and died 1639."

The honour of being a descendant from Mr. George Hunt was commemorated so late as 1700, in the Register of Collingbourne Ducis, as follows: —

"1706. The Rev. Mr. Henry Russel, Rector of Penton in Hampshire, an able and faithful minister of God's word, was buried in the north-west corner of y^e chancell, Nov. y^e 14th, according to his dying request; being placed not far from his grandfather Mr. Scudder, and his great-grandfather Mr. Hunt."

In the same volume, at p. 77, a later entry to the like effect as the last will be found; and at p. 75, a similar memorial of the Rev. Henry Jacob, Vicar of Collingbourne Kingston, another grandson of Henry Scudder. See also the extracts from the Register of Collingbourne Kingston, at p. 176.

J. G. N.

PORTRAITS OF EDWARD JENNER, M.D. — Many of the friends of this good and great man have frequently complained that the ordinary portraits do not give a correct representation of the features of the original. As it was my happiness for many years to be honoured with the friendship of Dr. Jenner, and to be frequently in his company, I may perhaps be permitted to state, that the most accurate likeness of him was the bust in the dining-room at Kingscote Park, near Wotton-under-Edge, Gloucestershire, now the residence of Col. Robert Nigel Fitz-Harding Kingscote. This bust I have always considered to be a most admirable portraiture of this very amiable man, and eminent philanthropist.

Richmond, Surrey.

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE. — This College has educated seven Lord Treasurers and First Lords of the Treasury. They are William Cecil, Lord Burghley; Robert Cecil, Earl of Salisbury; Thomas Wriothesley, Earl of Southampton; Thomas Watson Wentworth, Marquis of Rockingham; Frederick Robinson, Earl of Ripon; George Hamilton Gordon, Earl of Aberdeen; and Henry John Temple, Viscount Palmerston.

A. H. K. C. L.

VARIOUS PRONUNCIATIONS OF "OUGH." — The following etymological and phonetic epigram, in my collection, upon the five modes of pronouncing the syllable spelt ough, in different words, is at the service of "N. & Q."

It is remarkable that the word trough is generally pronounced as tro among the middle classes, especially in the country, where the implement so designated is most in use.

In the first lesson for Easter Sunday Morning, Exod. xii., both dough and trough occur in one verse (34th), and the marginal note thereto in the Bible indicates that the original of "kneading-troughs" might equally be rendered "dough-troughs."

"By dint of plough,
In sweat of brow,
His fallows through,
With much ado,
Hodge earns enough
Of this world's stuff,
To make good dough
For high and low,
While from his trough
Feed swine well off."

T. A. H.

CURIOUS NAMES. — I observed lately in some of the newspapers an account of the christening of the infant daughter of the Bishop of Honolulu. The name given to the child by the King of Hawaii, its sponsor, was "Kaholomoana," signifying the Queen's departure, as it was born on the day her Majesty sailed for England. I don't think the name of Hinda, said to be common in families of Jewish extraction, occurs in Miss Yonge's book.

E. H. A.

SIR EDMONDBURY GODFREY: PRIMROSE HILL. The following note from England's Gazetteer, London, 1778, may be interesting to readers of the history of the period of the "Popish Plot": —

Primrose Hill, Midd., between Kilburn and Hampstead, called also Green-Berry-Hill, from the names of the three assassins of Sir Edm. Godfrey, whom they brought hither after they had murdered him at Somerset House, and left him with his sword stuck in his body, to make it be believed that he had stabbed himself."

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

HUMAN FOOT-PRINTS, ETC., ON ROCKS. — A mile south of Madras stands the Portuguese village of Saint Thomé, where tradition proclaims Saint Thomas first landed on the east side of India. A few miles further to the south and more inland, rise two eminences, one called Saint Thomas's Mount, on the summit of which is a church dedicated to that saint, the other, the Little Mount, believed to be the spot where Saint Thomas was martyred, in proof of which the mark of a cross left by him where he last stood is shown by the native Roman Catholics of the place. Lower down the coast lies the pagoda of Ramisseram, on the isle of Pamban, one of the holiest temples among the Hindoos, on account of its having been sanctified by Rama on his expedition against Ravan the King of Ceylon. Travelling northwards from this place to the Deccan, I was shown monumental foot-prints marking the route taken by Rama on his expedition to the south. At one village a monolithic pillar supports a globular stone upon which Rama is said to have left his foot-prints: in another place is a cavern in which he slept and left similar marks behind him. The mark of a human foot-print is found on the summit of Adam's Peak in Ceylon, to which the following legend belongs. The peacock was stationed at the entrance of Paradise (Père-désam, Hindoo for Fairy-land) to give warning to Adam of approaching danger, and the snake was directed to assist in repelling it. Iblis beguiled these animals and effected an entrance. At the expulsion from the garden, Adam descended on the peak, which bears his name in Serendib (Ceylon). Eve alighted at Jeddah on the Red Sea. The snake fell at Isfahan, the peacock in Hindoostan, and Iblis in Khorasan. Adam remained one hundred years in Ceylon, and then passed into India by way of the chain of ialets and reefs now called Adam's Bridge.

Are there any rock foot-marks with accompanying legends in Great Britain or Ireland?

H. C.

[The following account of a pilgrimage to Adam's Foot-print appeared in The Monthly Mirror, xl. 69, Jan. 1801:

"A considerable number of devotees, termed Fakeers, principally from Adgim, lately applied to our government in India for permission to visit the mark of Adam's foot, in Ceylon. Unable successfully to encounter a superstition almost as general as it would appear extraordinary, if the practice of countries supposed to be more enlightened did not, in a degree, reconcile us to it, the request has been granted, and the late accounts left this mob of pilgrims on the eve of their departure. There is a tradition that the first man was created on the top of a high mountain in Ceylon, hence called Adam's Pike; and there is the shape of a man's foot cut out of the rock, about six feet in length, which they pretend to be the print of his foot. Near this mountain there is a reef of rocks extending to the continent, called Adam's Bridge; for they say it was made by angels, to carry him over to the main land."—Ed.]

HIPPOPHAGY NOT NEW.—I have just met with the following lament over the luxury of old Spain. The censor is "the Right Reverend Father in God Antonio de Guenara, Bishop of Mondogucto, Preacher, Chronicler, and Councillor to Charles the Fifth, Emperour of Rome;" and the whole chapter "that Courtiers ought not to have superfluous fare," tells a good deal about manners and customs then current. The latter portion, where the Bishop speaks of the troubles of a man who gives a great feast beyond his means—the house in a mess, every one wearied, pieces of plate stolen by hired greengrocers, the guests "peradventure not satisfied, nor contented," but rather "laughing him to scorn" for his cost, murmuring at him behind his back—reminds me vividly of some parts of the Book of Snobs and The Little Dinner at Timminses:—

"I sawe also at another feast such kindes of meates eaten as are wonte to be seene, but not eaten, as a horse roasted, a cat in gely, little lysers [? misprint for lyfers = livers], with hote broth, frogges fried, and dyvers other sorts of meates which I saw them eat, but I never knew what they were till they were eaten. And for God's sake what is hee that shall reade our writings and see that is commonly eaten in feastes now a dayes, that it will not in a manner breake his heart, and water his plantes."—1619. T. North's Diall of Princes (1557) Corrected, p. 762.

The bishop's language bears just a suspicion that he was being "sold" by some one at table. Mayhap the horse was good ox-beef, and the "cat in gely" a hare?—the whole an after-dinner joke. Can you tell me if the phrase "water his plants" is idiomatic? I do not remember meeting it before.

J. D. CAMPBELL.

Queries.

ISMAEL FITZADAM.

About the year 1818, a writer under the above nom de plume published a small volume of verse, entitled, I think, The Bombardment of Algiers.*

* It is entitled, The Harp of the Desert; containing the Battle of Algiers, with other Pieces in Verse. By Ismael Fitzadam, formerly able Seaman on board the ——— Frigate. Lond. 1818, 12mo.]

After an interval of a few years followed a second, called Lays on Land. [12mo, 1821.] They both exhibited extraordinary vigour of thought and profundity of feeling; but amidst the multitude of poetical publications which characterised that period, they failed to secure a place in general favour. A third volume followed, the title of which I forget; but I well remember the following lines in it; which, having long since lost sight of the book, I venture to quote from memory, as they give an idea of the fervour of the author's style:—

"NAPOLEON MORIBUNDUS.

"Oh! bury me deep in the boundless sea,
Let my heart have a limitless grave;
For my spirit in life was as fierce and free,
As the course of the tempest wave.

"And as far from the reach of mortal controul
Were the depths of my fathomless mind;
And the ebbs and flows of my single soul
Were tides to the rest of mankind.

"Then my briny pall shall engirdle the world,
As in life did the voice of my fame;
And each mutinous billow that skyward curled,
Shall, to fancy, re-echo my name.

"That name shall be storied in records sublime
In the uttermost corners of earth;
And renowned till the wreck of expiring time
Be the glorified land of my birth.

"Yes—bury my heart in the bottomless sea;
It would burst from a narrower tomb,
Should less than an ocean my sepulchre be,
Or if wrapped in less horrible gloom."

Now I have heard that the author of these remarkable poems was a seaman on board the admiral's ship, when Lord Exmouth reduced Algiers in 1816; and that the dedication of his first volume to his lordship having failed to attract any favourable attention to himself, he gave way to the moody temperament which characterises his verses, and which probably suggested the pseudonym of "Ismael Fitzadam." I have also heard that he was a baker on board the flag-ship; that his name was Mackin, or something resembling it; and that he was born at Enniskillen, in Ireland. All this, however, I have on very imperfect authority; and it would possibly interest others as well as myself if some of the Irish contributors to "N. & Q." could throw light on the story of that remarkable man.

J. EMERSON TENNENT.

SIR JOHN ACTON ON HUMAN SACRIFICES.—Mr. Gladstone, in his farewell address to the University of Edinburgh, "On the place of Greece in the Providential order of the Universe," alludes to the controversy, whether Human Sacrifices were in use among the Romans, as detailed in Lord Stanhope's Miscellanies.

He referred also to the investigations of Sir John Acton on that curious subject.

What I wish to inquire is whether the results of the learned baronet's researches are to be found in any published work or periodical?

THOMAS E. WINNINGTON.

Stanford Court, Worcester.

"ALL THE WORLD AND HIS WIFE." — What is the origin of this saying? W. S. J.

BEDE ALE. — Amongst the ancient records of the borough of Newport, Isle of Wight, I find the following entry: —

"Atte the Lawday holden there in the eighth day of October, the second yere of the Reigne of King Edward the iiiijth, in the time of William Bokett and Henry Pryer, Bayliffs, Thomas Capford and William Spring, Constables there, it is enacted furthermore that none hereafter, whether Burgesse or any other dweller or inhabitant, within this Towne aforesaid, shall make or procure to be made, any Ale, commonly called 'Bede Ale,' within the liby, nor within this Towne or without, upon payne of loosing xx^s, to be payde to the Keeper of the Common Box, &c., &c."

Can any of your numerous readers inform me of the meaning of the words "Bede Ale," or why it was forbidden to be brewed by the brewers of Newport? JOHN DYER.

BELLFOUNDERS. — Can any correspondent of "N. & Q." give me reliable information respecting any of the following? —

Augustine Bowler, cir. 1620.

John Briant and J. Cabourn, Hertford, cir. 1802.

The Harrisons of Barrow and Barton-on-Humber, cir. 1764—cir. 1832.

Daniel Hedderly of Dawtry, cir. 1735.

J. Ludlam, Rotherham, cir. 1761.

Henry Penn, cir. 1717.

Johannes Potter, mediæval.

Robert Quernby, cir. 1580.

Johannes (sic) de Staffordle, mediæval.

Walker and Hilton, cir. 1785.

Humphrey Wilkinson of Lincoln, cir. 1715.

J. T. F.

The College, Hurstpierpoint.

BIBLICAL DISTICHS. — Prefixed to each chapter of the edition of Erasmus' Version of the New Testament, printed by Herm. Gulferic at Frankfurt (8vo, 1548) is a couplet embodying a summary of the contents. I have also, in a MS. of the fourteenth century, a series of very lame distichs for every chapter in the Old and New Testaments. I wish to be informed if there exists in print any complete series of such couplets, in any language. JOHN ELIOT HODGKIN.

BIOCHIMO ON CHESS. — I picked up lately at a book-stall a small old work on chess, entitled —

"The Royall Game of Chess-Playe. Sometimes the Recreation of the late King, with many of the Nobility. Illustrated with almost an hundred Gambetta. Being the study of Biochimo, the famous Italian. London. 1666."

I have some little knowledge of chess and chess literature, but never before heard of this "Biochimo" as a writer on the game. Will CAPTAIN H. A. KENNEDY, who I see is a correspondent of "N. & Q.," do me the favour to enlighten me about him? R. H. M.

"COMPOSITA SOLVANTUR." — In Baconiana, edited by T. T., which I suppose is Thomas Tenison, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, the words "Composita solvantur," on Lord Bacon's monument at St. Albans, are translated "Let the companions be parted;" and in the margin is inserted "i. e. soul and body." Is this really the meaning? I had thought it was rather material or chemical than metaphysical or theological. D.

DEFOE'S HOUSE. — This house, in Church Street, Stoke Newington, was, I believe, pulled down this (last) summer. Is there any engraved or other view of it? If any view of it is preserved, I shall be very glad to know where I can see it, or refer to it. J. F. S.

"KLIPPING." — One occasionally, in old books on German coins, meets with a square piece bearing an impression on one side only. It is called "Klipping oder velt (Feldt?) Thaler." Are these to be considered obdional pieces like ours during the revolution? JOHN DAVIDSON.

LA BELLE SAUVAGE, ETC. — Can any of your readers afford me some information about an old house in La Belle Sauvage Yard, with an "elephant and castle" on its front, boldly carved in stone? also several smaller carvings of the same animal, with date and initials which I cannot now remember? Is there also any drawing of the old inn preserved? I also wish to know if the bust of the Earl of Essex over Devereux Court, with the words "This is Devereux Court, 1647," is that of Robert, Earl of Essex, the celebrated General of the Commonwealth, which I suppose it to be? ALEX. P. WALTON.

Wolverhampton.

MEDIA VITA. — I find among the provincial statutes of Henry of Wirnenburg, Archbishop of Cologne, in 1310, the following: —

"Prohibemus ne in aliqua ecclesiarum nobis subjectarum, imprecationes fiant, nec decantentur Media Vita contra aliquas personas, nisi de nostra licentia speciali."

I should be glad to know what is the particular imprecation alluded to by this term? W. H. J. WEALE.

[* For a notice of this house consult "N. & Q." 1st S. iv. 299.]

MERQUIZOTTED? — Demy cappe? —

"And I pray you, it is not a goodly sight in the Court to see a foolish courtier weare a demý cappe, scant to cover the crowne of his heade, to have his beard merquizotted." T. North's Diall of Princes, 1619, p. 625.

J. D. CAMPBELL.

THE REV. NICHOLAS OWEN. — The following works are attributed to this gentleman, who was of Jesus College, Oxford; B.A. 1773; M.A. 1776: —

1. A History of the Island of Anglesey, with Memoirs of Owen Glendower. Lond. 4to, 1775.

2. British Remains; or, a Collection of Antiquities relating to the Britons. Lond. 8vo, 1777.

3. Select Phrases of Horace, translated into familiar English and methodically arranged, for the use of schools and persons who have not acquired a competent knowledge of this celebrated classic. Lond. 8vo, 1785.

4. Caernarvonshire: A Sketch of its History, Antiquities, Mountains, and Productions. Intended as a Pocket Companion for those make the Tour of the County. Lond. 8vo, 1792 (anon.)

I would fain know more about him. S. Y. R.

POOR COURT. — Among the tombs of British officers and others on the banks beneath the citadel of St. Sebastian is a stone, upon which is the following inscription: —

"S. M. of Poor Court, who fell under his Colours in the Battle of Azete, 5 May, 1836. Beauty and Friendship truly mourn him."

What is "Poor Court's" history?

ALGERNON BRENT.

Audit Office, Somerset House, W.C.

QUOTATIONS. — Where do the following sentences occur? —

"Quæ prius hic illic variè dispersa jacebant, Hic sunt ad proprium cuncta reducta locum."

"In arcto et inglorius labor."

A. O. V. P.

"Great God! to Thee our song we raise,
To Thee devote our grateful praise;
O never may our footsteps rove
From Thee, the source of truth and love;
But may we still Thy praise proclaim,
And joy in our Redeemer's name," &c.

THOMAS T. DYER.

"Strange ship upon a tideless sea,
Without a helm or compass driven,
Filled with a wondrous company,
And wandering as the moon in heaven."

N. N.

RHYMING ALPHABET. — Can any reader of "N. & Q." supply the remainder of a rhyming alphabet, which has more pretensions to science than such usually possess? The only fragment of it which I know runs thus: —

"A. was an alkali,
Potash by name;
B. was a blowpipe
For fusing the same."

A. J. A.

SUSPENSION BRIDGE. — In the Adventures of John Cockburn, p. 55, is the following passage: —

"At length observed in the distance something which appeared like a great Net, hanging across the River, between two Mountains. Upon the best observation we could make at that distance, we could not determine whether it was design'd for a Bridge, or a Net to catch Fowls or Beasts in. It was made of Cane, and fastened to four trees, two of which grew on the Mountain on this Side, and the other two on the Mountain opposite to it, on the other side of the River. It hung downwards like a Hammock; the lowest part of it, which was the Middle, being above forty Feet from the Surface of the Water; but still we could not certainly judge whether this was intended, in reality, as a Bridge for Passengers, and were in Doubt, whether it might have strength sufficient to bear a Man's Weight. . . . The Bottom was made of such open Work, that we had much ado to manage our Feet with the Steadiness required. Every Step we took gave great Motion to it, which, with the Swiftmess of the Stream below, occasioned such a Swimming of the Head, that I believe we were a full Hour in getting over. We could not perceive how it was possible for it to be conveyed from one Mountain to the other, considering with what Force the Water ran in this place. We observed this Bridge to be very old and decayed, and guess'd it might have hung there some Hundreds of Years, before the Spaniards entered the Country. The Breadth of the River under the Hammock Bridge (as we called it) is a full Quarter of a Mile."

Is there any earlier mention of such a bridge?

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

TENURE NOT IN BLOUNT. — In England's Gazetteer, London, 1778, is the following notice: —

"Ketton, Rutland, on a small rivulet that runs into the Welland near Tinswell. Here is a certain rent collected yearly from the inhabitants by the Sheriff of 2s. a year pro occreis Regine, which is Latin for the Queen's boots, though we don't read of any who wore them."

Is this custom still continued, and is anything further known about it?

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

TILSON'S LINCOLNSHIRE AND WARWICKSHIRE PEDIGREES. — Among the genealogical and heraldic MSS. sold at the Strawberry Hill sale was the following lot. I quote the Gen. Mag. Dec. 1822, p. 607: —

"Pedigrees of Lincolnshire and Warwickshire Families, with some of other Counties, by John Tilson, Esq., 1671. . . . 3rd day, lot 196. 17l. 17s. 6d."

Can any one inform me who is the owner of this manuscript at the present time?

EDWARD PRACOCK, F.S.A.

Bottesford Manor, Brigg.

TREASURER OF EDINBURGH. — Who filled this office on the 18th October, 1678? F. M. S.
229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

WROXETER DINDERS. — In England's Gazetteer, London, 1778, is the following passage: —

"Roicester, or Wroxeter, Salop, on the Tern, near its confluence with the Severn and the hill called the Wrekin, S.E. of Shrewsbury, had a priory, and though a city formerly three miles round, the second, if not the first of the Cornavii (built, as it is thought, by the Roman Watling Street way when they fortified the bank of the Severn, which is more easily fordable here than any place below it) is now a small village of peasants, who often plough up coins called Dindars, that prove its antiquity, though they are for the most part illegible. Here are ruins of old works supposed to have been heretofore a castle, with a sudatory or sweating house for the Roman soldiers."

What coins can these be thus referred to?

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

Queries with Answers.

GOVERNOR WALL.—I have in my possession a drinking horn, on one side of which is carved the representation of an officer in uniform with a drawn sword in his hand, standing in a fortress surrounded by soldiers, superintending the flogging of a man by three black men, the victim being tied on a gun carriage. A label issues from the officer's mouth, inscribed with "Cut away, you black b——; damn you, cut his liver out." On the other side is the following inscription:—

"The cruel murder of Benj. Armstrong in the Island of Goree, Africa, by receiving 800 lashes by the order of Governor Wall, July 10th, 1782, by the Blacks. Josh. Wall, Esq., Govr, was found guilty, and executed Jan'y 28th, 1802."

Is anything known of this Governor Josh. Wall, especially with reference to his ordering Armstrong to be flogged "by the blacks," and his being subsequently executed? I shall be obliged by any information on this subject.

F. DANBY PALMER.

Great Yarmouth.

[Joseph Wall was the eldest son of Mr. Gerald Wall, a farmer at Abbeyleix, in Queen's County, Ireland. About the year 1760 he entered as cadet in the army, and distinguished himself by his bravery at the taking of the Havannah. He afterwards obtained a command in the service of the East India Company, and proceeded to Bombay. On his return he led a life of gallantry at the principal watering-places in pursuit of some wealthy heiress; but finding himself unsuccessful and in embarrassed circumstances, he accepted the unenvied post of Governor of Goree—a fortress garrisoned by regiments in disgrace for mutiny, and desperadoes picked from the convicts in gaols and military prisons. On his arrival in England he was tried at the Old Bailey on Jan. 10, 1802, and convicted of the wilful murder of Benjamin Armstrong, a serjeant in an African corps, and was executed on the 28th of the same month. It is conjectured there were between fifty and sixty thousand spectators on the occasion, who behaved with the greatest indecorum. His trial is in print as a separate pamphlet, 8vo, 1802. Consult also the Annual Register, xliv. 560–568, and the Genl. Mag. lxxii. (i.) 81. It is stated in the latter work that his brother, Counsellor Wall, was the author of several literary productions, and remarkable for being the first person who presumed to publish Parliamentary Reports with the real names of the speakers prefixed; and thus put an end to the orations of the Senate of Lilliput, and the pretentious Roman characters exhibited by Dr. Johnson.]

GRIMSBY.—I shall feel particularly obliged if you or any of your correspondents can give me some information respecting the origin of the town and name of Grimsby.

S. T. W.

[Camden treats as fabulous a tradition that the town of Grimsby was founded by a merchant named Gryme, who obtained great riches in consequence of having brought up an exposed child, called Haveloc, who proved to be of the Danish blood-royal; and, after having been scullion in the royal kitchen, obtained the king's daughter in marriage. To this romantic story, whatever may be its foundation, there is a reference in the device of the seals of the corporation. (Vide "N. & Q." 2nd S. xi. 46, 216.)

Gervase Holles (the well-known antiquary, temp. Charles I.), on the contrary, does not think the story deserves utterly to be exploded as fabulous. In his MS. collections for Lincolnshire (Harl. MS. 6829) he offers the following reasons:—

"First, the etymology of the word (Grimsby) will carry a probability, the termination By signifying in the Danish tongue habitation, a dwelling, so as I know no reason why Grimsby should not import the dwelling of Grime, and receive this denomination from him, as well as Ormesby from Orme, &c. Secondly, that there was such a Prince as Havelocke, take old Robert of Gloucester for proof, who speaks him the sonne of Gunter, or Gurthrum, Gutron, or Gurmond (for all those four names I fynde given him) King of Denmarke.

"Then Gunter that fader was of Haneloke,
Kynge of Denmarke, was than of mykle myght,
Areyd so than in Ingylond with his floke
Of Danes, fell, cruell, myghty, and wyght;
Wyth whom the kynge full strongly than dydd fyght
And hem venquyste," &c.

"Thirdly, that Havelocke did sometimes reside at Grimsby, may be gathered from a great blue boundary-stone, lying at the east end of Briggowgate, which retains the name Havelock's Stone to this day. Agayne, the great priviledges and immunities that this towne hath in Denmarke above any other in England (as freedom from toll, and the rest) may fairly induce a beleife, that some preceding favour, or good turne, called on this remuneration. But lastly (which proove I take to be instar omnium) the common Seale of the Towne, and that a most auncient one."

Holles concludes his notice with the following pithy remark: "He that is not satisfied with this, let him repayre to Dicke Jackson's famous manuscript concerning this matter, where he shall fynde a great deale more, to as little (if not less) purpose." Who "Dicke Jackson" was, or what is become of his "famous manuscript" are queries we must hand over to our literary antiquaries. However, on this moot point, we must refer our correspondent to the learned Introduction to Havelok the Dane, by Sir Frederic Madden, printed for the Roxburghe Club in 1828. Consult also The Topographer, i. 241, 8vo, 1789; the Rev. George Oliver's Monumental Antiquities of Grimsby, 8vo, 1825; and Macpherson's Annals of Commerce, i. 391.]

COTE MANOR HOUSE.—I lately enjoyed the privilege of going over a very old mansion, situated in the small village of Cote, in Oxfordshire; and on making inquiries of Mr. Gillott, the present occupier, as to whether he knew anything of the history of his house, he replied that he knew nothing, but has always been very desirous of gaining some information about it. The name of the mansion is "The Manor House," and from its size and architectural beauties, I feel convinced it has been once an important place in the county. The village of Cote is situated about four miles from the town of Witney. Will some of your readers kindly assist me in gaining some information about the house in question?

EDWARD C. DAVIES.

Cavendish Club.

[The interesting manor-house at Cote was probably built in the reign of Elizabeth or James I. It has two projecting wings with gabled roofs, but the wings are of unequal height. The centre of the building forms a long hall, into which the door opens without screen or vestibule. At the upper end of the hall is a wainscotted drawing-room, beyond which is an ancient staircase of heavy oak leading to the state bed-room, once ornamented with oak carving. When Mr. Skelton in 1823 wrote his Antiquities of Oxfordshire, there were some interesting shields of arms on painted glass in one of the principal apartments. "Amongst these," he says, "I noticed the arms of Blount, with other families of consequence, who had probably resided or been entertained here, in former times." These coats of arms, twenty-four in number, all of the sixteenth century, are now at Lambourne Place,* Berks. Many of them are surrounded by the garter, bearing the motto "Honi soit qui mal y pense." Three of them bear the names of Blunte, Lee, and Hanbury. This estate had been for centuries the property of the Horde family, and was bequeathed by a Miss Horde to the Rev. Henry Hippeley, father of Henry Hippeley, Esq., of Lambourne Place, the present owner. There is a lithograph view of this old manor-house in Dr. Giles's History of Bampton, ed. 1848, p. 84.]

MOIDART.—Who were the seven men of Moidart?

W. A. C.

[These seven "Men of Moidart" accompanied Prince Charles Edward Stuart in his hazardous attempt to recover the crown of England in August, 1745. His friends in Scotland had assured him that they could do nothing in his behalf unless he could bring with him 6000 men, and 10,000 stand of arms; and yet the Prince embarked with a few firelocks, a little powder and ball, and a treasury amounting to about 4000*l*. When he landed at Moidart, in Argyshire, there stepped ashore with him only seven individuals; but as these were devoted to his cause, he felt as secure as if he had been at the head of an army.

* This house was formerly called "Place House," from a tradition that King Alfred had a Palatium on or near the same site.

The names of the gentlemen composing this little intrepid band were the Marquis of Tullibardine, alias Duke of Athol; Sir Thomas Sheridan, tutor to the young hero; Sir John Macdonald, a French officer; Mr. Kelly, a non-juring clergyman; Francis Strickland, an English gentleman; Aeneas Macdonald, a banker in Paris; and his assistant, Mr. Buchanan. These persons were afterwards known as the "Seven Wise Men of Moidart," whose fate is described with deep interest and feeling in the Jacobite Memoirs, by Bishop Forbes, edited by Robert Chambers, 8vo, 1834. See also Home's History of the Rebellion, 4to, 1802."]

ARTICLES OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.—What were the 39th, 40th, and 42nd Articles of the Church of England in King Edward's reign that were rejected by the Convocation of 1562, and for what reason?

W. G. PRARSON.

[The four Articles omitted in the reign of Elizabeth, A.D. 1562 [1563] were the last four of the forty-two of 1553; namely, No. 39. "The Resurrection of the Dead is not yet brought to passe." No. 40. "The soules of them that departe this life doe neither die with the bodies, nor sleepe idlie." No. 41. "Heretickees called Millenaril." No. 42. "All men shall not be saved at the length." The first of these four had reference to some doctrine denying the future resurrection of the body, and confining the power of Christ to a spiritual reviving of the soul. The others were pointed against some opinions which have found supporters in recent times. To make up the Thirty-nine, Article V. "Of the Holy Ghost," was added.]

Replies.

JUNIUS.

(3rd S. viii. 182, 230, 260.)

With great deference I venture to suggest that inquirers after Junius would be more likely to gain their end, if they set out with the determination to give no credence to any statement of the writer which is not supported by extrinsic evidence. In this way we should be spared an immense amount of discussion which results in complication instead of elucidation. Concealment appears to have been a matter of vital importance to Junius, and for that purpose he resorted to various manoeuvres, and on one occasion did not scruple, in a very off-hand manner, to ask Woodfall to print a lie. The correspondence with Woodfall is generally regarded as expressing the writer's real sentiments, and the statements made therein as true; but one would imagine that he was the person whom Junius would be most anxious to mystify, for it was only through him that discovery could come. Can any one read the public letters without feeling that they were not the work of a mere city man; yet Junius assured Woodfall that it was impossible he should be first of the Cornavii (built, as it is thought, by the Roman Watling Street way when they fortified the bank of the Severn, which is more easily fordable here than any place below it) is now a small village of peasants, who often plough up coins called Dindera, that prove its antiquity, though they are for the most part illegible. Here are ruins of old works supposed to have been heretofore a castle, with a sudatory or sweating house for the Roman soldiers."

What coins can these be thus referred to?

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

Queries with Answers.

GOVERNOR WALL.—I have in my possession a drinking horn, on one side of which is carved the representation of an officer in uniform with a drawn sword in his hand, standing in a fortress surrounded by soldiers, superintending the flogging of a man by three black men, the victim being tied on a gun carriage. A label issues from the officer's mouth, inscribed with "Cut away, you black b——; damn you, cut his liver out." On the other side is the following inscription:—

"The cruel murder of Benj. Armstrong in the Island of Goree, Africa, by receiving 800 lashes by the order of Governor Wall, July 10th, 1782, by the Blacks. Josh. Wall, Esq., Gov., was found guilty, and executed Jan'y 28th, 1802."

Is anything known of this Governor Josh. Wall, especially with reference to his ordering Armstrong to be flogged "by the blacks," and his being subsequently executed? I shall be obliged by any information on this subject.

F. DANBY PALMER.

Great Yarmouth.

[Joseph Wall was the eldest son of Mr. Gerald Wall, a farmer at Abbeyleix, in Queen's County, Ireland. About the year 1760 he entered as cadet in the army, and distinguished himself by his bravery at the taking of the Havannah. He afterwards obtained a command in the service of the East India Company, and proceeded to Bombay. On his return he led a life of gallantry at the principal watering-places in pursuit of some wealthy heiress; but finding himself unsuccessful and in embarrassed circumstances, he accepted the unenvied post of Governor of Goree—a fortress garrisoned by regiments in disgrace for mutiny, and desperadoes picked from the convicts in gaols and military prisons. On his arrival in England he was tried at the Old Bailey on Jan. 10, 1802, and convicted of the wilful murder of Benjamin Armstrong, a serjeant in an African corps, and was executed on the 28th of the same month. It is conjectured there were between fifty and sixty thousand spectators on the occasion, who beheld with the greatest indecorum. His trial is in print as a separate pamphlet, 8vo, 1802. Consult also the Annual Register, xlv. 560–568, and the Gent. Mag. lxxii. (i.) 81. It is stated in the latter work that his brother, Counsellor Wall, was the author of several literary productions, and remarkable for being the first person who presumed to publish Parliamentary Reports with the real names of the speakers prefixed; and thus put an end to the orations of the Senate of Lilliput, and the pretentious Roman characters exhibited by Dr. Johnson.]

GRIMSBY.—I shall feel particularly obliged if you or any of your correspondents can give me some information respecting the origin of the town and name of Grimsby. S. T. W.

[Camden treats as fabulous a tradition that the town of Grimsby was founded by a merchant named Gryme, who obtained great riches in consequence of having brought up an exposed child, called Haveloc, who proved to be of the Danish blood-royal; and, after having been scullion in the royal kitchen, obtained the king's daughter in marriage. To this romantic story, whatever may be its foundation, there is a reference in the device of the seals of the corporation. (Vide "N. & Q." 2^d S. xi. 46, 216.)

Gervase Holles (the well-known antiquary, temp. Charles I.), on the contrary, does not think the story deserves utterly to be exploded as fabulous. In his MS. collections for Lincolnshire (Harl. MS. 6829) he offers the following reasons:—

"First, the etymology of the word (Grimsby) will carry a probability, the termination By signifying in the Danish tongue habituatio, a dwelling, so as I know not reason why Grimsby should not import the dwelling of Grime, and receive this denomination from him, as well as Ormesby from Orme, &c. Secondly, that there was such a Prince as Havelocke, take old Robert of Gloucester for proof, who speakes him the sonne of Gunter, or Gurthrum, Gutron, or Gurmond (for all those foure names I fynde given him) King of Denmarke.

'Then Gunter that fader was of Haveloke,
Kynge of Denmarke, was than of mykle myght,
Areyd so than in Ingylond with hys floke
Of Danes, fell, cruell, myghty, and wyght;
Wyth whom the kyng full strongly than dydd fyght
And hem venquyste,' &c.

"Thirdly, that Havelocke did sometymes reside at Grimsby, may be gathered from a great blen boundary-stone, lying at the east end of Briggowgate, which retains the name Havelock's Stone to this day. Agayne, the great priviledges and immunities that this towne hath in Denmarke above any other in England (as freedom from toll, and the rest) may fairly induce a beleife, that some preceding favour, or good turne, called on this remuneration. But lastly (which proove I take to be instar omnium) the common Seale of the Towne, and that a most auncient one."

Holles concludes his notice with the following pithy remark: "He that is not satisfied with this, let him repayre to Dicke Jackson's famous manuscript concerning this matter, where he shall fynde a great deale more, to as little (if not less) purpose." Who "Dicke Jackson" was, or what is become of his "famous manuscript" are queries we must hand over to our literary antiquaries. However, on this moot point, we must refer our correspondent to the learned Introduction to Havelok the Dane, by Sir Frederic Madden, printed for the Roxburghe Club in 1828. Consult also The Topographer, i. 241, 8vo, 1789; the Rev. George Oliver's Monumental Antiquities of Grimsby, 8vo, 1825; and Macpherson's Annals of Commerce, i. 391.]

known in any coffee-house west of Temple Bar. Must not this have been done for the purpose of putting Woodfall on a wrong scent? Yet one of your correspondents in a late number of "N. & Q." says, upon no better authority than some detached expressions in Junius's correspondence with Woodfall, "there were evidently three persons in the secret—the author, the copyist, and the gentleman who did the conveyancing part." Had it indeed been so it is not likely we should have had to wait till now to learn who Junius was. Junius refers to having been present at the burning of some Jesuitical books in Paris, and some inquirers reason in this way:—"So and so could not be Junius, because so and so was not in Paris on that occasion." It seems to me that if Junius had seen the books burnt he would have avoided all allusion to the circumstance, because it might have afforded a clue to the writer. The passport system would have afforded means of ascertaining who were the British subjects in Paris at that time. Recollecting as I write that Mr. Barker, in his work, written to disprove the claims of Sir Philip Francis to the authorship of the letters, has anticipated me in the advice I tendered at the commencement of this communication, I turn to the work and copy this passage:—

"We have seen that Junius cannot always be depended on in what he relates about himself, and therefore we must reason not so much from his own positive declarations about himself as from the internal evidence afforded by the declarations themselves, and their agreement with other facts and circumstances independent of them. Equal caution is necessary in drawing inferences from Junius's words."

It is easier to give advice than to follow it and Mr. Barker himself falls into the error against which he warned others, by arguing that Chatham could not be Junius because the former is spoken disparagingly of in the letters. Now assuming that Chatham was Junius, the thing he was most likely to do, in order to avert suspicion, was to assail himself, provided the attacks were not of a nature to do him permanent injury. It appears to me that in his attacks on Chatham Junius acted in the spirit of Baillie Nicol Jarvie's advice, by "not putting out his hand further than he could draw it easily back again," and he did draw it back, as is well known.

Looking to Junius's avowed dislike of Scotchmen, one of your correspondents (G.) thinks Chatham could not be the writer because the great minister once boasted of "having called the Scotch Highlanders from their native glens to the military service of their sovereign." One may be excused for not treating this argument very seriously—since persons might say that Junius, if Chatham, was acting consistently in putting the objects of his antipathy, as Falstaff did his "ragamuffins," in the way of being "peppered."

C. Ross.

THE MONUMENTAL STONES AT HELPSTON, NORTHAMPTONSHIRE.

(3rd S. viii. 235, 300.)

No inconsiderable portion of the churchyard at Helpston is now covered with early monumental stones, that were lately discovered to have been built into the tower and dwarf-spire of Helpston church. This tower and spire were erected upwards of five centuries ago, when the church was rebuilt upon the site of an earlier structure, some portions of which were incorporated with his own work by the decorated Gothic architect. That architect was not quite so careful as he might have been with the construction of his walls: and so his tower and spire, after having endured the wear and tear of 500 and odd years, in the summer of 1865 have been taken down, in prudent anticipation of a much less deliberate catastrophe. This work of demolition has brought to light another remarkable example of the manner in which mediæval church builders used, as their own building-materials, the monumental stones of what they would regard as early periods. The greater part of the spire and of the upper stages of the tower of the decorated church of Helpston was constructed with the monumental stones that had accumulated around, and perhaps within, the old Norman church.

Apparently without an exception, these stones are slightly coped; and the designs that they bear are all executed, somewhat roughly, but with great freedom and boldness, in low relief. There is no trace of an inscription, or of any of the professional devices—chalices, swords, and so forth—that are so characteristic in both the incised and sculptured memorials of later ages. But little variety is apparent in the decorative designs; the same design, however, has been skilfully modified and reproduced under varied conditions. The collection comprises stones of widely differing dimensions; many are large and massive, others are about four feet in length, while considerable numbers are small and even diminutive: the smallest that I observed measures in length 21 inches by 12, and 7½ inches in width at the head and feet respectively; two others of these small stones are severally 26 and 30 inches in length. Of the coped stones, a very few examples remain unbroken: but there are fragments of various sizes of at least one hundred others. These stones were evidently intended to be placed upon the ground over graves, or in some instances to cover stone coffins. In addition to the coped stones, two circular shafted head-stones were found, designed to stand erect probably at the head of one of the recumbent slabs: these two head-stones are ornamented in low relief on both sides, the designs (alike in both stones) being simpler on the one side than on the other: each of these head-stones measures in diameter 21 inches by 3 inches in thickness; the shaft is 12 inches in width by 4 inches in height; one of them has a tenon below the short shaft, for insertion in a mortice cut in a supporting stone; no such morticed stone, however, was found, as was the case a few years ago at Cotterstock.

The coped stones have the ridge of the coping rounded, and this roll-moulding is continued to the extremity of the slab at both ends. In some of the slabs a circular cross is carved at the head of the stone, the ridge-roll forming the shaft, and steps being at the feet: in others there is a circular cross towards each end of the stone: others substitute a species of heraldic cross recercelée for the circular form of the same symbol; and this recercelée cross, slightly modified in some of its details, appears at the head and the feet of the same stone, or in some of the stones it is again repeated in the centre. There are also numerous examples of that peculiar device or ornament, which somewhat resembles a pair of elongated Norman scroll-hinges: this device is modified in these examples with much skill, and the flowing lines of the figure itself are curved with singular gracefulness. In place of any cruciform device, the smaller stones generally substitute a species of lozenge, which is repeated at both the head and the feet of the slab, with a similar lozenge bisected and placed in the centre with the points inwards and in contact with the central ridge-roll: and again, in some others of the smallest stones, narrow straight bands issue from the ridge-roll at right angles to it. There is the upper half of one large stone, which bears a finely proportioned cross-fleurie surmounting a tall shaft. This last example may be assigned to the thirteenth century: all the others I believe to be considerably earlier, and many of them must have been executed early in the twelfth century. All these relics formed parts of the spire and tower, from the summit of the spire itself to within about twenty feet above the ground. Lower down, numerous arch-stones carved with Norman decorative mouldings were found imbedded in the walls, with various other architectural fragments, including some singular little shafts with caps and bases cut in a single stone, all of them of the same Norman period.

Still lower down, within three or four feet of the ground, a fragment was found, sixteen inches in width, of a flat stone having a plain strip running down its centre, and dividing two broad bands of Saxon interlaced work wrought in sunk relief. With this last-named relic of an age still earlier than the earliest of the coped monumental stones, there were released from their bondage in the basement of the tower walls two other fragments of the same Saxon era: one of them is the circular head, 16 inches in diameter, of an upright cross, rudely carved with singular cruciform devices on both sides, and the other, which is carved with interlaced work also on both sides, is the uppermost portion of the shaft of the same cross; the two fragments, are in excellent preservation. This stone, before it was broken, may possibly once have been an Anglo-Saxon monumental head-stone: or, more probably, these two fragments are all that now remains of the Anglo-Saxon village cross, the predecessor of the still beautiful though sadly mutilated decorated Gothic cross that stands in situ about one hundred yards to the south of the churchyard wall.

Very good care is taken of these relics by the incumbent of Helpston, the Rev. J. A. Legh Campbell, by whose kindness I have been enabled to examine the whole collection, and to take rubbings of the most characteristic examples. Photographs of some groups of the slabs may be obtained of Mr. R. Spring, Photographer, 13, Albert Place, Peterborough: and I hope that a series of wood-engravings, drawn from both my rubbings and these photographs, will shortly appear in the pages of the Art Journal. I may add, that in the north aisle of the church at Helpston, there now lies in the pavement a very fine marble slab despoiled of its brass, a noble cross, of the period of that rebuilding of the church, in which the early monumental stones were built into the walls of its tower and spire.

CHARLES BOUTWELL.

"AMICUS PLATO," ETC.

(1st S. iii. 384, 464, 484; 3rd S. viii. 160, 219, 275.)

Many have been the anecdotes told of a Master of Baliol College, who succeeded Dr. Parsons; and to whose able management, in conjunction with that of his immediate predecessor, Baliol owes its elevation from insignificance to a place among the Colleges of Oxford, which is second to none.

The following may as well, I venture to think, be embalmed in "N. & Q.," now that so many years have elapsed, and the principal dramatis personæ have long been dead and gone:—

An undergraduate, of the name of Jones, was breakfasting with the Master and his wife. The Master asked his guest what college lecture he was attending. The young man mentioned that he was in an Ethics lecture. "Indeed, Mr. Jones," rejoined the diminutive dignitary; "that reminds me of a little incident which occurred not long after my marriage to my second wife." Here Mrs. ——— looked much surprised, and interrupted her husband. In a tone of mingled astonishment, complaint, and rebuke, she exclaimed: "My dear!" "Yes!" said the little Master; "my first wife was my college. To resume, Mr. Jones; not long after my marriage to my second and present wife, my sister, who had previously always filled the post of honour at my table, entered upon a short sojourn with us. I felt myself, Mr. Jones, so to say, on the horns of a dilemma. Was I, in conformity with modern usage, to assign the precedence to my spouse? Or, on the other hand, was I to regard the claims of consanguinity as Antigone does in the beautiful and pathetic drama of Sophocles? It was, to adopt the language of Tully, 'questio perdifficilis.' On this perplexing question, Mr. Jones, I expended in vain much anxious thought. At length, to my inexpressible relief, I bethought me of the words of the Stagirite. You cannot be unacquainted with the words I allude to, Mr. Jones: for they are in the sixth chapter of the First Book of the Nicomachean Ethics. But it may be necessary to inform you that Mrs. ———'s Christian name is 'Truth.' I repeated the words of the Greek philosopher:—

Ἀμφὶν γὰρ ὄντων φίλον, ὅσιον προτιμᾶν τὴν ἀλήθειαν.

I then rendered the passage into English for the benefit of the two ladies: 'Both are dear to me; but I ought to prefer in honour truth.' Finally, Mr. Jones, I requested Mrs. ——— to occupy a seat at the head of my table."

Here the little Master paused. It was, however, but for a moment or two. He concluded as follows:—

"And this, Mr. Jones, reminds me of an epigram which I composed during the inspiring period of a courtship by no means devoid of warmth, as well as the reflectiveness—I may say, the sublimity of thought—which can only accompany an age of maturity. You may, or may not, be acquainted with the Adagia of Erasmus. In that collection is comprised this saying:—

Φίλος Πλάτων, ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον ἡ ἀλήθεια.

This is, in the Latin—

'Amicus Plato, sed magis amica veritas.'

Well, Mr. Jones, my amatory epigram ran as follows:—

'Tis no Platonic friendship fires this youth;
Plato is dear, but dearer still is Truth."

Ἰενκυροσεβίης.

EBRIETATIS ENCOMIUM.

(3rd S. VIII. 265, 316.)

This is not an original work, as supposed by your correspondent, but a translation from the French. The original is entitled L'Eloge de l'Yvesse (à la Haye, chez Pierre Gasse, 12mo, MDCCLXIV.) On the fly-leaf of my copy is written in an old hand, "Cet ouvrage est de Henri Albert de Sallengre, de qui on a des Mémoires de Littérature très estimés,"—an attribution of authorship which is quite correct. The last edition, very greatly augmented, was edited by M. Miger, and appeared at Paris, an VI. (1798) in 12mo. The additions and changes are so considerable as to render this a new book, to which the original work serves as the ground-plan. However complete it then may have been, the half-century which has passed since its appearance might, I am afraid, enable a new editor to add many an illustrious name to the list of "Philosophes, Poètes, et Sçavans qui se sont enyvrez." A reprint—I know not whether of the original work, or of the edition of 1798—was announced by A. Delahaye of Paris in 1858, and is probably since published, as one of the pieces in a volume to be entitled, "Eloges Plaisans et Facetieux de Diverses Choses peu louables, la plupart traduits par Mercier de Compiègne, avec des Notes et des Dissertations," &c. This was to form one of the admirably edited and printed series, known as the Bibliothèque Gaudoise, so ably conducted by the Bibliophile Jacob. The first edition of the English translation was published by Curll, 1723, 12mo; a second, revue me, appeared in 1743; and I have seen a reprint in the present century. Sallengre, who died at the early age of thirty, was brother-in-law of Charles, first Lord Whitworth, Baron of Galway, who, among many diplomatic functions, fulfilled that of ambassador extraordinary to the Congress of Cambrai, in 1724. He was also the compiler of a Novus Thesaurus Antiquitatum Romanarum, 3 vols. folio, 1716; a work which forms an important supplement to the more extensive collection of Grævius, as it contains many fugitive pieces of importance and rarity, which had escaped the researches of that learned Latinist. Sallengre, moreover, edited the posthumous autobiography of Huet, Bishop of Avranches. This is entitled Pet. Dan. Huetii, Episcopi Abricensis, Commentarius de Rebus ad eum pertinentibus, Amsterdam, 12mo, 1718. As it is written in the first person, we should expect to find "ad se," instead of "ad eum" in the title; the fact of the work being edited by a second person will account for the solecism, which Huet himself was the last scholar of his age to have committed. This interesting autobiography was translated by Dr. John Aikin, 2 vols. 8vo, 1810, "from the original Latin, with copious notes, biographical and critical," and thus forms a work of considerable literary interest and importance. The Eloge de l'Yvesse, or its English translation, is a genial and amusing book, full of quaint learning and felicitous illustration.

WILLIAM BATES.

Birmingham.

DILAMGERBENDI (3rd S. VIII. 308.)—Might not this grotesque word have originated from a misreading of some contracted MS.: e. g. dilam.geũ.bendi=ad insulam gentis Bendi?

Q. Q.

BELFAST BIBLE (3rd S. vii. 194.)—Some time since a correspondent wrote doubting if a Bible ever existed printed by James Blew. I have in my collection:—"1755. 12mo, Belfast. James Blew, for Grierson, Dublin." FRANCIS FRY. Cotham, Bristol.

LORD PALMERSTON (3rd S. viii. 389.)—In Mr. Grocott's Index of Familiar Quotations, Ancient and Modern, an interesting explanation is given of the circumstance alluded to by your correspondent J. Under the title "Myrtle," p. 259, the following quotation is given:—

"The Myrtle (ensign of supreme command, Consigned to Venus by Melissa's hand);
In myrtle shades oft sings the happy swain,
In myrtle shades despairing ghosts complain;
The myrtle crowns the happy lovers' heads,
The unhappy lovers' graves the myrtle spreads.
Soon must this sprig, as you shall fix its doom,
Adorn Philander's head, or grace his tomb."

Dr. Johnson. — Written at the request of a gentleman to whom a lady had given a sprig of myrtle.

Mr. Grocott adds, "Punch, in his principal illustration, wherein Lord Palmerston stands pre-eminent, usually places a sprig of myrtle in his mouth as the ensign, it is presumed, of supreme command." MORRIS C. JONES. Liverpool.

SEALS OF THE EMPERORS OF GERMANY (3rd S. viii. 291, 381.)—My best thanks are due to PUGES PRESTILES for his obliging suggestion. He will be pleased to learn that Dr. Kendrick had already, with his usual courtesy and generosity, supplied me with the information I desired, and with casts of some of the seals. It is, of course, well known that in modern times the double-headed eagle was borne by the emperor, while the single-headed one belonged to the King of the Romans; but D. P. does not appear to be aware that the single-headed eagle was the one originally borne by the emperors, and was often employed by them even after the double-headed eagle had come into general use. The emperor Rodolph II., in the early part of the seventeenth century, is the last who used the single-headed eagle. I must also dissent from D. P.'s opinion that the single-headed eagle is that which is usually employed as an imperial augmentation. No doubt it is sometimes so used (and it is that which is usually found in the arms of the imperial cities), an explanation of this may perhaps be found in the fact stated above, that the double-headed eagle was not invariably employed by the emperors. But, as one would expect, the latter is that which appears in by far the larger number of augmented coats. Abundant examples will be found in the later editions of Siebmacher's Wappenbuch. Sometimes the imperial eagle was dimidiated, so that the dexter half appeared in the first quarter, and the sinister half in the fourth; the second and third quarters containing the personal arms of the bearer. Good instances of the use of the double-headed eagle as an augmentation will be found in the arms of the Italian princely houses of Mirandola, Modena, and Massa-Carrara.

J. WOODWARD.

New Shoreham.

MARSHAL SOULT'S PICTURES: HIGHEST PRICE EVER GIVEN FOR A PICTURE (3rd S. viii. 311.)—An interesting account of the sale of the Soult Murillos, with the prices given for the nine chief pictures, will be found in the Illustrated News for June 19, 1852 (vol. xx. p. 477). The 586,000 francs for the "Conception of the Virgin" is stated to have been "the largest sum, perhaps, ever given for a single picture." Of the Soult Murillos, that representing the "Pool of Bethesda, or Christ healing the Paralytic," had previously been purchased by Mr. G. Tomline, M.P., of Carlton House Terrace, for the sum of 7500*l.*, being (as stated in Weale's London and its Vicinity, 1851, p. 390) "the largest sum ever given for any picture in England." This sum, I think, has since been surpassed. Was not Mr. Frith's "Railway Station," including its copyright, &c., sold for as high a sum as 10,000*l.*? I am under the impression that the largest sum ever given for a picture in any English collection, if the size of the picture in square inches be taken into consideration, was given by the Earl of Dudley for his replica of Correggio's "Reading Magdalen;" but I have mislaid my note, both of the price and size of this picture gem. Perhaps they can be supplied by some other correspondent. CUTHBERT BRED.

SIR JOHN DAVIES (3rd S. viii. 250.)—I am quite well aware who Sir John Davies, Solicitor-General for Ireland, afterwards Lord Chief Justice of England, the poet and historian, was; also Sir John Davies, Master-General of the Ordnance in Ireland, 1599; neither of these was the Sir John, Marshal of Connaught. It seems strange that no further trace of a man so powerful, and possessed of such large estates (some still in possession of his descendants), can be found. His arms, sable on a chev. ar. 3 trefoils slipped vert, are borne by his descendants alone, and not by any other branch of the Davies family; they are cut on the old tombstone in the abbey of Clonmacnoise, co. Mayo, and the motto is "Sustenta la Duchura," in old Spanish; these were the arms and motto of the Viscounts Mount Cashell also: title extinct, 1736, and they had for supporters 2 tigers guardant proper, and coward! Is the origin of these supporters and motto also undiscoverable? The family claim descent from Rhys ab Madoc ap David, Prince of Glamorgan, 1150.

FRANCIS ROBERT DAVIES.

Hawthorn, Black Rock, Dublin.

HEAD OF CHARLES I. (3rd S. viii. 263, 313.) — I remember Miss E. C. Knight, whose Memoirs have been published some years ago, telling my mother that she was in waiting on the Princess Charlotte when the Prince Regent came to inform his daughter of the discovery just made of the body of Charles I. The Prince was much affected and impressed by the extraordinary spectacle he had witnessed. The king's eyes appeared half open, but closed or vanished almost immediately; the features were perfect, and the likeness of Vandyck's fine portrait to the original faithful even in death. The Prince gave Princess Charlotte a lock of dark brown hair, which he had cut off; the beard and hair were exactly as in Vandyck's picture.

THUS.

HERALDIC PUZZLE (3rd S. viii. 207.) — MR. WOODWARD'S puzzle is how to arrange the arms of married ladies who are heiresses of their mother but not of their father. As their father had a son, though by a second marriage, I doubt if they are entitled to the heiress's inescutcheon at all. I rather think they must be content to bear their father's and mother's arms quarterly impaled with their husband's, as ordinary married women do. I do not think there is any heraldic general rule which would permit them to place their father's arms on a chief or a canton and add it to the mother's shield. What could a seal engraver make of such an arrangement? The only hope of its being seen would be on a hatchment. The ladies should apply to the College of Arms, who would probably permit them to sink the father's coat and bear the mother's, heiresswise, on an inescutcheon.

P. P.

DERMOT, KING OF LEINSTER (3rd S. viii. 371.) Arthur Kavanagh, Esq., of Borris House, co. Carlow, who is allowed to be the representative of the last King of Leinster, no doubt bears his arms, and can furnish the information required in that respect. I may state that although the above-named gentleman is acknowledged as the representative of Dermot, the claim is disputed by a poor boy, the son of a working mason, near Ferns, co. Wexford, who claims in the female line to be the lineal descendant.

S. REDMOND.

Liverpool.

RALPHSTON FAMILY (3rd S. viii. 372.) — A respectable Scottish family, Ralston of Ralston, possessed lands near Paisley, Renfrewshire, for some centuries. Some information regarding it may be found in Crawford's History of Renfrewshire, ed. 1782, pp. 242-3, and also in Burke's Landed Gentry, 1846-8: this last being, however, merely a paraphrase of Crawford's account. Crawford derives the name from Ralph, a younger son of the Earl of Fife, which rather tallies with that of the Meath family. He is, however, a very loose and inaccurate genealogist, and has long ceased to be regarded as such, the Landed Gentry Scottish and Irish pedigrees glaring absurdities, a few given in a recent annals indefinitely multiplied. Crawford are — "Arms acorns seeded on."

DAUGHTER PRONOUNCED 292, 504: 3rd S. viii. 1. Book for the parish of C in the year 1790, by the man, who has recorded the dafter of — "3 &c. I think that this supposition that dafter pronounced dafter.

REV. D. BLAIR (3rd S. viii. 1.) ing is Sir Richard Phillips regards the authorship books, once so much in "All the elementary books Goldsmith, Barrow, Pelham's editions of the editor of 1815." — Sir Richard Phillips stereotyped edition, 1818.

THE CONSTELLATION subject of this query Dupuis's Origine de To ELIZABETH HEYRICK beth Heyrick lived at born a Quaker, but joined the Society of Friends in 1815. Her name is still remembered by those who knew her, abilities, and thoroughness. She kept a school for Quaker ladies, which was the best in the Society. Her thies were excited, not but also for the brutal many pamphlets on the committed at Smithfield. A favourite expression abolition was the very. The writer would be happy to see several ladies educated doubtless be glad to mention.

ELIZABETH HEYRICK John Heyrick, whom and daughter of J. C. a respectable manufacturer. Many years before he was a member of the Society of Friends, he published several pamphlets in favour of one of which she was the author of slave-grown sugar.

her benevolence and kindness to the working classes, whose cause she was accustomed to advocate in seasons of commercial distress. She and the Rev. Robert Hall entered the field of discussion together in their behalf more than thirty-five years ago, when low wages formed a prominent subject of controversy. A notable instance of the vigour of her pen was shown in a letter to the editor of the Leicester Chronicle, signed "Flagellator," in which the conduct of the borough magistrates was sharply reprehended for ordering three poor men to be publicly whipped for begging. For inserting this communication the proprietor only escaped prosecution by the interposition of an ex-town clerk (her brother-in-law), to whom she had previously submitted the letter for consideration; but whose advice to suppress it she disregarded.

THOS. THOMSON.

Leicester.

ARTISTIC (3rd S. viii. 8.)—In Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities (2nd ed.), P. may perhaps find what he wants under the words "Incus" and "Malleus," where he may see representations (taken from works of art much more than a hundred years old) of a blacksmith's forge, with blacksmith at work.

T. S. N.

MECHLIN; CHURCH OF NOTRE DAME (3rd S. viii. 264.)—Will MR. WEALE permit me to contribute a copy of the inscription on the grave of Lady Stanley, which is, I think, in some details, more exact than his? I made it on the spot last year:—

"Icy gist la noble Dame Elizabeth Egerton Jadis épouse du trepadet chevallier Messir Guillaume Stanley
Coronel et duconseil de guerre de sa Ma^{te} d'Espagne laquelle tres passa de ceste vie le 10 d'April 1614.
Prie Dieu pour son ame."

But I wish to inquire where information is to be seen as to the burial of Lady Stanley's husband, and Roland Garede; and should be much obliged if MR. WEALE would give it. I do not find any in my notes of the inscription, but something may possibly have escaped my eye.

This huge slab in the floor of the choir of Notre Dame covers the body of a person of note in his day, if Sir William Stanley lies beneath it. He was the Sir William Stanley who surrendered Deventer, and attached himself to the cause of Belgium under the Spanish crown. His wife, Elizabeth Egerton, was daughter of John Egerton, of Egerton. From the marriage of these two great names the Stanleys of Hooton lineally descend. Their great-grandson, Sir William Stanley, of Hooton, was made a baronet by Charles II. in 1661.

Besides the inscription given by MR. WEALE and myself, the slab shows the arms of the two famous houses. First, nearest the head of the slab is a shield of nineteen quarterings, 5, 5, 5, 4, all carved in relief in the bold manner prevailing in Belgium. Neither in this shield, nor in the lozenge which I shall mention, are any tinctures visible. The first quarter in the shield is, on a bend 3 stags' heads caboched. Stanley. I will not give the other eighteen unless any reader wishes to see them.

Below the shield is a lozenge, showing Egerton alone, a lion rampant between 3 pheons. D. P.

Stuarts Lodge, Malvern Wells.

CHARMS (3rd S. viii. 146, 218.)—

"Aliud est ciculo miraculum, quo quis loco primo audiat alitem illam, si dexter pes circumscriptur, ac vestigium id effodiat, non gigni pulices ubicunque spargatur."—Plinii Hist. Nat., lib. xxx. c. 10.

FITZHOPE.

Garrick Club.

PORCELAIN MANUFACTORY AT LEITH OR EDINBURGH (3rd S. viii. 310, 342.)—There is published weekly in Edinburgh, a paper called The Ladies' own Journal and Miscellany, in which are frequently inserted extracts from "N. & Q." Among others, there was given the query as to this manufactory, which appeared in "N. & Q." on October 14; and I refer you to the accompanying slip, which I have cut from the Ladies' Journal of the 28th. It corresponds in substance with my reply which appeared in "N. & Q." on the 21st; the only difference (but a very slight one) being as to the exact situation of the work:—

"Mr. George Forrest, a local antiquary, informs us that this China Manufactory was situated at Deanbank, Stockbridge, then (about the close of the last century) a village on the Water of Leith, but now a portion of the city. His father resided there, and was often in the work. The principal productions of this short-lived establishment were cups and saucers for the completion of sets which had been broken. In this art the firm was very successful, the painting and formation of the required articles being always very like the original. The manufacturer's name was Malcolm Sinclair. He removed to Sweden to carry on the same profession, but was not more fortunate there, as may be learned from the fact that he became a pensioner of the Merchant Company of Edinburgh, of which body he at one time was a distinguished member, and from fifteen to twenty years was a thankful recipient of such alms."

I have verified the statement as to Malcolm Sinclair from a List I have of the Merchant Company. He entered as a member in Nov. 1801.

G.

Edinburgh, Oct. 30, 1865.

THOMAS SPARROW (3rd S. viii. 391.)—The probable author of The Confessor was Thomas Sparrow, matriculated as a pensioner of St. John's College, March 22, 1639-40; B.A. 1639-2.

C. H. & THOMPSON OCEANA.

Cambridge.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

Fusti Sacri; or, a Key to the Chronology of the New Testament. By Thomas Lewin, Esq., of Trin. Coll. Oxford, F.S.A., &c. (Longman.)

This is the work of a man of strong religious convictions, who avows that in undertaking it his principal aim has been to impart knowledge for the purpose of promoting religion; and who, while he feels that as a layman he is free from that suspicion of being a partisan to which the churchman is open, claims additional fitness for the task he has undertaken, inasmuch as he is a juriconsult, whose business it is from day to day, and from year to year, minutely to scrutinise contradictory evidence for the purpose of striking the balance truly, and to bring a correct judgment to bear upon discordant facts. Mr. Lewin claims to advance new and original views calculated to enlarge the sphere of chronological knowledge, and, while doing so, to put into the reader's hands the materials necessary to enable him to judge for himself, if he doubts the accuracy of the author's deductions. It will be seen from this, that the book before us is one of no ordinary character. It abounds in evidence that the author is a man of considerable learning, and much critical power. It opens with a very interesting Dissertation on the Chronology of the New Testament. This is followed by a series of Chronological Tables from B.C. 70 to A.D. 70, which are very elaborately worked out. An Appendix follows, which contains a large number of desiderata for consulting and verifying the Tables, such as the Jewish, Syro-Macedonian and Attic Years; the Roman Calendar; Tables of Parallel Years; Tables of Eclipses; Cenotaphium Pisanum; Monumentum Ancyranum; Monumentum Ancyranum Græce; Fasti Capitolini; Stemma Cesarum; and Family of the Herods. While a full and useful Index gives completeness to a work, which cannot fail to attract the attention of all who take an interest in the very important subject of the Chronology of the New Testament.

Our British Ancestors: Who and What they were. An Inquiry serving to elucidate the Traditional History of the Early Britons by Means of recent Excavations, Etymology, Remnants of Religious Worship, Inscriptions, Craniology, and Fragmentary Collateral History. By the Rev. Samuel Lysons, M.A., F.S.A. (Parker.)

We cannot better exhibit the nature of this curious and learned volume than by pointing out that the author was led to the inquiry which forms the subject of it by what appeared to him the remarkable coincidence that the names by which the British Tumuli, at the investigation of many of which he had assisted, are still popularly called, are for the most part the titles, little if at all corrupted by the lapse of ages, of the divinities worshipped in the ancient mythologies of Canaan, Chaldea, Babylon, and Assyria, those cradles of the human race, such as we find them recorded in Scripture, and treated of at large in the interesting Essays and Notes on the Assyrian and Babylonian Pantheon appended to Rawlinson's Translation of Herodotus. Pursuing this inquiry, the author finds not only an identity between these deities and worship and those which are so repeatedly alluded to in the Poems of Taliesin, Aneurin, and other Cambro-British Poets, and that the same mythological names pervade the British barrows, the Welsh poetry, and the Babylonian and Assyrian Pantheon, but also the same etymological and mythological roots are attached to the names of places, rivers, rocks, and mountains in Britain, and given apparently for the same causes as in the Eastern countries where they originated; and he therefore concludes there must be some ethnological affinity between people so circumstanced. This is the problem which Mr. Lysons proposes to solve in the volume before us. He probably does not expect to carry conviction to all his readers; one thing we may reasonably look for at their hands—a ready admission of the learning and ingenuity with which he has worked out the idea upon which the book is founded.

The Whole Works of Roger Ascham, now first collected and revised, with a Life of the Author. By the Rev. Dr. Giles, formerly Fellow of C. C. C. Oxford. In four volumes. (J. R. Smith.)

It is somewhat remarkable that it should be left to the present day to collect the whole works of Queen Elizabeth's learned tutor. Such being the case, however, we think Mr. Smith has done wisely in including them in his valuable Library of Old Authors. They will be found to consist of no less than 295 letters, which occupy the two parts into which the first volume is divided, and a considerable portion of the second volume; the remainder being occupied with The Torophilus. The last volume contains A Report and Discourse of the Affairs and State of Germany, the Schoolmaster, the Poemata, the Oration on the Death of Ascham, and Seven Letters by his son Giles Ascham, now first published from the Lansdowne Collection in the British Museum.

THE PASTON LETTERS.—We believe that at the Meeting of the Society of Antiquaries, on Thursday next, the 30th instant, the original of the Letters published in the fifth volume will be exhibited, by the courtesy of Mr. Philip Freere, in whose custody they have been found.

TENNYSON'S POEMS.—We have received from Messrs. Moxon the following letter with reference to the notice of the American edition of the Laureate's works, mentioned antè p. 390:—

"We have noticed the remarks of K. B. C., in your last number, relative to the American edition of the Laureate's works. Will you permit us to say, that we saw the edition referred to last week at Mr. Tennyson's sent in the Isle of Wight, and that it is in every respect inferior to the edition of his complete works published here. More than one misreading blemishes the American edition, while its inferiority as regards typographical excellence is too patent to all connoisseurs to need argument. K. B. C. is evidently a novice in matters relative to literary property, or he would be aware that the introduction of any editions into the market save those in which an author is interested would be a most dishonest proceeding, and one which, in the present case, would not only be pernicious but supererogative.

"EDWARD MOXON & CO.

"44, Dover Street, Piccadilly."

THE WIDOW OF THE LATE MR. THORPE.

"Dear Mr. Editor,—

"I see in your paper of the 18th, in an article by Mr. HAZLITT on Booksellers' Catalogues, an allusion to the energy in this department of the late Mr. Thomas Thorpe, to the accuracy of which I cordially subscribe. In reference thereto, permit me to state that the widow of that in some respects extraordinary man is now in distressed circumstances, and seeking the help of the National Benevolent Institution. I hope such of your subscribers as have disengaged votes will assist our endeavours in promoting her election on the 30th inst.

"Yours, dear Sir, faithfully,

"HENRY G. BOWEN.

"4, York Street, Covent Garden,
"Nov. 20, 1865."

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books, to be sent direct to the gentlemen by whom they are required, whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—
CLAIRAUT'S ALGEBRA, 12mo or 8vo. (An old book.)
NOTES AND QUERIES. Vol. II. First Series.
PERCY SOCIETY.—No. 1. Old Ballads; No. 6. Songs of Ireland; No. 17. Nursery Rhymes.
WATT'S BIBLIOTHECA BRITANNICA. Parts V. and VI.
 Wanted by Mr. T. G. Stevenson, 22, Frederick Street, Edinburgh.
FORMS BY CURRIER, ELLIS, AND ACTON BELL. Smith, Elder, & Co. 1846.
 Wanted by D. Q. N., Union Society, Cambridge.

Notices to Correspondents.

We are compelled to postpone until next week Cornish Bell Inscriptions: Robert Lovett; Mr. Lee on Eikon Basilike; Mr. Hazlitt on Shakespeare's Sonnets, and many other papers of interest.
 Our CHRISTMAS NUMBER will be published on Saturday, December 16th.

ROBIN ADAMS. Our Correspondent, J. O. G. (Pretworth), who writes respecting this song is referred to "N. & Q." 3rd S. iv. 120, and v. 404, 443, 500.

CIT. The name of the Danish war steamer, "Rofe Kraks," may be thus explained. Rofe is the name, and Kraks the nickname of the heroic King of Denmark mentioned by Saxo Grammaticus, meaning both the Sapling. For the Icelandic and Danish versions of his story, see Fornaldar Sögur, and Nordiske Fortids Sæger, edited by C. C. Rafn, 1829.

G. F. Only one volume was published of Harris's History of Kent. It may frequently be met with in booksellers' catalogues.

W. S. J. Clara Lucas Balfour, we believe, is still living.

W. PANDREA. Where will a private letter find our Correspondent?

ERRATUM.—3rd S. viii. p. 383, col. ii. line 1, for "vol. III." read "vol. I."

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d.; or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 8d.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

New and Cheaper Edition of "Stonehenge on the Horse."
 In demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s.

THE HORSE in the Stable and in the Field.

By J. H. WALSH, Stonehenge. With numerous Illustrations.
 "A first-class book of reference in all equine matters."—The Globe.
 "The best book which an English gentleman can consult."
Sporting Life.

GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, The Broadway, Ludgate Hill.

THE BEST ENGLISH PRONOUNCING DICTIONARY.

A New and Cheaper Edition, in royal 8vo, cloth (1200 pages), price 12s.

WEBSTER'S DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE; exhibiting the Origin, Orthography, Pronunciation, and Definition of Words; to which is added "WALKER'S KEY to the CLASSICAL PRONUNCIATION of GREEK, LATIN, and SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES." Tenth Edition, revised and corrected.

GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, The Broadway, Ludgate Hill.

NOTICE.—DR. HUNTER'S LETTERS. Now

Ready, the FIFTH EDITION of DR. HUNTER'S CELEBRATED LETTERS on DISEASES of the THROAT, LARYNX, and LUNGS, their Nature, Causes, and Cure. Price 2s. 6d., per part 2s. 6d. This Edition contains a NEW PREFACE by HENRY MELVILLE, M.D., and a statement of English Cases showing the progress and success of the Treatment by Inhalation in this country.

London: C. MITCHELL & CO., 12 and 13, Red Lion Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Just published.

THOS. DE LA RUE & CO.'S INDELIBLE RED LETTER DIARIES FOR 1866, edited by JAMES GLAISHER, ESQ., F.R.S. With an Engraving of Lunar Mountains, and an original Article on the Moon by PROFESSOR PHILLIPS, F.R.S. In various sizes, suitable for the Pocket or Desk, and in a great variety of bindings. May be had of all Booksellers and Stationers.

OLD ENGLISH CAROLS and HYMNS for the merry times of Christmas, with Introduction by E. F. RIMBAULT, LL.D. Arranged for four voices, with accompaniment. Price 4s., limp cloth, post free. A superior edition of the same, printed in gold and colours, on extra-fine paper, handsomely bound, gilt edges, &c. Suitable for Presents. Price 10s. 6d.

METZLER & CO., 37, Great Marlborough Street, W.

OLD BOOKS AT UNPRECEDENTED LOW PRICES.

T. & W. BOONE'S NEW CATALOGUE of OLD BOOKS, containing upwards of 600 Articles of Good and Useful Books in every Department of Literature, English and Foreign, is this Day issued, and will be sent on receipt of 3 Stamps.

T. & W. BOONE, 29, New Bond Street, London.

UNCOMMON LITERARY CURIOSITIES.

In small 8vo, price Sixpence per post.

INTERESTING CATALOGUE of a Miscellaneous Collection of BOOKS, &c., chiefly printed at private expense, and very limited in number, now on Sale at the moderate nett prices offered. By THOMAS GEORGE STEVENSON, Antiquarian and Historical Bookseller, 22, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh.

J. RUSSELL SMITH'S NOVEMBER CATALOGUE of 1000 good SECOND-HAND BOOKS, sent for a Royal Label. Also a CATALOGUE of 1000 BOOKS relating to America, 2s. 6d. by Post.—22, Soho Square, London.

TO BOOKBUYERS.

NATTALI & BOND'S NEW CATALOGUE of ANCIENT and MODERN BOOKS, comprising all their recent purchases, is now ready. Post Free for One Stamp.

NATTALI & BOND, 22, Bedford Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

NOVEMBER ELECTION, 1865.

NATIONAL BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.

The favour of your Vote and Interest is earnestly solicited on behalf of

MRS. MARIA THORPE, Aged 69,

Widow of Mr. Thomas Thorpe, Bookseller, who for many years carried on an extensive business in Bedford Street, Covent Garden, and subsequently in Finsbury, but having a large family, and, on his falling in his later years, he was unable to make any provision for his widow, who, on his death in February, 1861, was left without means of support. She has since been striving to maintain herself by letting lodgings, but unsuccessfully. Her present sole means are derived from a temporary salary of 12l. per annum, as compensation to an invalid lady.

The Case is strongly recommended by

The Right Rev. The Bishop of Lincoln.
 The Very Rev. the Dean of Manchester.
 Mrs. Buckmaster, 16, Holland Street, Kensington.
 Rev. E. N. Buckmaster, Kensington.
 Rev. John Buckmaster, All Saints, Wandsworth.
 Rev. John Lingham, St. Mary's, Lambeth.
 Mr. Alderman Waterlow, 62, London Wall.
 Rev. C. T. Aspley, Vicar of Margate.
 Francis Wm. Cobb, Esq., Margate.
 Henry Fox, Esq., 42, Devonshire Street, Portland Place.
 H. G. Bohn, Esq., North End House, Twickenham.
 J. G. Halliwell, Esq., St. Mary's Place, W. Brompton.
 Chas. Bond, Esq., 25, Bedford Street, Covent Garden.
 Chas. Smith, Esq., 25, Langdowne Place, Brighton.
 Henry Ellis Harvey, Esq., Twickenham.
 Thos. Dix, Esq., 10, Amwell Street, Claremont Square.
 T. J. Allman, Esq., 463, New Oxford Street.
 Messrs. Soeborg, Wilkinson, & Co., Wellington Street.
 Joseph Lilly, Esq., 18, New Street, Covent Garden.
 C. J. Stewart, Esq., 11, King William Street, Strand.
 Messrs. T. & W. Boone, 29, New Bond Street.
 Messrs. Puttick & Simpson, 67, Leicester Square.
 Edmund Hodgson, Esq., 115, Chancery Lane.
 Messrs. Shaw & Blake, Doctors' Commons.
 John Smith, Esq., Record Keeper H.M. Court of Probate, Doctors' Commons.

Gentlemen marked thus (e) have kindly consented to receive Proxies.

GLASGOW.

Five Days' Sale of a Valuable Library, &c.

TO be SOLD by PUBLIC AUCTION within the Upper Hall of the Scottish Exhibition Rooms, No. 53, Bath Street, Glasgow, on TUESDAY, the 12th Day of DECEMBER, 1865, and four following days, the very valuable, interesting, and important library of the late STEPHEN WILLIAMSON, ESQ., in fine condition, and peculiarly rich in Old Poetry, Ballads, and Shakespeareana. Buyers are referred to the Catalogue, as any attempt at enumeration of the contents within the limits of an advertisement would convey no proper idea of the importance of the Library.

Also a small Collection of valuable and well selected Old Coins, Medals, and other Curiosities, Book Cases, &c. &c. Catalogues, price 6d., will be sent on application to the Auctioneer, or to Mrs. Helen Hopkiss, Bookseller, 6, Royal Bank Place, Glasgow, on the receipt of Six Postage Stamps.

DUNCAN KEITH, Auctioneer,
 61, Belfield Street, Glasgow.

Glasgow, November, 1865.

LAW LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY

FLEET STREET, LONDON,

FOR THE ASSURANCE OF THE LIVES OF PERSONS IN EVERY

Invested Assets—FIVE-AND-A-QUARTER MILLION.
Annual Income—HALF-A-MILLION.

Assurances are granted upon the Lives of any Persons for Sums not exceeding £10,000, either with part Premium without participation in Profits.

Profits are divided every fifth year, four-fifths thereof being appropriated to the person assured on the ; At the Six Divisions of Profits which have been made Bonuses amounting in the aggregate to £1,100,000.

The Claims paid to 31st December, 1864, amounted to £5,500,091, being in respect of Sums assured in respect of Bonuses thereon.

Prospectuses, Statements of Accounts, Forms of Proposal, &c., may be obtained, and Assurances effected in any Country, or by application direct to the Actuary at the Office in London.

V

DOTESIO'S FRENCH WINE CELLARS.—

Bordeaux, 18s.; Medoc, 24s.; Grave, 24s.; Chablis, 24s.; Beaujolais, 24s.; Ay Champagne, 18s. and 20s.; Cognac, 60s. and 72s. per dozen. List of all other wines on application, to be tasted at the depot, 95, Regent Street Quadrant.

OLD MARSALA WINE, guaranteed the finest imported, free from acidity or heat, and much superior to low-priced Sherry. One guinea per doz. A genuine fine old port 34s. per dozen. Terms cash. Three dozen rail paid.—W. D. WATSON, Wine Merchant, 72 and 73, Great Russell Street, corner of Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C. Established 1841.—Price lists post free.

CHOICE OLD SHERRIES.—Warranted pure Cadiz Wines as imported direct, soft and full flavoured.—Pale, Golden, or Brown, 28s., 34s., 38s., 44s., 50s., 54s., 60s. per dozen. Terms Cash. Three dozen, railway carriage paid.

W. D. WATSON, Wine Importer, 72 and 73, Great Russell Street, corner of Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C.

Established 1841. Full Price Lists post free on application.

THE TIMES WINE COMPANY.

THE "Times," in a leading article on the 8th September, treated at some length of the heretofore existing difficulty that the Public experienced in obtaining good Wines at reasonable prices. The formation of the Times Wine Company has removed that difficulty by supplying the following genuine Wines at prices—quality considered—unprecedented:—Beaujolais, 15s. and 18s.; Champagne, 30s.; Als., 30s.; Sillery, 30s.; Bouzy, extra, 60s.; Claret, 12s., 16s., 20s., 24s., and upwards; Chablis, 12s., 16s., 20s., 24s., and upwards; Sherry and Port from the Wood, 16s., 18s., 24s., 30s., and upwards. The finest Cognac Brandy, bottled in France, 42s., 48s., 54s., and 60s. per dozen, bottles and cases included. Terms, cash only, which must accompany the order. All wines not approved of will be allowed for if returned within a week. Samples sent on receipt of P. O. Order, payable to T. LAXTON, Manager, 79, Great Tower Street, E.C.

HEDGES & BUTLER, Wine Merchants, &c.

recommend and GUARANTEE the following WINES:—
Pure wholesome CLARET, as drunk at Bordeaux, 18s. and 24s. per dozen.

White Bordeaux	34s. and 30s. per doz.
Good Hock	30s. " 34s. "
Sparkling Epervier Champagne	42s. " 48s. "
Good Dinner Sherry	34s. " 30s. "
Port	24s., 30s. " 34s. "

They invite the attention of CONNOISSEURS to their varied stock of CHOICE OLD PORT, consisting of Wines of the Celebrated vintage 1830 at 180s. per doz.
Vintage 1834

Vintage 1840

Vintage 1847

all of Sandeman's shipping, and in first-rate condition.
Fine old "beeswing" Port, 48s. and 60s.; superior Sherry, 36s., 42s., 48s.; Claret of choice growths, 30s., 42s., 48s., 60s., 72s., 84s.; Hochheimer, Marobrunner, Rudesheimer, Steinberg, Ledbraunich, 60s.; Johannesberger and Steinberger, 72s., 84s., to 180s.; Braunberger, Grunhausen, and Scharberg, 48s. to 84s.; sparkling Moselle, 48s., 60s., 66s., 72s.; very choice Champagne, 60s., 72s.; fine old Sack, Malmsey, Frontignac, Vermouth, Constantia, Lacryme Christi, Imperial Tokay, and other rare wines. Fine old Pale Cognac Brandy, 60s. and 72s. per doz.; very choice Cognac, vintage 1855, 144s. per doz. Foreign Liqueurs of every description. On receipt of a post-office order, or reference, any quantity will be forwarded immediately, by

HEDGES & BUTLER,

LONDON: 155, REGENT STREET, W.
Brighton: 30, King's Road.
(Originally established A.D. 1667.)

PARTIDG

MANUFACTURERS

192, FLEET STREET
Carriage paid to the Cost

The LARGEST and most valuable Letter and Fung. Papers, Envelope Hold Papers, &c.

PARTIDG & COZENS' TIONERY forwarded free to receipt of Post-office Order.

NO CHARGE for Plain Stamp or Envelopes. Coloured Stamp Polished Steel Crest Dies engr from 2s.

SERMON PAPER, plain, 4s. mense variety in all sizes and q Illustrated Price List of Inkst nets, Postage Scales, Writing C

Published by J. Clements, Ltd
Work on t

PURE DENTISTRY,

US. By A. ESKELL, Dr

"We feel certain all who mal tents of the book through our in directed their attention to Mr. read it without deriving the gra Sold by SIMPKIN & MARSH

"Purity and E

COLMAN'S PRIZ

bears their Trade Mark, t
It was the only Mustard whicl
GREAT E

Their GENUINE and DOU ticularly recommended for Fam For Medicinal purposes

Sold by all G

J. & J. COI

CHANG, the MAGI

tion.—This marvellous s dinary spectacles at the Court of at 224, Strand, from 10 till 6. S 14 Stamps.—H. G. CLARKE &

THE GALANTY SE

a GALANTY SHOW, an Bridge, Billy Button, Mother G free for 12 Stamps.—H. G. CLA

THE MAGIC DONE

These wonderful animala tions daily at 224, Strand, for 14 Stamps.—H. G. CLARKE &

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 205.

NOTES:—Shakspeare's Sonnets: "Mr. W. H.," 449—Cornish Bell Inscriptions, 450—Roadside Graveyards in Turkey—Knowledge of the Geological Epochs among the Ancient Persians—Names of the Days of the Week—Curious Sign—James Smith—Anointed, used in a Bad Sense—Zlad, 451.

QUERIES:—Aristophanes—John Blackader—Buchanan Jest—Burning of Heretics—Chaff—Chair Superstition—Cross Writing—John Duthy, Esq.—See of Evreux—The Italian St. Swithin—Knox the Reformer—Lewelyn's Version of David's Psalms—William Milburn, Esq.—Island of Neddram—The Pallium—Skarh Family—Slang Phrases—St. Hilda's Fish—Tennyson—Winthrop Pedigree, 452.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Peg Tankards—"Abbey of Kilkhampton"—Ladsom: Adsom—"Durance vile"—Tyers on Pope—Walton's Polyglott, 453.

REPLIES:—Robert Levett, 456—Various Pronunciations of "ouch," 457—Eikon Basilike, 458—Division of the Bible into Verses, ib.—By and by, 459—MS. Copies of the Ancient Italic Version of the Bible, 460—Whig and Tory: Origin of the Terms, ib.—Lord Hailes—Thomas Vincent—Sir Henry Raeburn—Dutch Epitaph: the learned Pig—Passage in Locke—Gilray's "Salute"—Lord Palmerston—Warde—Quarterings—Poyle Arms—Fermor Pedigree—Copes—Beckford's "Lives of Extraordinary Painters"—Judges returning to the Bar—Human Skin tanned—The Janizaries—Charles Butler—Military Queries—Horace Guildford—Thomas E. Barlow—Wickham Family—Wills of the Seventeenth Century, &c., 461.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

SHAKSPEARE'S SONNETS: "MR. W. H."

So far as my personal reading in this matter goes, there have been six theories propounded as to the identity of "Mr. W. H.," or as to the interpretation of the inscription, with these mysterious initials, prefixed to the quarto of 1609.

1. That "Mr. W. H." was William, Earl of Pembroke.
2. That he was Henry, Earl of Southampton.
3. That he was Henry Willeb, author of Willib his Arisa, 1594.
4. That we ought to read the dedication in a totally different manner: so as to make "Mr. W. H." the dedicatory, instead of the dedicatee.
5. That "Mr. W. H." was a Mr. William Hammond: a cotemporary patron of letters, to whom we find dedicated an extant MS. of Middleton's Game of Chess (performed in 1624).
6. That "W. H." may be the initials of William Hathaway ("N. & Q.," 2nd S. v. 164).

If anything would induce me to attach greater weight to hypothesis No. 1 than, in my own private judgment, it is intrinsically entitled to, it would be the circumstance of its strong advocacy by the late Mr. Hunter, one of our best Shakspearians; and by Mr. Hunter's friend, Mr. B. H. Bright. But I am convinced of the fallacy of the notion, and that it is nearly the only weak part of Mr. Hunter's admirable book (New Illustrations of Shakspeare, 1845), where he supports earnestly what he himself earnestly believed.

Nos. 2 and 3 are simply to be set aside without comment. So, I submit, is No. 4. So is No. 6, for lack of evidence.

No. 5 emanated from the compiler of one of Mr. Stewart the bookseller's catalogues, I believe; and, if I am not deceived, it was Mr. F. S. Ellis who deserves the honour of having introduced us to the only sensible proposal on the subject yet broached.

But it is not precisely for the purpose of vindicating Mr. Ellis's view (if it be his), that these lines are written, but to suggest that one rather important branch of the inquiry has hitherto been neglected.

We cannot be sure who "Mr. W. H." was, but we know who "T. T." was. He was Thorpe, the stationer.

Thorpe, the stationer, was a man of far larger consideration in his day, I suspect, than most men of the same class. Edward Blount, the publisher (with Jaggard) of the folio of 1623, was another person of the same calling cotemporary with Thorpe, and enjoying a similar pre-eminence; and Thorpe and Blount were intimate as early as 1600, when the former inscribed to the latter Marlowe's Translation of Lucan, book i., in a familiar and humorous epistle (Dyce's Marlowe, iii. 267-8).

Both these men associated, we are perfectly warranted in believing, with the literati of their time; and nothing has been done yet, that I am aware, to ascertain what Thorpe's (we are more immediately concerned with him just now) standing exactly was among, as we may perhaps term it, Shakspeare's literary world.

We know so much: that, in 1610, Thorpe [not Healey, as is erroneously stated by Mr. Hunter, i. 278] inscribed to his friend, John Florio, Healey's Epictetus and Cebes. In 1616, the same Thorpe [the "T. T." who, in 1609, dedicates to "Mr. W. H." Shakspeare's Sonnets, never before Imprinted, in a rather familiar style] addressed, in highly deferential terms, an edition of Healey's book, enlarged by Theophrastus' Characters, to William, Earl of Pembroke [the "Mr. W. H." of 1609!]

I think the following premises may be conceded:—

1. That Thorpe was intimate both with Healey and Florio.
2. That both Healey and Florio were patronised by Lord Pembroke.
3. That Thorpe was a stationer and bookseller of particular eminence; and something more than that, which yet remains to be ascertained (but certainly to the extent of promoting the publication of works of which he does not appear either as printer or seller); and that he might feel entitled to address a private gentleman ["Mr. W. H." for san Hammond] with the freedom we find in the pamphlet of 1609, but most assuredly not a nobleman such as Lord Pembroke: the actual proof lying in his dedication of a second book, seven years later on, in a perfectly different tone, to Lord Pembroke.

4. That the theory advanced in Stewart's Catalogue deserves further investigation hereafter.

5. That all the other theories may be safely dismissed for ever, with a respectful regret that they should ever have been brought forward.

A writer in "N. & Q." (3rd S. i. 87, 163) would almost have it inferred that Thorpe was a simoleon: for in fact the hypothesis, that he tacked on to the original inscription the concluding four lines and his initials, being once granted, amounts to that. The approximation of "wisheth" and "well-wishing" is inelegant perhaps, but not so peculiar or strange. Quite the reverse.

The question arises in my mind (one wholly unpractised in controversies of this class), why Shakspeare, if he knew Lord Pembroke so well, allowed anybody else, whether "T. T." or "Mr. W. H.," to address his Sonnets to the Earl? The friendship of a Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, was an honour to which even Shakspeare, with all his indifference to such things, could scarcely be insensible; and it was a very poor compliment to let the dedication proceed from the stationer, or even from "Mr. W. H.," whoever he might be (taking this view of the matter, for arguments' sake). Be it remembered that the poet, in 1593 and 1594, signed with his own name a dedication (composed, we are warranted in assuming, by himself) to Venus and Adonis and Lucrece, respectively; but in what different language he wrote then to Lord Southampton! He was too respectful to put upon paper such a form of words as occurs before the Sonnets; and he was also too respectful, taking the view that "Mr. W. H." was the dedicatee, to allow a stationer to speak for him.

It must strike many, curiously and forcibly, what a Medusa's head this quarto tract — with its not very lucid inscription — has proved to the critics from the earliest date down to now. Thorpe has indeed played Puck among the commentators.

W. CAREW HAZLITT.

CORNISH BELL INSCRIPTIONS.

The following bell inscriptions, collected during a recent visit to Cornwall, may interest some of your readers. The bells, and indeed the churches too, are in many cases in a bad condition. The modern invention of stays, of great convenience, though not necessary in bell-ringing, is entirely unknown in this part of the country. Kilkhampton was the only church at which the bell-ropes were furnished with sallies. At Stratton, Launcells, Poughill, Week, Whitstone, and Jacobstow, the bells were otherwise in ringing order. At Poughill there was a chiming apparatus erected by a man in the village, but it had got out of repair. At each of the churches of Lesnewth, St. Juliot, Tintagel, and Otterham, only one of the bells was provided with a rope. At Stratton, Kilkhampton, and several other parishes in the neighbourhood, the ringers are proficient in ringing call-changes, but know nothing of scientific change-ringing. The total absence of sanctus-bells, or tintangs, is worth noticing: — Inscriptions.

I. Marham church, 5.

1. Peace and good neighbourhood. T. R. 1772.
2. Fear God, honour the King. T. R. 1772.
3. Prosperity to this parish. T. R. 1772.
4. Tho^r Rudhall, Gloucester, founder.
5. Come at my call, and serve God all. T. R. 1772.

II. Stratton, 6.

- 1, 2, 3, 4. I. P. C. P. W. P. 1778.
5. Edward Marshall and John Saunders, C. W. I. P. C. P. W. P. 1778.
6. I call the quick to church, and dead to grave. Robert Martyn, Vicar, I. P. & Co. 1778.

[The operation of running the five old bells into the present six was performed by the three Penningtons in the churchyard at Stratton.]

III. Launcells, 6.

- 1, 3. Peace and good neighbourhood. A. R. 1751.
2. W. & I. Taylor, fecerunt, Oxford. 1828.
4. We were all cast at Gloucester by Abel Rudhall. 1751.
5. John Earle, Charles Orchard, Ch. Wardens. A. R. 1751.

6. I to the church the living call,
And to the grave do summon all. A. R. 1751.

IV. Poughill, 5.

1. I. P. C. P. 1790.
- 2, 4. Cast by John Warner & Sons, London, 1861. (royal arms). Patent.
3. I. P. 1801.

5. Diggory Jose, Vicar, John Bray, and Tho^r Taylor, Church Wardens. 1790.

[These bells are said to have been sent to Stoke, the home of the Penningtons, to be recast.]

V. Kilkhampton, 6.

1. G. Mears & Co., Founders, London. Given to the church in thankfulness to the restorer, the Rev^d the Lord John Thynne, 1868. (Black-letter and Lombardic capitals.)

2. Peace and good neighbourhood. A. R. 1753.
3. Abel Rudhall cast us all. 1753.
4. Prosperity to this parish. A. R. 1753.
5. W. Harling, Rector. A. R. 1752.
6. I to the church the living call,
And to the grave do summon all. A. R. 1752.

VI. Poundstock, 5.

- 1, 2, 3. C. P. I. P. 1791.
4. John Hobbs and Charles (sic) Jenn, C. W. C. P. I. P. 1791.
5. Rev^d Thomas Trevenen, Vicar. Rev^d Charles Dayman, Curate. C. P. I. P. 1791.

VII. Week, St. Mary, 5.

1. Peace and good neighbourhood. 1731.
2. Prosperity to this parish. A. R. 1731.
3. Prosperity to the Church of England. 1731.
4. Abr. Rudhall of Gloucester cast vs all.
5. I to the church the living call,
And to the grave do summon all. 1731.

VIII. Whitstone, 5.

1. W^r Fans, Esq^r and S. Steer, Ch. W. T. B. fecit. 1776.
2. Wrey Pans, Esq^r and Mr. Stephen Steer, Ch. Wardens. T. Bilbie, fecit. 1776.
3. Thomas Bilbie, Cullumpton, Devon, fecit. 1776.
4. William Score, A.M. Rector of Whitstone. T. Bilbie, fecit. 1776.
5. Wrey Pans, Esquire, and Mr. Stephen Steer, yeoman of the Bartons of Whitstone and Wadfast, Church Wardens. T. Bilbie, fecit. 1776.

IX. Morwenstow, 4.

1. Prosperity to the Church of England. A. R. 1753.
2. Peace and good neighbourhood. A. R. 1753.
3. Abel Rudhall of Gloucester cast vs. 1753.
4. Ol. Rouse, Vicar. A. R. 1753.

[The present vicar, the Rev. R. S. Hawker, informs me that he lately discovered in the valley below the church evident traces of some bells having been cast on the spot.]

X. Jacobstow, 6.

1. 2. 4. I. B. & Co. 1771.
3. I. P. 1771.
5. Richard Baker, Antipas Congdon, Wardens. I. P. & Co. 1771.
6. I call the quick to church, and dead to grave, W. Penwarne, Rec. I. P. 1771.

[These bells are said to have been cast in an orchard near the church.]

XI. St. Gennis, 4.

1. 2. C. P. I. P. 1791.
3. William Robins and John Crap. C. W. C. P. I. P. 1791.
4. Rev^d John Symos, Vicar. Rev^d William Williams, Curate. C. P. I. P. 1791.

XII. Forrabury, 1.

1. John Tink, 1812.

[This is the church to which the legend attaches of the peal of bells being lost at the mouth of Boscastle harbour.]

XIII. Trevalgar, 3.

1. [Three small shields, each bearing a chevron between three lavers.]
2. John Tooker, Ch. Warden. F. A. Pennington, F. 1756.
3. Joseph Thorpe, Rector. Thomas Rickard, C. W. I. P. & Co. 1773.

XIV. Lesnewth, 5.

1. 2. M.D.CCXXXIII.
3. John Venning and Samuel Langford, C. W. I. P. 1805.
4. James Dinham, William Tremeere, Ch. Wardens.
5. John Taylor of Oxford, Founder, 1830. Sam^l Langford, Sam^l Hambly, C. W.*

XV. St. Juliot, 5.

1. Richard Rawle and Thomas Hoskin, C. W. 1808.
1. P.
2. John Elson and Joseph Hock, C. W. I. P. C. P. 1783.
3. I. P. & Co. 1808.

4. John Jose, Ch. Warden, 1734.

5. Richard Rawle, Gent., John Jose, 1734.

XVI. Tintagel, 5.

1. William Bray, John Wade, Ch. Wardens, 1735.
2. [Inscription covered by an iron band, to mend the bell.]
3. John Wade and Robert Avery, C. W. I. P. C. P. 1783.
4. John and William Symons, Church Wardens, January 3, 1828. Copper House Foundry, Hale.
5. 1663. D. T. C. W. F. [cracked.]

XVII. Minster, 1.

1. Com prais the Lord. 1728.

XVIII. Otterham, 3.

1. noce mea utua de pello cunta nocius +
2. Nil.
3. Est michi collatum the istud nomen amatum +

XIX. Davidstow, 5.

1. 2. Rich. Bettenson, Ch. Warden. C. P. MDCCVII.
 1. M.
 3. Gerrance Hayne and John Pethick, C. W. I. P. C. P. 1789.
 4. W^m Pennington, Vic., Tho. Pearse, Tho. Hoskyn, Wardens. F. Pennington, 1726.
- [The initial F. is indistinct and doubtful.]
5. William Pennington, Vic., Tho. Pease, Tho. Hoskyn, Ch. Wardens, 1726.

A. D. T.

Merton College.

ROADSIDE GRAVEYARDS IN TURKEY. — The number of graves by the roadside in Turkey attracts the attention of travellers, and is often cited as an argument for the disappearance of former villages and supposed decline of the population. This I have referred to in the paper I read before the Statistical Society this year, and which has been published in a separate form.

A Turkish friend, Colonel Shayin Bey, in going over this called my attention to the circumstance, that whereas an inhabitant is buried in the village graveyard or family graveyard, it is the practice to bury a stranger by the roadside. The reason is this — the inhabitant is sure to profit by the prayers recited by his relatives and neighbours on the stated visits three times a-year, but in order that the stranger, dying away from home, may not fail of prayers, he is buried by the roadside; and as it is the practice for a Mussulman to recite a prayer on passing a grave or cemetery, the stranger thereby is assured of the benefit of commemorative prayer. This singular act of charity accounts for tombs met with so constantly in the roads, and sometimes even in the streets. There is one at Constantinople, in the street leading from the Custom House to the Porte, on the site of the late great fire.

HYDE CLARKE.

Smyrna, Oct. 30, 1865.

KNOWLEDGE OF THE GEOLOGICAL EPOCHS AMONG THE ANCIENT PERSIANS.—I am induced to think, from the following legend, that the ancient Persians had some notion that this globe was inhabited by various kinds of animals previous to the present geological era, and that the Saurians and other geological monsters gave rise to their stories about crawling and flying dragons, &c.: Simourgh, a monstrous griffin, relates to Caherman, a celebrated hero of Persian romance, that she had lived to witness the earth seven times inhabited by animated beings, and seven times destroyed; that the present age would last seven thousand years, after which mankind would be extirpated and succeeded by beings of another form and more perfect nature, who would prove its last inhabitants. II. C.

NAMES OF THE DAYS OF THE WEEK.—The following extract is taken from a translation of one of the sacred books of the Buddhists:—

"In misery and darkness mankind thought of their former power and glory, and now called for light. Soon after the Sun arose, and this day was called Irida (Sunday); the Moon appeared the next day, and it was called Handuda (Monday); and so on in successive days appeared planets, whose names have been attached to the days. Anguharuada (Mars, Tuesday); Buddadu (Mercury, Wednesday); Brahaspati (Jupiter, Thursday); Sikura (Venus, Friday); Senasura (Saturn, Saturday)."

This corresponds, with one doubtful exception, to the Saxon days of the week, an agreement tending to prove that the ancestors of the Goths, Saxons, &c. were related to the early Asiatic Buddhists. II. C.

CURIOUS SIGN.—A few years ago the following lines adorned a signboard, over the door of "one Sweeny," a nurseryman, living on the Douglas road, near Cork. They were illustrated by a glowing representation of a female, standing in a garden of roses, dressed in a robe of many colours, and armed with a rake and watering pot. As the sign has long since disappeared, it may be worth preserving in "N. & Q.":—

"All sorts of flower roots are here for sale,
From Tulips, Hyacinths, to Lilies of the Vale;
With Stove Exotics, and each green-house plant,
Those skilled in Botany may please to want."

R. D.

JAMES SMITH.—A letter of James Smith (Rejected Addresses) has just come into my hands. It contains the following, which I do not remember to have seen in print:—

"Epigram on a Certain dull Preacher.
"Whene'er your auditors to tire,
By long discourse you choose,
The fret work leaves the Gothic spire,
And settles in the pews."

F. G. W.

Exeter Coll., Oxford.

ANointed, USED IN A BAD SENSE.—I many times heard the word "anoointed" in a bad sense by poor people in this county (Gloucestershire), and have thought of making of it. To-day I have decided to do so; for, in conversation this morning with an old man who was detailing to me the various troubles were being heaped upon her through the grace conduct of her grandson—a young man whose defiant behaviour was in advance his years, which numbered but three only wound up her charge by the grand climactic epithet, "He's the most anoointed young he ever met in my life!" And this last September when in Worcestershire, a poor woman was speaking to me of an ill-conducted youth, him "an anoointed young vagabond." The phrase therefore, may be common to many English counties. I can only find it mentioned in one dictionary—the second edition (1864) of Mr. Ho Stang Dictionary, which thus explains the word

"ANointed, used in a bad sense, to express a rascality in any one; 'an ANointed Scoundrel,' as were the king of scoundrels.—Irish."

Does this suggestion point to the correct tion? CUTHBERT B.

ZLAD.—Coming into a new parish, the extremity of which lies in the hill country between Gloucester and Ross, I had to inquire my way. "Look e here, Sir; you kip to this here n and volly on till you do come to them housen, and that'll bring e up right into the Z In the name of "N. & Q.," thought I, what Zlad? I inquired diligently among the wise of the district, and all I could get in reply "Why, whar you be now Sir, that's the Z Will any Gloucestershire correspondent kindly liver me from the vagueness of this information and say whether the above is a geological term a provincialism? The district consists of a number of "squatters," whose houses are scattered at the base and over the side of one of the hills; it has occurred to me that Zlad may be after only a corruption of slade, though the term not seem to be applied to any of the adjoining valleys. F. PHILLIPS

Queries.

ARISTOPHANES.—There is an English version of a play of Aristophanes, The World's Idol Phidus, the God of Wealth, by H. H. B. 1650. the Brit. Museum Catalogue, the author is not (Burnell?). Is anything more known of him? There is a Henry Burnell, author of Lamda a play, 1641, but his initials of course are H. not H. H. B. R.

JOHN BLACKADER.—

"John Blackader, Passages from the Life of, by the Rev. J. Newton of Olney, 1806."

Will any one, possessing this scarce book, kindly inform me what account is given of John Blackader's parentage and descent? F. M. S.

229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

BUCHANAN JESTS.—Among the popular chap-books in Scotland was a very remarkable one, entitled "The witty and entertaining Exploits of George Buchanan, who was commonly called the King's Fool." This strange farrago has been ascribed to Dugald Grahame, the poetical historian of the Rebellion, 1745,—a fact which it would be desirable to verify if possible. It would be useful to know whether there is any edition earlier than that dated Glasgow, 1760, of which I possess a copy consisting of forty pages.

There surely must have been some old tradition relative to Buchanan's fondness for practical jokes and merry jests; otherwise it is not very intelligible how the learned historian and admirable Latin versifier of the Psalms could have had such coarse and indelicate "exploits" ascribed to him.

J. M.

BURNING OF HERETICS.—At a meeting held on Tuesday, Nov. 7, at the Mansion House, for the promotion of middle-class education in the city, one of the speakers, Alderman Waterlow, suggested, in addition to a resolution proposed, words which would have the effect of taking in "funds left for such obsolete purposes as burning heretics, for instance." The worthy alderman's remark led me to inquire into the matter, and an old member of the Corporation informs me that money was left to several of the city wards for purchasing faggots for burning heretics; that there was formerly in Cornhill a place of deposit for such faggots; that certain sums of money are annually allotted to the members of several wards, which they receive from the Ironmongers' Company, who are trustees of the fund. Believing that some of the readers of "N. & Q." may be able to supply a note on this interesting matter, I send you the following query: when, by whom, and what funds were left for the purpose of burning heretics? PHILIP S. KING.

CHAFF.—In The Standard, Dec. 13, a reviewer writes:—

"Chaff, itself derived from an Anglo-Saxon word, signifying jac, and used to this day in Yorkshire in the same sense, has become an established word in our tongue, although Mr. Disraeli some two years ago declared that it had not then entered into our parliamentary vocabulary."

A reference to Mr. Disraeli's speech would much oblige S. S. L.

CHAIR SUPERSTITION.—In Hone's Year Book, p. 252, it is said that turning a chair round two or three times is a sign of quarrelling. I suppose it is meant twisting it round on one leg. Can any of your readers inform me if this notion still exists, or is it to be noted as one of the lost superstitions? A. A.

Poets' Corner.

CROSS WRITING.—In Cobbett's Weekly Register for January 7, 1826, he beseeches a correspondent not to write "across his writing." From what he says afterwards, we may infer that this practice had then become common. He says it is of female origin, which is probably the case, as ladies are very much addicted to it now. It is said of the Duchess of Marlborough, that she never put dots over her i's, to save ink. Can any similar instance be adduced of the practice of cross writing, or is anything known of its origin? W. C. B.

JOHN DUTHY, Esq., a magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant of Hampshire, published pamphlets on prices of provisions and corn, 1800 and 1801; and in 1839, after his death, appeared his Sketches of Hampshire (Winchester, 8vo.) When did he die? S. Y. R.

SEE OF EVREUX.—Radulphus de Diceto, and Benedict Abbot of Peterborough, speak of the Archbishop of Evreux. Roger de Hoveden and Carte (in his History of England) call this prelate a bishop. Which is the correct title?

HERMENTRUDE.

THE ITALIAN ST. SWITHIN.—Through the kindness of a gentleman connected with the Collegio di Gesù at Rome, I have the following weather proverb:—

"Se piova Santa Bibiana Piovera quaranta giorni, ed una settimana."

This is a week's more rain than our St. Swithin is said to bestow. Would the gentleman (who did not send his name), or any other of your correspondents, further favour me by giving me the legend of this saint, and also the day dedicated to her? The like information as to St. Médard, after whose day, it is said in France, there will be forty days' rain, would also oblige. A. A.

Poets' Corner.

KNOX THE REFORMER.—May I ask the aid of any genealogist, or descendant of Luyse or Lucy Welch, the reformer's granddaughter, in clearing up the following points? Mrs. Welch (her mother), youngest daughter of the reformer, died at Ayr, a few days after the 8th January, 1625 (date of her will), leaving two sons and an only daughter. The daughter married the Rev. James (?) Wither-spoon, a "clergyman of the Kirk of Scotland," and had a son John (?), also a clergyman of the same church. This last had a son James, born 1691, and parish clergyman of Yester, co. Haddington, from 1720 till 1759, and his son John Witherspoon, D.D. and LL.D. became celebrated as a theological writer, and was the President of the College of New Jersey, U.S. of America. His sister Ann was my great-grandmother.

I wish to know of what parishes (if any) the husband and son of Luyse Welch was incumbent? (probably in Haddingtonshire); who the son married; dates of their marriages? and any other information regarding them. ANGLO-SCOTUS.

LEWELYN'S VERSION OF DAVID'S PSALMS.—Has any collector of the numerous metrical versions of David's Psalms ever met with a copy of the following?—

"A Version of the Psalms of David. By William Lewelyn, Minister of the Gospel at Leominster. Printed by P. Davis and F. Harris, Leominster. 1786, 12mo, pages 392 and viii."

No copy of this book is in any private collection that I am aware of, and I am inclined to think that I have met with the author's own copy, and that possibly the work was suppressed by the author. The learned versifier was author of several treatises on the Scriptures from 1783—1801. Can any correspondent of "N. & Q." give any account of him? DANIEL SEDGWICK.

81, Sun Street, City.

WILLIAM MILBURN, Esq., of the East India Company's Service, published Oriental Commerce, 2 vols. 4to, 1813. An improved edition by Thomas Norton [Thornton], in 1 vol. 8vo, came out in 1824 [1825] after Mr. Milburn's decease. I wish to ascertain—1. What office Mr. Milburn held under the company? 2. When he died? An account of Thomas Norton [Thornton] will also be acceptable. S. Y. R.

ISLAND OF NEDDRUM.—Sir John de Courcy, in the year 1179, granted to the monks of St. Bega Coupland, the church-abbey of Neddrum, founded on this island, together with two-thirds of the profits of the land.* Can any person tell where this island of Neddrum is?

Gildas [Nennius] calls the Isle of Man by the name Eubonia. What is the origin of this word? J. R. O.

THE PALLIUM.—I am much obliged to your able correspondent, F. C. H., for his kindness in translating the very interesting and remarkable passage respecting St. Jerom being a "Ciceronian," taken from his Epistle to Eustochium.

I wish to ask the same obliging correspondent a few queries respecting the Pallium.

1. What is the origin of this ornament? Was it introduced into the Latin Church from the East? If so, about what period?

2. What is it made of, and how is it worn?

3. Of what especial virtues is it considered to be the emblem? Is Du Cange correct in his opinion that the Pallium represents the Blessed Trinity, and is identical with the "Rationale" of the Jewish Church?

[* Our correspondent should have given his authority for the statement.—ED.]

4. Does the jurisdiction of a Metropolitan depend upon his reception of the Pallium?

5. Can any examples be found of Archbishops having been buried with their Palliums?

6. What are the particular days, or festivals, on which the Pallium is to be worn?

I hope the answers to these questions will not give too much trouble to F. C. H. Answers from any other correspondent on the subject will be very acceptable. I am aware that there are many writers who speak on the use and origin of the Pallium, such as Cardinal Bona, Thomassin, Van Espen, Du Cange, De Marca, Catalani, Ferraris, and Benedict XIV., de Synodo, &c. But I have no means of referring to these writers.

J. DALTON.

SKARTH FAMILY.—Will your correspondent A. O. V. P. inform me if the two pamphlets he possesses of Deeds relating to Orkney and Zetland, MCCCXXXIII., and Acts and Statutes of the Lacting Sheriffs and Justice Courts within Orkney and Zetland, MDCII—MDCXLIV., contain any mention of the name of the family of Skarth, who held land by udal tenure, and were members of the council during that period? F. S. D.

SLANG PHRASES.—Why do the French use the term "Entre deux vins," and we "Half seas over," to express drunkenness? G. O. L.

ST. HILDA'S FISH.—In the year 1402, John Prior of Durham, presented John de Gyseburne to the chapelry of St. Hilda, in the parish of Jar-row (Surtees' Durham, ii. 98). The new chaplain was to have the manse and its lands, like his predecessors, with various oblations and emoluments including the "St. Hilde fish" offered by devout parishioners. What were "St. Hilda's fish?" and may not these fish in some way explain the presence of the fish that is incised on the well-known monumental slab at Gateshead?*

CHARLES BOUTELL.

TENNYSON.—Ralph Tennyson, who died in 1735, father of Michael Tennyson of Preston, co. York, is the first recorded ancestor of the family of which the Poet-Laureate is so distinguished an ornament. There is, however, in the family a tradition of long-standing that it descends from a collateral relative of Archbishop Tenison. According to Sir Bernard Burke's Landed Gentry, the families of Tenison, of Kilronan Castle, and Tenison, of Port Nelligan, both of Ireland, belong to the same house as the archbishop. If any of your numerous genealogical correspondents can assist me to connect Ralph Tennyson with the family of Dr. Thomas Tenison, I shall be much obliged.

[* Consult a note in Alban Butler's Lives of the Saints, art. "St. Hilda, Nov. 18."—ED.]

J. B. P.

WINTHROP PEDIGREE.—Where can I see the best pedigree of the English-American family of Winthrop?

A. O. V. P.

Queries with Answers.

PEG TANKARDS.—I shall be much obliged if you can inform me when peg tankards were used, what date, and for what purpose to promote temperance, by never allowing a man to go beyond his peg, or, to promote good fellowship, by not allowing him to drink more than his neighbour? I have got a wooden tankard, beautifully carved, with a date 1698 on it, which appears to have been recently cut. It has the names in Latin of the seven deadly sins, and the months of the year round it; and an inscription in Latin on the cover, around a jollification—two fiddlers, a man embracing a woman, and a lot of cups. There are three pegs in it. The whole thing woefully worm-eaten. There is no date on anything but the handle; on which are, seemingly as old as itself, the numbers 9, 8, 1, one on each side, which is square. One of the figures on the lid has a ruff on, and three men have long hair. On the handle is one man killing another, and the name "Cain" cut in. The Latin inscriptions are all cut out, that is, in cameo. I shall be glad if anyone can tell me something about this.

J. HAY.

2, Upper Chelsea Row, Chelsea.

[For the invention of the peg-tankard we are indebted to no less a personage than Dunstan, Archbishop of Canterbury, A.D. 960—988, who, to check the vicious habit of excessive drinking among the Anglo-Saxons, advised King Edgar to adopt the ingenious custom of marking or pegging their cups at certain distances, to restrain one man from taking a greater draught than his companions, which for a time lessened the evil, though it proved in the end productive of much greater excesses. These tankards had in the inside a row of eight pins one above another from top to bottom, and held two quarts, so that there was a gill of ale, that is, half a pint Winchester measure, between each pin. The first person that drank was to empty the tankard to the first peg or pin; the second was to empty to the next pin, &c.; by which means the pins were so many measures to the computators, making them all drink alike, or the same quantity; and as the distance of the pins was such as to contain a large draught of liquor, the company would be very liable, by this method, to become intoxicated, especially when, if they drank short of the pin, or beyond it, they were obliged to drink again. Hence the expression, "A peg too low." For this reason, in Archbishop Anselm's Canons, made in council at London, A.D. 1102, priests are enjoined not to go to drinking-bouts, nor to drink to pegs. The words are, "Ut presbyteri non eant ad potationes, nec ad pinnas bibant." (Wilkins's Concilia, i. 382.) Fosbroke (Encyclopædia of Antiquities, ed. 1825, i. 259) informs us, that "a very fine specimen of these peg-tankards, of undoubted Anglo-Saxon work, formerly belonging to the Abbey of Glastonbury, is now in the possession of Lord Arundel of Wardour. It holds two quarts, and formerly had eight pegs inside, dividing the liquor into half pints. On the lid is the Crucifixion, with the Virgin and John, one on each side the cross. Round the cup are carved the twelve apostles." This tankard is engraved in the Archæologia, xi. 411.]

"ABBEY OF KILKHAMPTON."—A pamphlet of 116 pages, bearing this title, was published in 1788. It consisted of prophetic epitaphs for all the remarkable persons of that time, and is entitled on the first page, Monumental Records for 1980. Only a few letters are given of each name, so that many of them cannot now be identified. Some, however, are easily explained, such as Edm . . . d B . . . ke; C ——— F . . . x; J . . . W . . . kes; J . . . K . . . ble, and R B Sh n. The preface speaks of a previous edition, published in 1780, which "the actual decease of the personages therein described" had rendered unserviceable. What is known of either of the editions? W. C. B.

[This very curious production had a rapid sale, and passed through at least eight editions between the years 1780 and 1788. The author's strictures and allusions on the celebrated characters of his day are thrown into the form of monumental inscriptions, ready made against the arrival of Death, and conceived much in the spirit and style of the celebrated epitaph on Colonel Chartres. Like Jupiter and Venus in a cloudy night, a few bright characters shine forth amidst the general obscurity. On the site of the church of Kilkhampton, which was visited by Mr. Hervey, the Mediator, in 1746, the author supposes an Abbey to have been erected in 1783, and that the most honourable personages were there interred. The Third Edition, corrected, of the Second Part, 4to, 1780, contains a General Index to both Parts. The authorship is unknown.]

LADSON: ADSOM.—In the parish of Hanwell, Oxfordshire, is a piece of rushy pasture-ground (about four acres), called Ladson; and in the adjacent parish of Horley is a similar piece of ground, named Adsom. What is the meaning and derivation of these words?

In Hanwell church are some handsome monuments to the Cope family, who were formerly lords of the manor, and patrons of the living. Several pieces of iron armour are suspended in the chancel. Sir John Cope, the hero of Preston Pans, was of this family.

The line ended in an heiress, Miss Diana Cope, who, by her marriage with the Duke of Dorset, carried the estate into the Sackville family. That line also failing, Hanwell has become the property, by marriage, of Earl De la Warr. (Burke's Peerage.) Hanwell is three miles north of Banbury. W. D.

[At a distance from the spot, with no means of tracing local circumstances, which may have given occasion to local terms, or of ascertaining variations of spelling which, in the course of ages, may have considerably disguised the original names of places, it is hazardous to attempt an explanation in such instances as those now proposed. We would, therefore, simply suggest, as each "piece of ground" appears to be rushy, and therefore moist and needing drainage, that the old English words, lade, a ditch or drain, and ade, to cut a deep gutter, may afford some clue to the etymology of Ladson and Adsom.]

"DURANCE VILE."—Will any of your correspondents say where the phrase "In durance vile" is to be found? In a book of quotations, the following lines are stated to be in an epistle, "Esopus to Maria," ascribed to Burns:—

"In durance vile here must I wake and weep,
And all my frowzy couch in sorrow steep."

No such poem as "Esopus to Maria," is to be found in Burns's Works. If the lines are not by Burns, by whom are they? Burke uses the words "vile durance." See Richardson's Dictionary.

W. S. J.

[The words "durance vile" will be found in Burns's poem, "Epistle from Esopus to Maria." See Burns's Life and Works, by Robert Chambers, 8vo, 1856, vol. iv. p. 54. The phrase was in use before Burns's day, for it occurs as a quotation in Trusler's Proverbs Exemplified, 12mo, 1790, p. 147: "Durance vile, and sad contagion." There is a corresponding phrase in the Second Part of King Henry IV., Act V. Sc. 5, where Pistol says:—

"Thy Doll, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,
Is in base durance."]

TYERS ON POPE.—Can you tell me when the first edition of Tyers's Historical Rhapsody on Pope was published? I have searched at the British Museum, and in every catalogue I can lay my hands on, but can find notice only of a second edition, published in 1782. J. O. HALLIWELL.

[The first edition of An Historical Rhapsody, with a worn-out head of Pope prefixed, was published at the close of the year 1781, and is noticed in the December number of the Gent's Mag. p. 579, and in the Monthly Review for January, 1782. We infer that the second edition came out in May, 1782, for in the "Advertisement to this Edition," Tyers says, "Some weeks ago, the second volume of Dr. Warton's [Essay on the Writings and Genius of Pope] made its appearance, as foretold in this publication." The second volume of Warton's Essay was issued in April, 1782.]

WALTON'S POLYGLOTT.—In the "loyal" copies of Walton's Polyglott, the 20th and 21st lines of the last page but one of the preface, read:—

"..... exemplar perfectum nobis suppeditavit:
Parisiis vir illustris. Dom. ——— Hardie, Linguarum
Orientalium peritissimus."

But the last four words are, at least in my copy, pasted over a former reading, viz.:—

"Gaulminus, eques, supplicum libellorum in Ash magister."

Can any one inform me why the learned Gilbert Gaulmin, "maitre des requêtes," should have been supplanted by (Claude?) Hardie, and who the latter was? J. H. B.

[Bishop Walton seems to have subsequently discovered that Gilbert Gaulmin, who had published notes on a Rabbinical life of Moses, and on several Greek romances, was simply a superficial supercilious pretender to critical knowledge; whereas Claude Hardie was a ripe scholar. Todd's Life of Bishop Walton, i. 816; Nichols's Literary Anecdotes, iv. 12.]

Replies.

ROBERT LEVETT.

(3rd S. VIII. 378.)

Your correspondent, SCHIN, writing, I suppose, from recollection, has given a verse of Dr. Johnson's pathetic elegy on the death of Levett, with a variation which the author would not have approved: prosaic "useful care" for briek, if not poetic, "ready help." The following is the verse as it stands in Chalmers's and in Croker's editions of Boswell:—

"In Misery's darkest caverns known,
His ready help was ever nigh,"
Where hopeless Anguish pour'd his groan,
And lonely Want retir'd to die."

Along with the correction of this comparatively trivial error, allow me to point out the gross injustice with which Levett has been treated by our popular historian, Macaulay, who says, speaking of Johnson's household,—

"An old quack doctor, named Levett, who bled and dosed coalheavers and hackney coachmen, and received for fees

[* Although the reading preferred by our correspondent, "ready help," does certainly appear in some reprints of Johnson's Elegy on Levett, we think it sufficiently evident that SCHIN, in preferring "useful care," did not write from fancy, even if he wrote "from recollection." "Useful care" is the reading in the Gent. Mag. of August, 1783, p. 693, where the poem appears at length; and this, we suspect, was the reading communicated by Johnson himself, as Johnson was living at the time when it was published. The same reading appears in Sir J. Hawkins's Life of Johnson, 1787, p. 556; the same in the great Oxford edition of Johnson's Works, 1825, i. 181. All these authorities, as well as others, give SCHIN's reading of the line:—

"His useful care was ever nigh."—Ed.]

crusts of bread, bits of bacon, glasses of gin, and sometimes a little copper, completed this strange menagerie." (Biographies, by Lord Macaulay, p. 121.)

For part of this obloquy there is, indeed some authority in Boswell, who tells us that his fees were "sometimes very small sums, sometimes whatever provisions his patients could afford him," but according to Macaulay, the crusts of bread, &c., were the rule, the coin, even in the form of copper, the exception, without any allusion to higher fees, which are clearly implied in Boswell. This, however, is mere embellishment or exaggeration; but where is the evidence that Levett was "a quack"? I can find none, but very satisfactory proof that he was a well-educated practitioner. In the Gentleman's Magazine for February, 1785, p. 101, there is a letter signed "Irene," referred to by Malone, and written, he believed, "by the late George Steevens, Esq.," having besides every appearance of authenticity, in which we are told that Levett—

"was born at Hull, in Yorkshire, and became early in life a writer at a coffee-house in Paris. The surgeons who frequented it, finding him of an inquisitive turn, and attentive to their conversation, made a purse for him, and gave him some instruction in their art. They afterwards furnished him with the means of other knowledge, by procuring him free admission to such lectures in pharmacy and anatomy as were read by the ablest professors of that period."

Afterwards, when settled in London, "much of the day was employed in attendance on his patients, who were chiefly of the lowest rank of tradesmen;" but "the remainder of his hours he dedicated to Hunter's lectures, and to as many different opportunities of improvement as he could meet with on the same gratuitous conditions." This was not the education, nor could it lead to the practice, of a quack. Accordingly, Dr. Johnson declared "he should not be satisfied, though attended by all the College of Physicians, unless he had Mr. Levett with him."

"When fainting Nature called for aid,
And hovering Death prepared the blow,
His vigorous remedy displayed
The power of art without the show."

As to his general character, "Irene" tells us that his single failure was an occasional departure from sobriety, and that "though he took all that was offered him, he demanded nothing from the poor, nor was known, in any instance, to have enforced the payment of what was justly his due." And Johnson calls him his "old and faithful friend," "a very useful and very blameless man," "innocent, sincere, and kind, of every friendless name the friend;" and yet, according to Macaulay, he was but a wild animal in a "menagerie"! D.

VARIOUS PRONUNCIATIONS OF "OUGH."

(3rd S. viii. 434.)

The following jeu d'esprit illustrating this subject has been shown to me as the production of our late premier, Viscount Palmerston. Whether this be the case or not, as I have never seen it in print, I think it is worthy of preservation in the pages of "N. & Q."

Dublin.

"A literary Squabble on the Pronunciation of Monckton Milnes's Title.

"The Alphabet rejoiced to hear,
That Monckton Milnes was made a peer;
For in the present world of letters,
But few, if any, were his betters.
So an address, by acclamation,
They voted, of congratulation.
And OUGHT and N
Were chosen to take up the pen,
Possessing each an interest vital
In the new Peer's baronial title.
'Twas done in language terse and telling,
Perfect in grammar and in spelling.
But when 'twas read aloud—oh, mercy!
There sprung up such a controversy
About the true pronunciation
Of said baronial appellation.
The vowels O and U averred
They were entitled to be heard.
The consonants denied the claim,
Insisting that they mute became.
Johnson and Walker were applied to,
Sheridan, Bailey, Webster, tried too;
But all in vain—for each picked out
A word that left the case in doubt.
O, looking round upon them all,
Cried, 'If it be correct to call
THROUGH "thruo,"
HOUGH must be "Hoo."
Therefore there must be no dispute on
The question, we should say "Lord Hooton."'
U then did speak, and sought to show
He should be doubled, and not O.
For sure if 'ought' was 'awt,' then nought on Earth could the title be but Hawton.
H, on the other hand, said he,
In 'cough' and 'trough,' stood next to G,
And like an F was then looked off on,
Which made him think it should be Hefton.
But G corrected H, and drew Attention other cases to:
'Lough' 'Rough' and 'Chough,' more than enough
To prove OUGH spelled 'uff.'
And growled out in a sort of gruff tone
They must pronounce the title 'Hufton.'
N said emphatically 'No,'
For DOUGH is 'Doh,'
And though (look there again) that stuff
At sea for fun, they nickname 'Duff.'
He should propose they took a vote on
The question should it not be 'Heton?'
Besides, in French 'twould have such force,
A Lord must be haut ton, of course.
High and more high contention rose,
From words they almost came to blows,
Till S, as yet, who had not spoke,
And dearly loved a little joke,
Put in his word, and said, 'Look here
Plough in this row must have a share.'

At this atrocious pun, each page
Of Johnson whiter grew with rage.
Bailey looked desperately cut up,
And Sheridan completely shut up.
Webster, who is no idle talker,
Made a sign signifying 'Walker,'
While Walker, who had been used badly,
Shook his old dirty dog-ears sadly.
But as we find in prose or rhyme,
A joke, made happily in time,
However poor, will often tend
The hottest argument to end,
And smother anger in a laugh,
So S succeeded with his chaff,
Containing, as it did, some wheat,
In calming this fierce verbal heat.
Authorities were all conflicting,
And S there was no contradicting.
PLOUGH was 'Plow'
Even 'enough' was called 'enow,'
And no one who preferred enough
Would dream of saying 'Speed the Pluff.'
So they considered it was wise
With S to make a compromise,
To leave no loop to hang a doubt on
By giving three cheers for Lord Houghton (Houghton)."
ALIEV.

T. A. II. gives us in ten lines five different modes of pronouncing the syllable ough; but in two lines it is possible to exhibit seven ways of pronouncing the same. For example—

"Though the tough cough and hiccough plough me through, O'er life's dark lough my course I still pursue."

It must be observed that the fourth example is often found spelt hiccough, though always pronounced hiccup.
F. C. H.

EIKON BASILIKE.

(3rd S. iii. 128, 170, 220, 254; v. 484; viii. 396.)

After so long a silence of your contributors on this interesting but difficult question, I read with pleasure the article of MR. J. H. SHORTHOUSE. I find that he also does not entertain the sanguine conviction of Dr. Wordsworth that the authorship of the book will "one day be made clear." I confined the expression of my doubts to the internal evidences; but every step taken in pursuit of truth is important, and therefore it is satisfactory to have demolished Mr. Hallam's theory as to the word "feral," by one simple fact.

I never for a moment, after reading all I could find on the subject, doubted that the King was the author; and therefore I rejoice that one so able as MR. SHORTHOUSE is searching in the direction of historical and external evidence for further proof.

The latter part of my former article turned toward the second, and minor question—the chronological bibliography of the Eikon Basilike—some fifty unnumbered editions of which were published within as many years after the murder of the King. At present I fear I could not devote sufficient time to the proposal I made almost a year and a half since, but would cheerfully render MR. SHORTHOUSE any assistance in my power.

If he will again turn to the paragraph respecting the "Embleme," he will see that my object was to get from E. B. A. "his reasons for thinking an inquiry in that direction might throw light on the subject of the first edition." I did not suppose the first edition without the "Embleme," but asked for evidence.

Finding that MR. SHORTHOUSE has recently perused Dr. Wordsworth's very valuable labours on Who wrote Eikon Basilike? I am constrained to say that I rose from it greatly instructed, but with a feeling of regret that the Rev. Doctor should have exhibited so much bitterness against Bishop Gauden. Those who are ranged on the King's side may be silent, even as to the bishop's morality. The conclusion, though not expressed, is inevitable. But the attacks upon his intellectual capacity, his learning, and his style and manner of writing, tend rather to weaken the effect of Dr. Wordsworth's Treatise—at least to those acquainted with the undoubted writings of Bishop Gauden.
W. LEE.

DIVISION OF THE BIBLE INTO VERSES.

(3rd S. viii. 67, 361.)

I am sorry that neither your space nor my leisure will allow me to supply all that JUXTA TURRIM asks for. Torshell, as quoted by him, is quite correct, for there were numerous divisions of Biblical books in ancient times. The Gospels in Greek were divided into what we may call chapters and sections. There were usually in Matthew, 68 chapters, 355 sections; in Mark, 48 chapters, 286 sections; in Luke, 83 chapters, 348 sections; in John, 18 chapters, 232 sections. But these figures are not uniform. The Coder Sinaiticus has no chapters: its sections are—Matt. 355; Mar. 233; Luke not given; John 232. The Alexandrian Coder has—Matt. 354 sections; Mar. 232; Luke, 342; and John, 231. Its chapters are as above. These sections are called Ammonian Sections, after Ammonius, a critic of the third century, who may have invented them. The Vatican Manuscript is peculiar: it has no sections, and its chapters are—Matt. 170; Mar. 62; Luke, 152; John, 80. In Acts it has two sets, amounting respectively to 69 and 36. St. Paul's Epistles are in similar chapters numbered consecutively and the other epistles are divided in like manner, but numbered separately. Thus James, 9; 1 Pet. 8, &c. What I have called chapters and sections are inserted in several printed Greek Testaments. The sections are usually connected with the Canons of Eusebius.

In some MSS. a stichometrical division is indicated in some books. The stichoi seem to have been not simply lines, but clauses or larger members of sentences. The books where this arrangement is most natural and simple are of course poetical, as the Psalms, but the principle was applied to many other books. For example, the Sinaitic Codex has at the end of some books the number of stichoi contained in them, thus: 2 Cor. 612; Gal. 312; Eph. 312; Phil. 200; Col. 300; 2 Thess. 180; Heb. 750; 1 Tim. 250; 2 Tim. 180, and Titus, 96.

The stichometrical arrangement of poetical books I have seen in Greek, Hebrew, Latin, and Ethiopic manuscripts. In the Syriac it is implied, as in the Psalms in the English Prayer-Book, by the punctuation, but also indicated by the figures prefixed to each Psalm, thus: Ps. i. is said to have 14 pethgomé (i. e. stichoi); Ps. ii. has 28; Ps. iii. has 17; Ps. iv. has 20; Ps. v. has 27, and so on.

The old Syriac version frequently gives the number of pethgomé (stichoi) in a book. Thus at the end of the following books we have the figures appended: Genesis, 4590; Exodus 3626; Levit. 2454; Num. 3521; Deut. 2793. The last is followed by the sum of the whole in the Pentateuch. Job has 2553, and Josh. 2167. There are still other divisions in these seven books. Genesis is divided into two sets of sections, one of 34 and one of 78. Of the former, Exod. has 26; Levit. 20; Num. 36; Deut. 20; Job 15, and Josh. 18. These are numbered separately for each book, and continuously for the whole seven, making in all 169. The other divisions are only numbered for each book thus: Gen. 78; Exod. 44; Lev. 20; Num. 26; Deut. 28; Job 14, and Joshua 19.

As the ancient divisions of this venerable translation have seldom or never been fully described, let me add that the New Testament is divided into lessons for stated days, and shows no trace of chapters and verses. The portions or lessons are these: Matt. 77; Mar. 43; Luke, 75; John, 53; Acts, 69; Rom. 27; 1 Cor. 27; 2 Cor. 19; Gal. 10; Eph. 11; Philip. 7; Col. 7; 1 Thess. 6; 2 Thess. 1; 1 Tim. 6; 2 Tim. 5; Tit. 2; Phil. 1; Heb. 22; James, 6; 1 Pet. 7; 2 Pet. 2; 1 John, 6; 2 John, 1; 3 John, 1; Jude, 1; Revelation not divided.

The divisions in the Hebrew books were usually determined by the parallelism of poetry, and the sense of prose. The Pentateuch has two sets of divisions peculiar to itself. Cardinal Hugo has the credit of dividing the Latin Bible into chapters such as we use, and of subdividing these chapters by means of letters at equal distances in the margin. This was in 1248. In the fifteenth century, we are told that Rabbi Nathan divided the Old Testament into verses, and in 1551 Robert Stephens gave the world a New Testament with the verses as in actual use.

I will not prolong my notes, but close with a reference to Scrivener's Introduction to Criticism of New Testament, pp. 44-60; and Suicer's Thesaurus (s. v. orixos, more particularly) for curious and valuable information. Mr. Scrivener gives a table of ancient and modern divisions of the New Testament, which is very useful, but might be enlarged.

B. H. C.

BY AND BY.

(3rd S. viii. 348.)

Dr. Richardson says, "No attempt has yet been made to account for this phrase," yet he himself a few lines further down quotes from Tyrwhitt's Notes on Chaucer a hint which, followed up, seems to give a clue to the origin and development of the phrase. In the "Romaunt of the Rose," 4577, occurs the following passage:—

"He said, 'In thanke I shall it take,
And high maister eke thee make,
If wickednesse ne reve it thee,
But soone I trow that shall nat bee.'
These were his wordes by and by,
It seemed he loved me truly."

Here it evidently means "distinctly," or, as we should now say, "one by one." By (one) and by (one).

In the "Knight's Tale" also—

"And so befell, that in the tas they found

Two yonge knyghtes liggig by and by."

Here the meaning is similar—"one by one." "One by one" naturally leads to the idea of order, regularity, continuousness. In Robert Brunne we read—

"The chartre was read on hi in Westmynstere and schewed,
Ilk poynte bi and bi, to lerid and to lewed."

Here this latter idea is fully expressed.

In the following passage from Stowe, the phrase is still further developed:—

"We are all like to be utterly undone and destroyed for your sake; our houses shall by and by be thrown downe upon our heads," &c.

Here "by and by" is somewhat ambiguous. It may be understood to mean one by one, or continuously, or very soon, or in our modern sense of "in a short time." Previous to Stowe's time, in the sixteenth century, the meaning was evidently "at once," "immediately." Our translators of the Scriptures in that century employed "by and by" as the equivalent for etotus and etavris. This runs through not only our Authorised Version, but those of Tyndale, A.D. 1534; Cranmer, 1539; Geneva, 1557; and Rheims, 1582.

* These passages are all quoted by Richardson.

In Wickliff's version, the same words are rendered by anon, "on one" or "in one" (moment, under-stood.)

It must be remembered that anciently the word one was not pronounced as at present "won," but as the letters express, "one," to rhyme with "stone." By one and by one would therefore easily slide into "by and by," leaving out the last syllable.

In explanation of the process by which a phrase first signifying distinctness, order, arrangement, and then instant action, should degenerate into the signification of postponement and delay, we have some analogies in other tongues. The French phrase "tout de suite" has followed the same course as our own just mentioned. Its original meaning is, "one after the other." Then it came to signify directly, immediately; whilst at present every habitué of a French restaurant is aware that "tout à l'heure" and "tout de suite" may fairly be rendered in English "by and by."

The origin of many of the adverbs expressing quickness and immediate action is a curious study. The word cōtus, rendered by our translators "by and by," signified originally a straight line or course, then continuity; and, transferred metaphorically from space to time, was applied to continuous action. So of the Latin equivalents, protinus meant originally straight along or forwards; statim, on the spot; French, "sur le champ"; continuo meant in an uninterrupted line, like Ger. unmittelbar, or our own immediately, without any break or interference. The German bold, which is used in the same sense, is our own word bold, and is not found in Old German in the modern sense of quickly. What is done boldly is usually done quickly, and hence the change of application and meaning.

J. A. P.

Sandyknowe, Wavertree.

MS. COPIES OF THE ANCIENT ITALIC VERSION OF THE BIBLE.

(3rd S. viii. 351.)

The Codex Veronensis appears to have been known to Blanchinus long before the publication of the Evangeliarium Quadruplex (Romæ, folio, 1749, not 1748).

"Annus jam agitur xv, ex quo . . . auctor mihi fuisti, ut Codicem illum . . . Bibliothecæ . . . Capituli Veronensis . . . typis ederem, atque illustrarem . . . Descriptionem tamen Codicis Evangeliarum Veronensis . . . heic non attexam, quoniam liber penes Vos est," &c. (Blanchini Epistola ad J. F. Musellum, S. Veron. Eccles. Canonici Archipresbyterum. Prolegomena, fol. 89.)

As to the Codex Vercellensis, Blanchinus says,

"Ego divinæ providentiæ ductu felici faustoque a Doctissimo . . . Viro S. Marchione Maffeo . . . anno 1726 . . . edoctus fueram Vercellis exstare Codicem Evangeliarum tantæ vetustatis, ut Veronensem nostrum . . . (quem tunc in aedibus Capitularibus a me primum exscriptum usque ad annum 1782. quo Romam veni, semper dei socium, & tanquam contubernalem habui," &c. (Proleg. fol. 65.) "Cl. Mabillonius, To. 1. Itineris Italicæ . . . de nostro Codice Vercellensi hæc scribit," &c. . . "Doctissimus quoque Montfauconius die xxi. Maji Vercellæ ivit, atque Eusebianum Codicem in Diario Italicæ . . . ita descripsit," &c. (Proleg. fol. 64.)

To the Cardinal Bishop of Brescia, Blanchinus writes:—

" . . . Cl. Viro Philippo Abbati Garbellio Patris Brixiano Preposito Ecclesiæ Pontis vici . . . maximam gratiam habenda est . . . qui . . . suam industriam in e totam contulit, ut e Regio Monasterio S. Julii insignem illum Codicem Evangeliorum . . . primum omnium erant, exscriberet, atque illustraret," &c. (Evangel. Quadruplex, fol. CDLXXVII., Proleg. fol. 2-46.)

And Garbellus to Blanchinus:—

"Mabillonius ipse in itinera, quod per Italiam instituit, cum Brixiam inviseret, omnes hæc vetusti Evi reliquias clam habuit; nemine e nostratibus faciem præferente." (Proleg. fol. 5.)

In the Prolegomena, "D. Joh. Martiansy . . . in edit. Vulgat. Evangelii sec. S. Matthæum, descripti ex Codicibus Corbejensi, & San-Germansensi," &c. (fol. 55, 56), he says:—

"Unum, vel duos profero testes V. C. F. Demarès, et Stephanum imprimis Bahusium. . . . Is ergo usu et volutatione innumerabilium MSS. codicum . . . Bibliothecæ Colbertinæ subactus, Corbejensem . . . Matthæi codicem ante octingentos annos scriptum esse mihi concessit." "Dixi conservatos fuisse codices nostros in Monasteriis insignioribus . . . Priorem enim codicem MS. celebre Monasterium Antiquæ Corbejæ in Francia servavit. Alterum superstitem nobis tribuit Monasterii hujus sancti Germani a Pratis Bibliotheca. Ambo hodie ad-servantur in eadem Bibliotheca."

JOSEPH RIX, M.D.

WHIG AND TORY: ORIGIN OF THE TERMS.

(1st S. iv. 57, 164, 281, 492; vi. 520; x. 482; xi. 36; 2nd S. iii. 486; viii. 413.)

According to all your correspondents, the terms Whig and Tory originated in broils social as well political, and eventually served to distinguish the supporters of the rival Houses of Hanover and Stuart. But the occasion which gave rise to these designations, are variously assigned to different periods. MR. FRANCIS CROSSLEY—who traces the use of the name "Whiggammore, or big-saddle thieves," to the effect of the border wars—states that it was transferred during the Civil War, and applied by the King's party to their opponents (iv. 164). This derivation, which appears to be sanctioned by Sir Walter Scott (x. 482, Cf. The Lay of the Last Minstrel, notes^o), is given in

"The vocation," says Scott, "pursued by our ancient Borderers, may be justified on the authority of the most polished of the ancient nations;" and he refers to Thucydides, i. 4. "This in effect is the account given us, of the same disposition of the old Germans, by Caesar: 'Latrocinia,' says he, 'nullam habent indolentiam, quæ extra fines cujusque civitatis sunt.' And the reason ap-

Burnet's History of his own Time, vol. i. p. 43; where it is stated that the second application to the enemies of the Court occurred in 1648, and is inserted in Johnson's Dictionary, and by Kirkton in his History of the Church of Scotland. These etymologists, Johnson and Kirkton, find the first use of the word in the traffic between the Highlanders and Lowlanders. But MR. DAVID STEVENS adds (iv. 281), that Roger North, and the historians Laing and Lingard, were of opinion that the original Scotch Whigs were called so from the word whig being vernacular in Scotland for sour whey, which was a common drink with the people: compare the extract, from the Mémoires des Trevoux, which I have subjoined. By others it is derived from the initial letters in "We hope in God" (2nd S. iii. 486; viii. 413).

The word Tory—which, according to Burton (Cromwellian Diary) and Johnson, is said to be the Irish word torae, i. e. give me; according to Lingard toringham, to pursue for the sake of plunder, and which signifies the most despicable savages among the wild Irish, "Tories and wild Americans" (vi. 520)—was, according to North, transferred by the Exclusioners to the Yorkists (iv. 281); but Lingard traces the name to certain parties in Ireland, who refused to submit to Cromwell (iv. 492). This opinion is supported by Rapin. The Cavaliers, who in the reign of Charles II. occupied the lands of the Whigs, were consequently called Tories, or brigands (xi. 36).

In the Mémoires pour l'Histoire des Sciences et des Beaux Arts, par Trevoux, Jan. 1703, there is a review of Lettres, Mémoires, et Actes concernant la guerre présente, containing the following remarks, p. 427:—

"On trouvera à la page 74, l'explication de ces deux mots si repetez dans les nouvelles d'Angleterre, Wighs et Thoris. Wigh est un terme Irlandois qui signifie petit lait: et Thorie signifie dans la même langue un voleur. Sous le règne de Charles II. ceux qui tenoient le parti de la Cour en Irlande appelloient leurs ennemis Wighs; marquant par ce nom l'état misérable où ils étoient réduits. Cachez dans les montagnes sans autre nourriture que du petit lait, ces malheureux traioient les partisans de la Cour de Voleurs, Thoris. Aujourd'hui ces noms distinguent deux factions qui partagent le Parlement d'Angleterre; la faction des Presbytériens porte le nom de Wighs, la faction de l'Eglise Anglicane porte celui de Thoris. Le Prince d'Orange étoit à la tête des Wighs, ils dominoient sous son règne. Aujourd'hui les Thoris ont le dessus."

BIBLIOTHECAR. CHETHAM.

appears from what he had just told us: "in pace, nullus est communis magistratus; sed principes regionum atque pagorum inter suos jus dicunt, controversiasque minuunt," De Bello Gall. l. vi. § 21. — Hurd's Lectures on Chivalry and Romance, Works, vol. iv., Letter iv.

LORD HAILES (3rd S. viii. 175.)—SCOTUS is not perfectly correct when he says that "Lord Hailes is represented, through his daughter, by Sir James Fergusson, Bart., of Kilkerran, M.P. for Ayrshire." Sir James is indeed the legal representative, or heir general; but the actual, real, ostensible, representative is his younger brother Charles Dalrymple, Esq., of Hailes. Both gentlemen are the sons of the late Sir Charles Dalrymple Fergusson, of Kilkerran and Hailes, Baronet, whose mother was the second daughter of Lord Hailes. The elder daughter, Miss Dalrymple of Hailes, died about thirty years ago, when Sir Charles succeeded to the estate. The last male representative was Sir John P. Dalrymple, of Hailes, Bart., who seems to have been a cousin, or a nephew, of Lord Hailes; and to have got nothing but the title, and who died in or about 1839. Mr. Dalrymple is my next neighbour, though a mile distant: for my windows look into New Hailes Park, which contains the family mansion of these Dalrymples, five miles east of Edinburgh. The estate of Hailes, from which they take their distinctive addition, is in East Lothian, fifteen miles further east. It contains the remains of an old castle, formerly the residence of the notorious James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, Duke of Orkney, &c. V. S. V.

THOMAS VINCENT (3rd S. viii. 391) was elected from Westminster School to a scholarship at Trinity College, Cambridge, 1617; matriculated March 28, 1618; B.A. 1621-2; Fellow 1624; M.A. 1625; B.D. 1632. We suppose that he died about 1641. He has verses in various University collections, 1623 to 1631.

C. H. & THOMPSON COOPER.

Cambridge.

SIR HENRY RAEBURN (3rd S. viii. 235, 278, 315.) Great pressure on my time has prevented my looking further into the Raeburn question till now. I cannot at present throw any light upon the Leslies, or say how they acquired Deanhaugh, afterwards called St. Bernard's. My impression was, that the whole of the Dean property belonged to the old family of Nisbet, raised to the baronetage 1660, now extinct in the male line; but represented on the female side by the Riddells, late of Granton. One member being the late talented and well-known antiquary, John Riddell, who is buried in the Dean Cemetery, which was carved out of the property long held by his maternal ancestors.

Though Raeburn's father was a tradesman, it has been supposed he was descended from the old family of Raeburn, or Ryburn, of that ilk.

The Raeburn monument, referred to by Sr., has long since been removed from the West Kirk, and was replaced by a new one bearing the simple words upon it: "Henry Raeburn, St. Bernard's, 1702." The old one had a Latin inscription upon it in memory of his eldest son Peter, which will be found in Duncan's Epitaphs, and which may be translated thus:—

"Sacred to the memory of Peter Raeburn, eldest son of Henry Raeburn and Anne Edgar, who (distinguished for the gifts of understanding, and adorned with modesty of disposition; dear to all his friends, but greatly beloved by his parents, to whom he never caused grief, nor even the least uneasiness except when they bitterly mourned him snatched away in the flower of youth, in the seventeenth year of his age, alas too soon!) reached his latest day the 6th of February, A.D. 1798."

The family of Vere, formerly written Weir, late of Stonebyres—whom Sp. intimates Raeburn, through his wife, was connected with—were undoubtedly of ancient lineage; and are now, I apprehend, represented by Mr. Hope Vere, the property of Stonebyres being possessed by General Monteith Douglas, C.B.

W. R. C.

Tweedside.

DUTCH EPITAPH: THE LEARNED PIG (3rd S. vi. 513; vii. 141.)—Miræus gives a brief memoir of Pighius, and two epitaphs; one, ascribed to Jo. Latomus, is the second quoted by Burman; the other confirms Paulus Jovius, as to Pighius's want of beauty. It is—

"MYRTEI,

"Qui extremâ Batavum profectus orâ, non bello ore, animo, sed omniumque præclaris studio scientiarum, pro republicâ et optimâ Quiritum sedē, acer stetit hostis in Lutherum, Albertus jacet hic. Sacrum sepulchro datus, maxime Pontifex, et undam."—Elogia Illustrum Belgii Scriptorum, p. 56. Antwerpæ, 1602.

W. D.

PASSAGE IN LOCKE (3rd S. viii. 203.)—K. R. C. will find this thought expounded and illustrated in Isaac Taylor's Physical Theory of another Life. NEWINGTONENSIS.

GILRAY'S "SALUTE" (3rd S. viii. 351.)—Perhaps the following hints may help SEBASTIAN to identify who are the officers represented in this caricature. That they are portraits no one can doubt. The "Salute" was published July 10, 1797; and it is clear from the standard which the ensign is carrying, that the officers belonged to the fifth company of the Coldstream Guards. G. S.

LORD PALMERSTON (3rd S. viii. 443.)—The first time that I can find Lord Palmerston represented in Punch with a sprig of myrtle (?) in his mouth, is in No. 708, Feb. 1855, immediately after his taking the "supreme command"; but I imagine that the twig was intended not to refer to his being Premier, but to his fighting qualities, a symbol of his "being game." (See the costermonger in the Cartoon of No. 684, &c. &c.)

Mr. Toots's Game Chicken always had a wisp of straw or a twig in his mouth. Game and the fancy were his sentiments.

JOHN DAVIDSON.

P.S. Looking at No. 710 of Punch, the reason of the twig in Lord Palmerston's mouth is most evident. The cartoon represents "A set-to between 'Pam, the Downing Street Pet,' and 'the Russian Spider.'"

As an answer to a question, it would be difficult to offer anything more irrelevant than the quotation from Mr. Grocott's Index (3rd S. vii. 443.) There are numberless sketches in Punch representing Lord Palmerston under ludicrous disguises, in which the display of any "ensign of supreme command" would have been utterly out of place, and would have annihilated all the point and fun of the caricature; and yet in these sketches the flower or bit of straw still figures. My query (3rd S. viii. 389) is a very plain one, and there must be thousands of persons competent to answer it in a plain manner.

J.

WARDE (3rd S. viii. 334.)—There is a portrait of Sir Patience Ward in Merchant Tailors' Hall. See Brayley and Nightingale's "London and Westminster," Beauties of England and Wales, vol. ii. p. 381; also, Herbert's History of the Twelve Great Livery Companies, vol. ii. p. 476. At p. 474 Herbert states that the picture was painted in 1669, which would be eleven years prior to Ward's mayoralty. But this is at variance with the date given at p. 400, where the resolution of the court is quoted under 1688. This latter date seems the more probable.

R. S. Q.

"There is a portrait of Sir Patience Ward in Merchant Tailors' Hall. This portrait was painted by order of the Court of Assistants, 11th July, 1688, inscribed 'A worthy benefactor.'"

I extract the above from the MS. Collections relating to the Lord Mayors of London, by the late Samuel Gregory of the Lord Mayor's Court Office. J. J. HOWARD.

Greenwich.

QUARTERINGS (3rd S. viii. 238.)—I know of no reason why all the sons of the heiress B. should not bear all the quarterings to which she was really entitled, those of C. and D. among the rest. I do not understand that any apportionment of the property would, of itself, affect the right to quarter the full arms of the heiress B. In case she had by will directed that certain of her sons should take certain estates, certain names, and certain arms; then an application to the College of Arms would have to be made to enable them to do so. But this arrangement would be a departure, though a legalised departure from the ordinary heraldic rule.

P. P.

POYLE ARMS (3rd S. viii. 332, 426.)—The coat of John Poyle of Hampton Poyle, and of Poyle in Guildford, was, Gu. a saltire, ar. within a bordure of the second, charged with eight hurts (Harl. MSS. 2087. 82); that of his wife, Elizabeth Banastre, Ar. a cross sarcelly, sa. (Inq. 2 Hen. VI.) In Gent. Mag. 1806, p. 810, will be seen an interesting account of this ancient family, formerly called De la Puille. H. M. VANE.

Eaton Place, S.W.

FERMOR PEDIGREE (3rd S. viii. 309, 424.)—In Baker's History of Northamptonshire, vol. ii. 142, will be found the pedigree with ample notices of this family, supplemented with copies of inscriptions on numerous tablets in the church. Sir Philip Hobby or Hoby appears to have married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Walter Stonor, Knt., but Katherine, daughter of Sir George Fermor, married Edward Hobby of Hales, co. Gloucester. (Harl. MSS. 1094, 167; 1184, 163.) Sir William Fermor was created Baron Lempster of Leominster. H. M. VANE.

Eaton Place, S.W.

C. N. will find an elaborate pedigree of Fermor, Earl of Pomfret, in Baker's Northamptonshire, vol. ii. pp. 142-3.

The title of Lempster was taken from Leominster, co. Hereford.

In an illuminated pedigree of the Hoby family, prepared at Heralds' College, and certified and attested by Dethick, Garter, and Camden, Clarendieux, July 10, 1598 (now in my possession), Sir Philip Hoby is stated to have died without issue. His wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Walter Stonor, Knt. B. W. G.

In reference to the letter of MR. TURNER of Oxford, stating that the ancient family of Fermour is now represented by the Ramsdens, I beg leave to say that Beville Ramsay and Edward Ramsay, Esqs., of Croughton, Northamptonshire, are the present representatives of the Fermours—formerly of Somerton, Oxfordshire, where a fragment of their ancient mansion yet remains in the shape of a decorated window, in a field called the Park, belonging to the Countess of Jersey. The adjacent bowling-green has of late years been used, I am told, by croquet-parties; at all events it is perfect, and well suited for the modern modification of an ancient pastime. In the 14th & 15th Henry VIII. a Fermour, of Somerton, was one of the "Commyssioners auctorized by the Kyng to collect a Subside wⁱⁿ the Counte of Oxford, granted to our said Sov'en lorde Kyng at the last Parliamente." It appears from a record, that he, with two others, had authority for "sessyng" this subsidy throughout the Hundred of Powghley (now spelt Ploughley), in Oxfordshire.

WILLIAM WING.

Steeple Aston, Oxford.

P.S. The Fermour aisle of Somerton church is screened out, and locked up from the body of the church. More than half a century ago, my father attended there at the funeral of one of the Fermours, attracted by curiosity only. At the conclusion of the service, and upon the retirement of the mourners, as the spectators thronged round the vaults, a person, presumed to be a priest, pushed through the throng, threw some water from a small bottle on the coffin, uttered a short prayer in Latin, and hastily disappeared.

COPEs (3rd S. viii. 371.)—I saw the copes at Westminster Abbey about two years ago. Leave was obtained from one of the canons. H. A. W.

BECKFORD'S "LIVES OF EXTRAORDINARY PAINTERS" (3rd S. viii. 287) was a jeu d'esprit, written by him in his seventeenth year. The old mansion at Fonthill, since destroyed by fire, possessed a fine collection of paintings, which the housekeeper was directed to show to applicants; but she often told descriptions of the painters: and the stories which the painters were said to represent obtained from her vivacity so many additions and amplifications, that the definitions by this cicerone were often ludicrous in the extreme. Young Beckford therefore, to methodise and assist her memory, wrote these Lives, which she received from her youthful master, as gospel; and after descanting on Gerard Douw, would add the particulars of that artist's patience and industry in expending four or five hours in painting a broomstick. There were other extravagancies, all of which she religiously believed; and a few copies were printed in 1780 to confirm her belief; hence the rarity of that small volume. Beckford, in after life, spoke of it as his Bhunderbussiana.

J. H. BURN.

JUDGES RETURNING TO THE BAR (3rd S. viii. 386.)—J. M., in your number of Nov. 11th, is mistaken in saying that Lord Grange's case was "a singular instance of a judge taking his place at the Bar, after having sat on the Bench." Pemberton, who as Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench presided at the trials of Russell and Sydney, was removed from that office; and was afterwards Counsel for the accused in the trial of the Seven Bishops.

HIBERNICUS.

Edinburgh.

HUMAN SKIN TANNED (3rd S. viii. 404.)—It is well known that the doorkeeper of the Anatomical Class Room in the College of Edinburgh used to carry a pocket-book made from a tanned piece of the skin of Burke, the wholesale murderer, who was executed in that city in January, 1820. The writer of this note has seen the precious relic.

G.

Edinburgh.

THE JANIZARIES (3rd S. viii. 387.)—The creation of the formidable corps of Janizaries is attributed to the Sultan Amurath (meaning, I presume, Murad); whereas the institution of the armed force of Christian renegades belongs to the reign of Urkhan, the successor of Osman, founder of the Ottoman Empire. Aladdin was brother, and also Grand Vizier, of Urkhan; and it was he who, in concert with a relative named Kara Khalil Tschenderah, drew up the plan for the creation of the Yeni-Tscheri ("new troops"), which name has been changed by European historians into Janissaires and Janizaries. The quotation from White's Account of the Turks, which you gave in the above note, said that, "according to tradition, the first kettles issued to the Janizaries were similar in form to those used by the Bektashy dervishes, and were presented to the different odas by Mahomet II. when he led them to the attack on Constantinople." But so far from this statement being accurate, the kettle became an "institution" at the date of the creation of the corps; and it was in reference thereto that the colonel was named Tschorbadji-baschi, or "head soup-maker;" and the major was called Aschtschi-baschi, or "head cook."

GEORGE W. M. REYNOLDS.

41, Woburn Square, W.C.

CHARLES BUTLER (3rd S. viii. 371.)—I may inform your correspondent that I left Cheam School in 1803 or 1804, at which time the head master, the late excellent Rev. William Gilpin, retired to the living of Pulverbatch, in Shropshire, on the presentation of a pupil, the late Lord Kenyon, and was succeeded at Cheam by the Rev. — Wilding. Although more than sixty years ago, I have the most perfect recollection of Charles Butler, even of his personal appearance; rather short, stout, of florid complexion, of quiet and gentle manners, and, as a contrast to others, had entitled himself to the respect of the unruly urchins whom it was his duty to instruct in the first rudiments of writing, the formidable mystery of the multiplication table, and the progressive rules of arithmetic; and also of those boys who were preparing for the University, the more advanced teaching of mathematics, for which he was supposed to be perfectly qualified. As he did not lodge in the house, I never knew what were his domestic relations. We were led to believe that in his earlier days he had served in the navy, but in what capacity, or under what circumstances he had left and become an usher at Cheam, we were all strangers. He used to relate to the boys that he was an eye-witness to the catastrophe of the sinking of the Royal George at Spithead; that he had been refused by his superior to accept an invitation on board the Royal George on that very day; and whilst afterwards meditating with feelings of disappointment, and with his eyes fixed on the ship, she was suddenly seen to heel over, and, to the consternation of the beholders, rapidly to disappear. On a holiday we often had a ramble on Banstead Downs, and when Butler accompanied the younger boys he was usually provided with a telescope of rather antique appearance, we judged to it be a relique of former days, but with which its owner used, with much good humour, to indulge the boys with a view of St. Paul's. I well remember the publication of his volume upon Algebra, but whether from disinclination or incapacity, or from both, I question much whether the copies circulated in the school ever found a student qualified to give an opinion upon its merits.

G. B.

MILITARY QUERIES (3rd S. viii. 332.)—1. The 8th and 9th Dragoon Guards must be a misprint for 8th and 9th Dragoons, as there have never been more than seven Regiments of Dragoon Guards.

2. In respect to "the Irish Army Lists of the last few years before the Repeal of the Union," it may be remarked that such an event has happily not yet occurred, and can only exist in some heated Fenian's imagination. "Repeal" is a dream of the past. The War Office Army Lists have always contained the regiments in Ireland, before and since the Union.

3. There was a regiment in 1795 numbered the 117th, of which the Hon. Fred. St. John was Colonel. It was raised in August, 1794, and reduced in the following year.

4. The Queen's German Infantry was numbered the 97th Queen's German Regiment on Jan. 9, 1805. On the 95th being made the "Rifle Brigade" in February, 1816, and removed from the numbered regiments, the 97th became the 98th, and was disbanded as such at Limerick on Dec. 10, 1818. The regiment of Lowenstein was never on the army establishment. It was serving in the West Indies in 1798, and then consisted of two battalions. This corps was sometimes designated Lowenstein's Yagers, and appears to have existed until 1802.

The regiment of Hompesch, known as "Hompesch's Mounted Riflemen" was raised by Ferd. Baron Hompesch, and placed on the establishment in October, 1796. This corps served in St. Domingo and Egypt. In consequence of the reduction occasioned by the Peace of Amiens, it was brought over from Ireland to Portsmouth in August, 1802, for disbandment.

THOMAS CARTER.

Home Guards.

HORACE GUILDFORD (3rd S. viii. 392.)—I recollect when a boy reading with a similar interest to Mr. MATTHEW COOKE, The Parterre, and in it the "Manorial Archives," by Horace Guildford. To one story in particular, "The Scourged Page," I owe my acquaintance with Wensleydale, in the North Riding of Yorkshire, for it was the means of my setting off on a knapsack ramble to that charming dale. The attractive and romantic scenery in the vicinity of Richmond is graphically described, and the many objects of interest with which Wensleydale abounds, as Middleham and Bolton castles, where the scene of the "Scourged Page" is laid. Aysgarth Force and Jerveaux Abbey are mentioned, but the whole story is evidently the production of one who was very well acquainted with that part of the noble county of York.

OXONIENSIS.

THOMAS R. BARLOW (3rd S. viii. 348.)—The REV. DR. BARLOW, who made inquiry some time ago for Thomas Richard Barlow, of Lancashire, begs to offer his due thanks to P. J. for Wickham and Barlow families. Although not sure of the trace, it is remarkable that his father once saw a genealogy belonging to a relative who was one of the Loftus family, in which there was a trace to William of Wickham.

WICKHAM FAMILY (3rd S. viii. 348.)—I have only lately come upon the copy of the inscription on the tomb of Annabella Scott, and think it well to point out two mistakes in the inscription itself: 1, the baptismal name of Wickham, Dean of York, was Tobias and not Thomas; and, 2, his grandmother was Anthonia, and not Antonia. It is singular that whilst the grandfather and great-great-grandfather of Mrs. Scott are given in the inscription, no mention whatever is made of her father. He was Henry Wickham, a captain in the royal navy, married to Margaret Archer of Barbadoes, and died Nov., 1735. Besides Mrs. Scott he had two other children, a daughter and a son, Henry, Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, rector of Guisely, co. York, and chaplain to the Princess of Wales. He was father of Lieut.-Col. Henry Wickham, father of the Right Hon. William Wickham, who died Oct. 22, 1840, leaving one son, Henry Louis, who died Oct. 27, 1864, leaving three children, of whom the eldest is

WILLIAM WICKHAM.

P.S. A pedigree of the family of Wickham will be found in the Collectanea Topographica et Genealogica, vol. iii. p. 369.

WILLS OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (3rd S. viii. 353.)—If DEVONIENSIS had given his habitat, and the name of the testator, it is not unlikely but that some good-natured reader of "N. & Q." might, before he sees this, have sent him the very locus in quo. All wills are of easy access in the diocesan probate courts.

H. T. E.

ROMAN CATHOLIC GENTRY OF LANCASHIRE (3rd S. viii. 252.)—The principal seats of the families named in Peck are as follows, but it does not follow that the head of the family is the party intended. In the case of Nelson and Sherborne it is clearly not so: Ornell of Turton; *Houghton, query of Hoghton; Trafford of Trafford; *Ashton, many families of; Thornborrow; Forth of Swindley; *Bold of Bold; *Rigbie of Harrock? or Preston? Hodgson; *Markland of Wigan Wood houses; Halliwell; Thompson; Nelson of Fairhurst; Gerard, many families of; Sherborne of Stonyhurst; Sanupe; Bishopp; Mildmore; *Chisnall of Arley; Anderton of Euxton; Nelson, Sherborne, Firth. Thornborrow, Hodgson, Halliwell, Thompson, Sanupe, Bishopp, and Mildmore, are I fancy, extinct. Some of them were never families of note.

I cannot refer to the lists of 1633 and 1655; but numbers of staunch Protestants had to compound for their estates in the Cromwellian times.

P. P.

HARROGATE (3rd S. viii. 172, 238.)—In addition to the works on Harrogate, is one entitled Modern Manners; or, A Season at Harrogate. A tale in 2 vols., written towards the close of the last century. I cannot give the exact date; it is about 1797.

L. R.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL NOY (3rd S. viii. 405.)—I am obliged to P. W. TREMPER for noticing my queries; but unfortunately in correcting me he has fallen into error himself. He says "the estate of Camanton, in Ryder, belonged to this family," instead of saying Camanton in Mawgan, in Pyder. He states, "the family that lived at Pendrea was the only one of the name of Noy in Cornwall." If this was the case, why does he tell us in the following paragraph that "there are several Noyes in Penzance, Gulval (Gulval), and St. Just." TREMPER further observes, that "the name is not nearly so uncommon as PENDREA supposes." I still maintain that the name is extremely rare. It is uncommon so far as to be confined, with but one exception, to a particular locality. There are five farmers in Cornwall named Noy; three in Gulval and two in Madron. They are all more or less related, and live within a radius of six miles. The list of burgesses for Penzance does not contain a single Noy. How then can there be several Noyes in Penzance, Gulval, and St. Just? HUMPHRY NOY, the attorney-general's second son, and eventually heir, had a son and three daughters. Hale, in his Cornwall, says the attorney-general had a grandson.

W. PENDREA.

THE DREAM OF THE GERMAN POET (3rd S. viii. 370, 424.)—I have not the works of J. P. Richter, or I would attempt a translation of the desired poem, if it really was his. But I have Schiller's poems, and I have just translated his piece entitled Die Grösse der Welt, which I strongly suspect formed the groundwork of the beautifully expanded "Dream" which appears in the "Orbs of Heaven," and is very likely to have been the composition of a dreamer like De Quincey. As Schiller's poem may interest the readers of "N. & Q." I forward it for insertion:—

* I have put an asterisk to such as are Protestant now.

"THE IMMENSITY OF THE WORLD.

"O'er the vast world, which erst from chaos sprung,
At the Creator's word, thus wondrous hung,
On the wind's wings I fly, and reach the strand
Of its wide rolling ocean: there I land,—
Cast my firm anchor where no tempest blows,
And its fixed boundary creation knows.

"Stars I there saw already young arise,
A thousand years to travel through the skies:
Saw them to their attractive term advance,
With playful movement, and with joyous dance.
I looked with aching eyes confused around,
The space was vacant:—not a star was found!

"Farther to wing my course to realms of night,
I steer more boldly with the speed of light;
With dreary mists above me in the sky,
Systems of worlds, swift streams I hurry by,
Torrents and floods about me, ever new,
Rush on, the daring wanderer pursue.

"But see! a pilgrim treads the lonely way,
And quickly meets me where I've dared to stray.
Soon with commanding voice, approaching near,
Cries: 'Stop! rash traveller, what seek'st thou here?'
I seek the shore where tempest never blows,
And where its boundary creation knows."

"Stay, for thy course is vain, lo! endless space,
Boundless eternity eludes thy chase.
Pilgrim! beside me here let down thy wings,
Though eagle's deemed, they here are useless things.
Thy daring flight is but a phantom dream;
Spent and disheartened, cast thine anchor here."

F. C. II.

CURIOUS CUSTOM IN IRELAND (3rd S. viii. 325, 402.)—It was asked why, in Ireland, it is so generally the custom to turn the back of the hat, so as to wear it in front when a shower of rain comes on. A correspondent thinks the reason simple enough; and that the object is merely to save the front of the hat comparatively from rain. But surely this answer will satisfy no one out of Ireland. For the plan can answer only when Paddy has to meet the shower. If it drives against the back of his hat, he had better leave his hat as it was. But we are told that whenever a shower comes on,—and we presume from whatever quarter,—Paddy at once reverses the position of his hat, to preserve the front comparatively from rain; and that the reason is "simple enough." The answer attempted is certainly so. F. C. II.

PETTIGREW FOR PEDIGREE (3rd S. viii. 248.)—I have met with "pettigrew" for pedigree in old books. I think in the curious rhyming pedigree of the Stauntons, in Thoroton's Nottinghamshire (the old edition), the writer calls it a "pettigrew" throughout.

P. P.

CARTHAGINIAN GALLEYS (3rd S. viii. 128, 175, 215).—MARCHMONT and T. J. BUCKTON seem not to have seen an Essay on the War Gallies of the Antients, published nearly forty years ago by John Howell (not Holwell): a very ingenious polyartist, as he called himself, who was sometime janitor to the new Edinburgh Academy; and latterly a pensioner of the Trinity Hospital of Edinburgh, to which his polyartistic ingenuity had reduced him. He constructed the model of a galley, which he deposited in the Academy.

V. S. I.

NATHANIEL RICHARDS (3rd S. viii. 391.)—He was matriculated as a pensioner of Caius College March 30, 1629; and proceeded LL.B. 1634.

C. H. & THOMPSON COOPER

Cambridge.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

Popular Epics of the Middle Ages of the Norse-German and Carolingian Cycles. By John Malcolm Ludlow. In two Volumes. (Macmillan & Co.)

Years and years ago, when we saw for the first time the old folio Heldenbuch with its hundreds of quaint little woodcuts (of which the very identical blocks were afterwards employed to illustrate our own Penny Histories), did we long to know something of the North-German Cycles of Medieval Romance. But (like Mr. Ludlow) in vain did we turn to the volumes of Warton, Ellis, Ritson, Weber, De la Rue, Rosenkrantz, and numberless others—all were alike barren; and we were fain to pick out from a multitude of volumes, rich in bibliographical, philological, and antiquarian lore, what Mr. Ludlow here tells us pleasantly and effectively in two volumes, which have also the merit of being models of good taste on the part of the publisher. Those of our readers who know nothing of the Popular Epics of the Middle Ages—and we suspect they form a larger body than Mr. Ludlow is inclined to believe—will be well pleased with that gentleman's notices of the Norse-German Cycles,—of the Edda Legends, the Nibelungenlied, the Dietrich Legends, the Heldenbuch, the Horny Siegfried, the Legend of King Rother, and in addition, the Carolingian Legends, the Songs of Roncevaux and of Roland, and the Sub-Cycles: among others, those of Raoul of Cambrai, Gerard of Roussillon, William of Orange, Ogier of Denmark, &c. We trust that Mr. Ludlow's present contributions to Medieval Literary History will be received with such favour as to induce him to give us a volume on the Arthurian Cycle, and a supplementary one on the lesser Cycles of the Cid and the Crusades, of the Theological Epics, the Beast Epics, and the Classico-chivalrous Epics, such as those on the Siege of Troy, Alexander the Great, &c.

The Gothic and Anglo-Saxon Gospels in parallel Columns, with the Versions of Wycliffe and Tyndale; arranged, with Preface and Notes, by the Rev. Joseph Bosworth, D.D., F.R.S., &c., assisted by George Waring, Esq., M.A., &c. (J. R. Smith.)

It may almost be a question whether the present volume possesses greater interest for the divine or for the philologist. To the latter it must certainly be interesting, from the opportunity which it affords him of marking the gradual development of our language. The four versions of the Gospel, which are presented to us by the venerable Oxford Professor of Anglo-Saxon and his coadjutor Mr. Waring, are—1. The Gothic, by Bishop Ulphilas; of whom it was proverbially said, among his countrymen, "Whatever is done by Ulphilas is well done." 2. The Translation in the Eighth or Tenth Century from the Vetus Italica into Anglo-Saxon. 3. The Version of Wycliffe, which is here given from the Oxford Edition of Wycliffe's Bible, printed in 1850 under the editorship of the Rev. Josiah Forshall and Sir Frederick Madden; which Dr. Bosworth pronounces one of "the best, most laborious, and accurate editions of any English author" he has ever seen. This text has, moreover, been collated with the original MS. in the Douce Collection. 4. The Version translated from the Greek by William Tyndale, from the first edition published in A.D. 1526; or rather from the very exact and beautiful fac-simile of it published by Mr. Fry in 1862. These, with a learned and instructive preface, and a few necessary notes, form a volume the value and importance of which need scarcely be insisted upon.

The Sham Squire, and the Informers of 1798. With a View of their Contemporaries. To which is added, Jottings about Irish Society Seventy Years ago. By W. J. Fitzpatrick. (Hotten.)

This is a reprint, greatly enlarged, of an interesting pamphlet published in 1859, and now extremely scarce. A more curious picture of Irish life than the original pamphlet, it would be difficult to conceive. The additions and supplements to the present reprints add even more to its interest than to its bulk. What a warning to Fenians is the story it contains, if they would but read it aright!

Fairy Land; or, Recreations for the Rising Generation. By the late Thomas and Jane Hood, their Son and Daughter, &c. With Illustrations by T. Hood, Junior. (Griffith & Farren.)

Strange Stories of the Animal World. A Book of Curious Contributions to Natural History. By John Timbs. With Illustrations. (Griffith & Farren.)

Messrs. Griffith and Farren are here catering for book-givers of very different tastes. For those who like children to revel in the riches of imagination, they present a volume which will delight the little ones who don't care to hear about this "work-a-day" world; while the volume on the Animal World, by Mr. Timbs—the most industrious and interesting of compilers—will delight those model children who like only what is "quite true," and may also contribute to awaken in all children that great good taste, a love for Natural History.

THE ARGOSY, a New Monthly, issued by Messrs. Sampson Low, promises to have a successful voyage. She is well freighted; one little poem, "Hermione," is alone worth more than the cost of the number.

LETT'S DIARIES, ALMANACS, AND CALENDARS FOR 1866.—These useful aids to all men of business, and indeed all lovers of punctuality and correctness, are now ready, in that variety of size, price, and arrangement, which commend them to the attention of all classes.

THE CHAPTER HOUSE, WESTMINSTER.—A meeting convened by the Society of Antiquaries, under the presidency of one of its most distinguished Fellows, the Dean of Westminster, and at which it is expected will be assembled a large body of gentlemen interested in Archaeology, will be held in the Chapter House this day (Saturday), at twelve o'clock, for the purpose of urging upon the Government to take the necessary steps for the preservation of this beautiful specimen of early art. Mr. Gilbert Scott, F.S.A., will read a short paper on the chief points of interest in the building.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books, to be sent direct to the gentlemen by whom they are required, whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—

SWISSER'S BEAUFORTIAN, Supp. 6vo. Vols. II. and III.
Wanted by Messrs. Bell & Daldy, 186, Fleet Street.

ARCHAEOLOGIA. Vol. XXXIV.
Wanted by Rev. H. W. Tids, Boblington, Bridgworth.

A LIST OF OFFICERS CLAIMING THE SIXTY THOUSAND POUNDS, &c., granted by His Sacred Majesty for the Relief of his truly Loyal and Indigent Party, &c., 1682.

THE ATHERTON. All the vols. before 1832.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL REVIEW. Nos. 1, 2, and 3.

ARCHAEOLOGIA. Vol. XXXVI. Part II.

POWERS (R.), THE OLD ENGLISH GENTLEMAN; a Poem.

GARLAND (L. G. F.), DE MIRACULIS MORTUORUM. Dresden, 1708, 4to.
Wanted by Edward Peacock, Esq., Rotherford Manor, Brigg.

PROSSER'S SELECT ILLUSTRATIONS OF HAMPSHIRE. Parts VI., and all after.

SURREY. Parts I. and VII.
Wanted by John Gough Nichols, Esq., 25, Parliament Street, Westminster.

Notices to Correspondents.

OUR CHRISTMAS NUMBER, for which we have already received some interesting communications, will be published on Saturday, December 16th.

G. B. B. If such are the arms of your family you are of course entitled to bear them.

GEORGE LLOYD. Vide Horae, Cat. III. 22, 24.

ERRATUM.—3rd S. p. 434. col. 1. line 21. for "Thomas Watson Wentworth" read "Charles Watson Wentworth."

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

CURE OF ASTHMATIC COUGHS BY DR. LEOCHE'S PULMONIC WATERS.—From Mr. Ince Gamie, Medicine Warehouse, Yeovil.—"A lady purchased a 2s. 6d. box, and observed that she had suffered for years from an asthmatic cough. Weeks after the same lady called again: 'When she had been completely cured by them,' merely one 2s. 6d. box. Other instances are occurring which prove the value of these Waters above other medicines for pulmonary diseases, coughs, colds, &c." They have a pleasant taste. Price is 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. per box. Sold by all druggists. Beware of counterfeits.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.—A CATALOGUE OF SECOND-HAND BOOKS, in all Classes of Literature is Now Ready. Gratis and Post Free.

G. HEARL, 26 and 27, Booksellers' Row, Strand, London, W.C.

IMPORTANT TO PUBLIC LIBRARIES, AND THE BOOK-BUYING COMMUNITY.

W. PEDDER'S CLEARANCE CATALOGUE of Cheap SECOND-HAND BOOKS is Now Ready. Sent Post Free on application to 12, Booksellers' Row, Strand.

FAMILY SURNAMES.—LOWER'S PATRONYMICA BRITANNICA. royal 8vo. cloth, a few copies, at 12s. 6d., half Subscribers' price.—"The most complete book on surnames published."

Apply direct to W. J. SMITH, 43, North Street, Brighton.

OLD BOOK CATALOGUE. New Part. Just out. CATALOGUES OF AUTOGRAPHS and PORTRAITS, each for a stamp.

OLD BOOKS AT UNPRECEDENTED LOW PRICES.

T. & W. BOONE'S NEW CATALOGUE of OLD BOOKS, containing upwards of 100 Articles of Good and Useful Books in every Department of Literature, English and Foreign, is this Day issued, and will be sent on receipt of 3 Stamps.

T. & W. BOONE, 22, New Bond Street, London.

CURIOUS OLD NEWSPAPER CUTTINGS, concerning all the Counties of England, Local Family History, &c., carefully dated and arranged in neat and handy volumes. Any County Collection may be had separately, price 6s., or 7s. Postage Extra. A Catalogue of Old Books, Manuscripts, Broadsides, Ballads, Exhibition Bills, Maps, Views, Portraits, &c., gratis.

Address, J. H. FENWELL, 42, Millbank Street, Westminster.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.—The last Monthly LIST of GOOD AND RARE SECOND-HAND BOOKS at low prices, selected from a stock of 20,000 volumes, will be sent for a stamp by HENRY SUGG, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London.

Just published.

THOS. DE LA RUE & CO.'s INDELIBLE RED LETTER DIARIES FOR 1895, edited by JAMES GLAISHER, ESQ., F.R.S. With an Engraving of Lunar Mountains, and an original Article on the Moon by PROFESSOR PHILLIPS, F.R.S. In various sizes, suitable for the Pocket or Desk, and in a great variety of bindings. May be had of all Booksellers and Stationers.

NOTICE.—DR. HUNTER'S LETTERS. Now Ready, the FIFTH EDITION of DR. HUNTER'S CELEBRATED LETTERS on DISEASES of the THROAT, LARYNX, and LUNGS, their Nature, Causes, and Cure. Price 2s. 6d., per post 2s. 8d. This Edition contains a NEW PREFACE by HENRY MELVILLE, M.D., and a statement of English Cases showing the progress and success of the Treatment by Inhalation in this country. London: C. MITCHELL & CO., 12 and 13, Red Lion Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Published by J. Clements, Little Pultney Street, price 7d., a new Work on the Teeth, entitled

PURE DENTISTRY, and WHAT IT DOES FOR US. By A. ENKELL, Grosvenor Street, W.

"We feel certain all who make themselves acquainted with the contents of the book thoroughly will thank us for having directed their attention to Mr. Enkell's work, as assuredly none can read it without deriving the greatest benefit."—The Sun, Aug. 25.

Sold by SIMPKIN & MARSHALL, and may be had of all Booksellers.

TO BOOKBUYERS.

NATTALI & BOND'S NEW CATALOGUE OF ANCIENT and MODERN BOOKS, comprising all their recent purchases, is now ready. Post Free for One Stamp.

NATTALI & BOND, 23, Bedford Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

OLD ENGLISH CAROLS and HYMNS for the merry times of Christmas, with Introduction by E. F. RIMBAULT, LL.D. Arranged for four voices, with accompaniment. Price 4s., limp cloth, post free. A superior edition of the same, printed in gold and colours, on extra-fine paper, handsomely bound, gilt edges, &c. Suitable for Presents. Price 10s. 6d.

METZLER & CO., 37, Great Marlborough Street, W.

GLASGOW.

Five Days' Sale of a Valuable Library, Coins, &c.

TO BE SOLD BY PUBLIC AUCTION within the Upper Hall of the Scottish Exhibition Rooms, No. 30, Bath Street, Glasgow, on TUESDAY, the 12th Day of DECEMBER, 1893, and four following days, the very valuable, interesting, and important library of the late STEPHEN WILLIAMSON, ESQ., in fine condition, and peculiarly rich in Old Poetry, Ballads, and Shaksperiana. Buyers are referred to the Catalogue, as any attempt at enumeration of the contents within the limits of an advertisement would convey no proper idea of the importance of the Library.

Also a small Collection of valuable and well selected Old Coins, Medals, and other Curiosities, Book Cases, &c. &c. Catalogues, price 6d., will be sent on application to the Auctioneer, or to Mr. H. G. CLARKE, Bookseller, 5, Royal Bank Place, Glasgow, on the receipt of Six Postage Stamps.

DUNCAN KEITH, Auctioneer,
61, Renfield Street, Glasgow.

Glasgow, November, 1893.

PARTRIDGE & COZENS,
MANUFACTURING STATIONERS,

192, FLEET STREET, corner of Chancery Lane.

Carriage paid to the Country on Orders exceeding 20s.

The LARGEST and most varied Stock in the Kingdom of Note, Letter, and Fcap. Papers, Envelopes, Account and MS. Books, Household Papers, &c.

PARTRIDGE & COZENS' celebrated GUINEA CASE of STATIONERY forwarded free to any Railway Station in England, on receipt of Post-office Order.

NO CHARGE for Plain Stamping Crest, Arms, or Address on Paper or Envelopes. Coloured Stamping (Relief) reduced to 1s. per 100. Polished Steel Crest Dies engraved for 5s. Business or address Dies from 3s.

BERMON PAPER, plain, 4s. per ream: Ruled ditto, 4s. 6d. An immense variety in all sizes and quantities always in stock.

Illustrated Price List of Inkstands, Despatch Boxes, Stationery Cabinets, Postage Scales, Writing Cases, &c. post free.

BOND'S PERMANENT MARKING INK.—The original invention, established 1831, for marking CRESTS, NAMES, INITIALS, upon household linen, wearing apparel, &c.

N.B.—Owing to the great repute in which this Ink is held by families, outfitters, &c., inferior imitations are often sold, which do not possess any of its celebrated qualities. Purchasers should therefore be careful to observe the address on the label, 10, BISHOPSGATE STREET WITHIN, E.C., without which the Ink is not genuine. Sold by all respectable chemists, stationers, &c., in the United Kingdom, price 1s. per bottle; no 6d. size ever made.

MR. HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet Street, has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures; they so perfectly resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the same by the closest observer; they will never change colour or decay, as will be found very superior to any teeth ever before used. This mode does not require the extraction of roots or any painful operation, as will support and preserve teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. Decayed teeth stopped and restored sound and useful in mastication.—52, Fleet Street. At home from ten till five.

First Class Prize Medal, Dublin, 1883.

THE WORLD-RENOWNED WHEELER & WILSON PRIZE MEDAL LOCK-STITCH SEWING MACHINES, from 9l. and upwards, with all recent Improvements and Additions.

These machines execute all descriptions of work in any material with speed, strength, durability, beauty, and economy. They are essential in the Drawing Room, a pleasant and beneficial exercise in and can be worked by a child. Instructions gratis to all purchasers. Illustrated Prospectus gratis and post free.

OFFICES & SALE ROOMS, 139, REGENT STREET, LONDON. W.

INK SOLVENT.—This preparation instantly removes ink, ironmould, and fruit stains from all kinds of paper, or the skin, by merely wetting the stains with the SOLVENT. For removing blots it is exceedingly convenient, as it obviates the use of an erasing knife. 1s. per bottle. Made only by FRANK & LEBLANC, 2, New Bond Street. The trade supplied.

SALOM'S NEW OPERA and FIELD GLASS

and THE RECONNOITERER GLASS, price 10s. 10d., and from 1s. This "Tourist's Favourite," through extraordinary division of labour, distinctly shows small objects at 10 miles off. Landscape at 20 miles, Jupiter's moons, the Lunar Mountains, &c.—The Marquis of Cambridge: "The Reconnoiterer is very good."—Earl of Beaconsfield: "I find it all you say, wonderfully powerful for so very small a glass."—Baron de Camille: "It is a beautiful glass."—Rev. Lord Stagsdale: "approves of it."—Lord Gifford, of Arbury: "Most useful."—Lord Garsington: "Remarkably good."—Str. Dimes Cavalry, of Bromley: "It gives me complete satisfaction, and is wonderfully good."—Major Staggart, of Wrenbury: "Quite as powerful as that for which I gave 5l. 5s."—Capt. Sanders, Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield Lock: "I have found it effective at 1,000-yards range."—F. H. Fawcett, of Farnley Hall, Esq.: "I never before met an article that so completely answered the recommendation of its maker, nor, although I have tried many, a Glass combining so much power for its size with so much clearness."—The Field: "We have carefully tried it at an 800-yards range against all the Glasses possessed by the members of the Corps, and found it fully equal to any of those present, although they had cost more than four times its price."—Notes and Queries: "What intending tourist will not start without such an indispensable companion to a pleasant trip?" The celebrated "HYTHE" GLASS shows bullet marks at 1,500 yards and men at 3 miles, price 10s. 6d. All the above Glasses, carrying the registered trademarks, "Salom," "Reconnoiterer," and "Hythe" are only to be had direct from, and by written application to, SALOM & CO., 98, Princes Street, EDINBURGH. No Agents of any kind in London nor elsewhere.

"Purity and Excellence of Quality."

COLMAN'S PRIZE-MEDAL MUSTARD bears their Trade Mark, the BULL'S HEAD, on each Package.

It was the only Mustard which obtained a PRIZE MEDAL at the GREAT EXHIBITION, 1883.

Their GENUINE and DOUBLE SUPERFINE are Qualities particularly recommended for Family Use.

For MEDICINAL PURPOSES NOTHING FINEER CAN BE PRODUCED.

Sold by all Grocers and Druggists.

J. & J. COLMAN, LONDON.

CHANG, the MAGIC GIANT.—A new Sensation.—This marvellous figure, which created such an extraordinary sensation at the Court of the Emperor of China, performs daily at 252, Strand, from 10 till 11. Sent post free, with full instructions, for 14 Stamps.—H. G. CLARKE & CO., 252, Strand.

THE GALANTY SHOWMAN.—How to MAKE a GALANTY SHOW, and act the Enraged Cobbler, the Broken Bridge, Billy Button, Mother Goose, and Punch, 120 Engravings, post free for 12 Stamps.—H. G. CLARKE & CO., 252, Strand.

THE MAGIC DONKEYS.—Roars of Laughter.—These wonderful animals go through their extraordinary evolutions daily at 252, Strand, from 10 till 11. The pair sent post free for 14 Stamps.—H. G. CLARKE & CO., 252, Strand.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1865.

CONTENTS.—N^o 206.

The Society of Antiquaries, &c., 469.

NOTES:—Autographs in Books, 470—James Alban Gibbes, 471—The Temples, 472—Epitaphs from Abroad—Sir Thomas Overbury's "Works"—Villiers, Duke of Buckingham—Value of Land in the City—Remains of an old English Ship—Epigram on Gibbon the Historian, 472.

QUERIES:—Anonymous Drama—Archdall's "Monasticon"—Confederate Colours—Bunyn's "Cornish Sheriffs"—Sir John Fortescue, Knt.—John Halke, Robert Dod, &c.—Major-General S. Lawrence—"London University Magazine"—"Out of Sight, out of Mind"—Penance for Incontinency—Poisonous Spiders—References Wanted—Sir Joshua Reynolds's Palette—Ship found at Berne—Captain Starkie—Style of the Archbishop of Canterbury—"Utopia found," &c.—Winchester School—Yarmouth Superstition, 473.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Foreign Orders of Knighthood—Heathon—Sir Simonds D'Ewes' MSS.—Cobham College, Kent—Limerick Halfpenny, 476.

REPLIES:—Marshal Soult and the Battle of Toulouse, 477—Lives of Dr. Beattie, 478—Isvara: Osiris, 479—Ismael Fitzadam, Id.—Waltonian Queries, 481—Longevity: Widow Rowbottom—John Gaines—Another Centenarian—A Writer in Notes and Queries—Dilangerbendi: Binster:—Walton's "Lives"—Lete make—Lord Palmerston—St. Andrew's Church, Edinburgh—John Day—"Whom the Gods love die Young"—"Tattering a Kip"—Thomas and Joseph Arrowsmith—Ourang-outang—Egoism and Egotism—Suicide—Costrel—High and Low Water—"Treen" and "Quarterlands," &c., 481.

Notes on Books, &c.

THE SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.

THE PASTON LETTERS: THE CHAPTER HOUSE AT WESTMINSTER.

It is a good thing to see a venerable Society like that of the Antiquaries, which was incorporated upwards of a century since for the purpose of promoting "the Study of Antiquity and the History of former Times," coming forward when circumstances call for its interference, as the Society of Antiquaries has done in the past week, in the matter of the Paston Letters and the preservation of the Chapter House at Westminster.

The Paston Letters had, at the time of their publication, received as it were the imprimatur of the Society. The originals had been deposited in their library for inspection by the Members, among whom were some of the best Palæographers this country has ever seen. And as not a word of doubt, as to the genuineness of the Letters, was breathed by any of them, their authenticity was universally recognised.

When Mr. Herman Merivale published his "doubts," Mr. C. Knight Watson, the indefatigable Secretary of the Society—doubtless, with the cordial concurrence of the President and Council—felt that some action should be taken upon the matter by the Society; and he pressed upon Mr. Bruce the task of vindicating the authenticity of these valuable historical monuments: and for the same purpose, put himself in communication with Mr. Almack, who possessed important evidence as to their history. When the rumour of the discovery of the Originals of the fifth volume reached Mr. Watson, he at once communicated with Mr. Frere, who at his request kindly consented to submit such originals to the inspection of the Society. They were accordingly exhibited on Thursday the 30th November: when, after Mr. Almack's Paper had been read by the Secretary, and Mr. Bruce had read his defence of these curious letters, Mr. Merivale frankly congratulated the Society and the country at large on the result of the doubts he had raised a short time ago; and said the appearance of the originals of the fifth volume from custody beyond all suspicion had virtually ended the controversy.

We hope, however, that this unanimity will not prevent the Society from adopting Mr. Bruce's proposal for the appointment of a committee to examine and report upon the authenticity of these Letters. This can now be done with advantage, and an important literary question set at rest. Whereas, if this opportunity be neglected, the doubts now so temperately advanced by Mr. Merivale, may be put forward by some one less candid, and less readily convinced than that gentleman; and when, moreover, there may not be a Mr. Frere disposed to exhibit the Letters, nor a Mr. Bruce to vindicate them with the same ability and success.

Again, on Saturday last, a most numerous and influential meeting of the Fellows of the Society and other gentlemen interested in Archaeology assembled in the Chapter-House at Westminster, on the invitation of the Society of Antiquaries, for the purpose of impressing upon the Government the duty of restoring and preserving that beautiful and interesting monument. The Chair was taken by the Dean of Westminster, a Fellow of the Society (to whom the President, Lord Stanhope, gracefully resigned it), and who gave a lucid and interesting sketch of the history of the building—a meeting-place of the House of Commons, which sat in that Chapter House for three hundred years; and then proceeded to show how that, for the last three hundred years, it had been used by the Government as the depository of the most important records of the kingdom. The Dean was followed by Mr. Gilbert Scott, who pointed out the chief architectural features of the building, &c. Various resolutions in support of the object of the meeting were then moved and seconded by Earl Stanhope, the Dean of St. Paul's, Mr. Bouverie Hope, Sir E. Head, Sir W. Page Wood, Mr. Tite, the Dean of Chichester, and Lord Lyttelton. Mr. Tite and Mr. Cowper fairly pointed out the difficulty which the Government would meet with, unless, when restored, the building could be applied to some practical purpose; and various ingenious suggestions for its future use were made. But all were open to grave objections; and we believe, if this movement is to be attended with success, the promoters must urge it on the broad ground—and the real ground—that the Chapter House (which has been used and abused by the Government for three hundred years), is, as the cradle of the House of Commons, and so the cradle of the Liberty of England, an historical monument of the highest interest, which should be carefully restored and preserved: while its architectural beauties invest it with the additional claim of being a work of art calculated to educate and elevate all classes of the people.

This is a great national object; and as such, the various Literary and Antiquarian Societies throughout the country should now come forward and promote it, by petitions to the House of Commons, and by urging the local Members to bring their influence to bear in support of such petitions.

Be the result, however, what it may, and we can scarcely doubt that the efforts now making will be attended with success, the present movement is highly creditable to the Society of Antiquaries.

Notes.

AUTOGRAPHS IN BOOKS.

1. Gulielmi Neubrigensis Historia, Antw., 1567, 8vo.—The volume is full of MS. notes: and on the title, in the same hand, occurs: "Nusquā tuta fides. Roger Twysden, 1625."

2. Sir Walter Raleigh's Historie of the World, 1614, folio.—With the autograph of his son, Carew Raleigh. While upon the Raleighs, it may be worth pointing out that, in the celebrated episode of Sir Walter throwing down his cloak before Queen Elizabeth at Greenwich, we seem to have an example of the old oriental and Scriptural practice. See Burder's Oriental Literature, i. 443.

3. Castaneda, F. L. de. First Booke of the Discoverie and Conqueste of the East Indias. Translated by N. L. 1582, 4to.—On the title is the autograph of [Sir] W. Ingleby, and his memorandum of the price paid by him, "pretio vj. vj^d." A second copy of the same volume is extant, having on the last leaf the autograph of Edward Blount—the same person probably who, with Isaac Jaggard, published the first edition of Shakespeare.

4. Basire (Isaac). Sacriledge Arraigned and Condemned. Second edition, 1668, 8vo.—A copy exists with Basire's autograph inscription: "For my honoured friend, Sir Richard Lloyd."

5. Comedies, Tragi-comedies, &c., by Mr. William Cartwright. London, 1651, 8vo.—With the book-plate of "Thomas Cartwright, of Aynho, in the county of Northampton, Esq. 1698." Early English book-plates with dates are of very great rarity. Was this Thomas Cartwright related to William? He appears to have been interested in the book, for the marginalia, presumed to be his, are numerous, if not very important.

6. The Unkind Deserter of Loyal Men and True Frinds. [By Nicholas French.] Superiorum Permissu, 1676, 8vo.—On the fly-leaf there is this inscription: "This Booke belongs to y^e English Nuns of St Dominikes order in Bruxells. 1696."

7. Vilvain (Robert). Theoremata Theologica. Printed for the author. 1654, 4to:—

"For my noble friend, Arthur Trevor, Esquire—

This small work, faithful Trevor, I give you.

But to few els, as a pledge of love most true.

"Yours many waies obliged, ROB. VILVAIN."

8. Plumptre (Huntingdon). Epigrammaton Opusculum. 1629, 8vo. Presentation copy from the author, with the following inscription on the verso of the leaf before the title:—

"Medicinis Doctori Eruditissimo,
Nec minus Poetæ quam medico
D^{no} Francesco Pruicano hoc quicquid est libelli in nouæ amicitie fœdus
voui et Sacrauit,
Huntingdonus
Plumptre."

It afterwards came into the possession of his great-nephew, Russel Plumptre, M.D., who has recorded the fact thus on another spare leaf:—

"E. Libris
Russel Plumptre,
M.D. et Prof. Reg. Med.
A.D. 1785,
Æt. 76.
Qui
Huntingdoni Plumptre
Pronepos
Erat."

On another leaf he has transcribed, from the copy which the author presented to the library of St. John's College, Cambridge, the ensuing particulars. He notes that they were copied by him in 1747:—

"Augustissima Divi Johannis
Bibliothecæ hunc libellum suum non legendum, sed penitus
Reponendum, vovit
Huntingdonus Plumptre, quondam Johannensis.

Bibliotheca, tui modicum cape munus Alumnii,
Atq. in Pierio grata reconde sinu,
Paulinas fugiens quid te petat Erro tabernas,
Da veniam: patriâ gestit obire sua,
Fas sit Apollinis jam se mandare sepulchro,
Cum vitâ illectum destitatur opus.
I, moritura, sacri in penetrabile Joannis, et isto,
Quo cepisti animam, (Musa) repono loco."

On a piece of paper, pinned to a fly-leaf, somebody else has written: "Huntingdon Plumptre, Trinity Hall, A.B. 1622; A.M. 1626; M.D. March 30, 1631."

At the end, on a blank leaf, Russel Plumptre himself extracts a passage alluding to his ancestor from Barnes's edition of Homer's Batrachomyomachia, Prefatio; and two more modern hands refer to Wood's Fæsti, and to the Memoirs of Colonel Hutchinson.

So much for a very rare volume, which contains much of interest in relation to the Byrons of Nottinghamshire.

9. Powell (Tho.). The Attourney's Academy. London, printed for Benjamin Fisher, 1623, 4to.—With the autograph on fly-leaf of T. Hobbes, of Malmesbury, in his small-hand. Powell's work would scarcely have been selected by Hobbes, if he had limited himself to two or three great authors, according to the rather popular fallacy.

W. CAREW HAZLITT.

I have had for many years in my possession a volume entitled "Treize Sermons sur Divers Textes de l'Ecriture Sainte, par Jean Maximilien De l'Angle," printed at Geneva in the year 1684. On the first leaf is written "E Libris Mandeville, May y^e 17th, 1688. I took coach for Nottingham^e, 1688."

As Lord Mandeville's autograph was written not quite a fortnight after James II. had "made an Order in Council that his Declaration of the preceding week should be read on two successive Sundays," &c., I think that a peculiar significance is attached to the words "I took coach for Nottingham^e." At a later period, in 1688, Nottingham, Macaulay tells us, "became the headquarters of the Northern insurrection." And again "Four powerful and wealthy Earls, Manchester," (Lord Mandeville's father), "Stamford, Rutland, and Chesterfield, repaired to Nottingham." W. T.

JAMES ALBAN GIBBES.

In examining the "long list of worthies" recorded by Mr. Barrett in his History and Antiquities of Bristol, I have occasionally exposed his incorrect statements through your columns, as in the instance of Sebastian Cabot (3rd S. i. 48) and others; and I now send for your acceptance a memoir of another individual, who, says that writer, was "of Bristol"—meaning, of course, that he was born in Bristol; and he also states that his father "was physician to Queen Henrietta Maria and Mrs. Mary Stoner," instead of being physician to the former and husband to the latter! As long ago as 1858, I communicated an article on this subject to a local journal; but as such publications are generally too ephemeral to preserve antiquarian matters from perishing, I have thought that, if worth saving at all for the use of future biographers, its place would be found in "N. & Q."

Some years have elapsed since I had the good fortune to secure a small volume of Latin poems, entitled "Carminum Jacobi Albani Ghibbesii, Poetæ Laureati Cæsarei, Pars Lyrica; ad exemplum Q. Horatii Flacci quam proximè concinnata." It was printed at Rome; and the dedication, to "Clementi IX., Pontifici," concludes with "Sanctitati tuæ Deuotissimè addictus J. A. Ghibbesius." In Tuâ Urbe, Kal. Januar. 1688." Then follows a "Prefatio ad Lectorem," and "Auctoris Vitæ Epitome, ex magno Opere Illustris: Viri, D. Caroli Cartharii, Consistoria Advocati, cui titulus, De Romano Athenæo, decerpta," of which the following is a correct translation:—

"In the island of Great Britain, which we call England, a city stands out pre-eminent, which, having received the name of Troy at its foundation, and having been made a Roman colony, was at length called London by Lydus or Lyddus, a chieftain, and the restorer of the self-same city. Under its sky, William Ghibbesius and Mary Stonora—the one a native of Bristol, the other of Oxford, the parents of our memorable author—made their habitation; but being banished on account of religion by King James, they at length changed their own country for that of France. James Alban Ghibbesius, therefore, I present to you an Englishman by stock, but a Frenchman by birth; who, when born into the world, was called James in the holy water of baptism, but Alban in honour of the first English martyr, at the sacred rite of christening. Being invited about his ninth year by his parents, he made a journey to England, whither they themselves also, having set out from exile, and having been restored to their country after eleven years, had returned a little before. Hence, as if imitating Ulysses by his continual love of travelling, Ghibbesius, as they say, with ships and horses, sets out in the pursuit of Wisdom. Having travelled over Belgium, Spain, Germany, and Italy, in each separate place he obtained the honour which literature bestows, and the friendship of renowned and illustrious men, and 'saw the manners and cities of many.' At length he thought that the course of virtue and glory with his foot, his steps with his mind, if indeed he could stay his mind, should be fixed at Rome; in this light, I say, of the whole world, and capital of all nations—the theatre, as it were, of talent. Urban VIII., the pontiff of immortal memory reigned, at the expiration of whose last year Ghibbesius arrived at the city, being twenty-eight years old; where continually (if a year and ten months be excepted, in which, being invited by Francis, Duke of Modena, at a great price, to instruct his son Almericus, he was absent from Rome; on account of ill health, however, he was not able to keep himself from returning) he lived under the patronage and in the train of Bernardin Spada, a Cardinal, and a great lover of literature, up to the time of the Cardinal's death, when he gained the protection of Justinian and still enjoys it. I should here recount the great natural gifts, the accomplishments, and knowledge of Ghibbesius, had not the pen of the Cardinal himself expressed the same to the life in a letter sent to the Duke of Modena, to be added to this work. He went to Modena; but through ill-health, as I have shown, not being able to remain there long, he returned to Rome; and at his return the Emperor, in no degree the less than before, overwhelmed him with the glory of praise and rewards. Moreover, he experienced the bounty of Alexander VII., the Pope, a man most inclined towards the fine arts; at whose decree, on the death of Henry Chisellius, a man of high renown, a professor of polite literature at the seat of Roman literature for thirty-five years, Ghibbesius was exalted to the vacant chair in 1657. But how well he performs the duty demanded of him the learned city itself tells, many works unceasingly edited have confirmed, and more yet to be published will prove. He lives in the palace of the world, in stature neither too tall or too short, slender in form, of commanding look, slow step, light complexion, ashen hair, the glance of his eye not severe but very searching; wholly engaged in study and toil, unknown to no one. These few remarks I have rapidly drawn up concerning J. A. Ghibbesius, as relating to a man remarkable and well versed in the whole round of arts and sciences; having given his life elsewhere with more extensive pen, where I have fully shown both all the honours before received in the name of virtue and literature, as well as the most liberal presents of great men; and have expressly pointed out the tributes offered to him in a certain contest as it were among Kings, of congratulations and magnificence, on account of his excellent skill in poetry. But the gifts of fortune (for the sake of brevity) being omitted in this place, which can be read at large in my work, De Romano Athenæo. I will mention only that reward of a bright genius due to true virtue—the diploma of the august Emperor Leopold, lately sent to Rome for him, with a golden chain and medal, whereby Ghibbesius was emphatically declared the Laureate Poet of Cæsar; spontaneously, indeed, and with honour hitherto awarded to no one since Petrarch.

"Also may be mentioned the favour of that most wise Prince, Clement IX., the supreme pontiff; who was greatly attached to our poet, and was his former patron; to whose presence being admitted, and to a kiss of his sacred foot, did not disclaim in remarkable words to compliment him very courteously; from whose more than imperial mind, and almost incredible favour towards all literary men, there is nothing so great or noble which he may not almost of a right expect."

It is clear, from the above, that the father and mother of James Alban Gibbes had resided in France two years before he was born in that country, and that he never saw England until nine years afterwards; which fact at once decides that he was not "of Bristol," as stated by Mr. Barrett."

GEORGE PRYCE.

City Library, Bristol.

THE TEMPLES.

Can the Editor of "N. & Q." find room for the following cutting from the Leeds Mercury of Oct. 27?—

"A 'Constant Reader' writes to the Post:—'For domestic and historical purposes I have long been a collector of materials connected with the "Temple Pedigree," and have had large correspondence with the heads of families connected by blood or marriage with that noble and illustrious race. Many journals seem to forget the axiom seniores priores, and represent the Temples as extinct. This may, alas! be true of Anthony's descendants; and what a glorious sunset! But Anthony had an elder brother, John, father of the first baronet (created Nov. 12, 1112), who, as you rightly state, was the "ancestor of the House of Buckingham." From him descended the famous warrior Sir Richard, fourth baronet, created Lord Cobham, Oct. 19, 1714, celebrated in Thomson's Seasons (Autumn), in planting trees at Stowe:—

"While thus we talk, and thro' Elysian vales
Delighted rove, perhaps a sigh escapes;
What pity, Cobham, thou thy verdant files
Of order'd trees shouldst here inglorious range,
Instead of squadrons flowing o'er the field,
And long embattled hosts!"

Your account traces the family through ten descents from the grandson of Leofric, named Del Temple, from his manor of Temple, in Leicestershire. Burke makes Peter Temple twelfth in descent from the said Henry del Temple. I visited the ruins of the old hall in 1833, and found the family arms still existing on the wainscot in the dining-room. The registers of Sibstone-cum-Temple record 33 births and 12 burials of this ancient family; thus they appear to have been as prolific in that day as Esther, wife of the first baronet, who had four sons and

* Perhaps I ought to mention that, in every case where this volume is catalogued, Ghibbesius is said to have been a native of Bristol, who was taken to Rome in his childhood, which we find is not true. The book is said to be "very rare," a copy of it having sold for four guineas.

nine daughters; and Fuller, in his Worthies of England, relates that she lived to see 700 of her descendants; and that he lost a wager in denying the fact could be proved. I have collected many interesting particulars and anecdotes of this celebrated family. The descendants of John, second son of the first baronet, settled at Sulby, near Welford. The last of that line, Edward, was buried at Sibberton-cum-Welford in 1796, with three sisters, the children of Purbeck Temple; the headstone to Edward's grave bears the Temple arms. Edward Temple, who married (1617) Eleanor Harvey, registered his pedigree in the College of Arms, 1683. The epitaph to his wife on a tablet in Welford Church, may interest many an antiquarian reader:—Eleanora Temple. Hic juxta sua est. Uxor, Mater, Xتنا, omnimoda virtute. F. filias cohæredibusq. Stephani Haruzi, de Hardingham, in Com. Northam. equitis de Balneis, et Mariæ Uxoris ejus, filia et hæredis unice Ric. Murden de Norton Murden, in Com. War. Armigeri.—Quinta Nupta. Edmundo Temple, de Sulby in Com. North. armigero, Johis. Temple, de Stowe, in Com. Bucks, equitis, et Dorotheæ uxoris ejus, filia et hæredis Edm. Len, de Stanton (Bury) eodem Com. armigeri, filio quinto, cui reliquit.

filios {	Stephanium	filias {	Mariam, Eleanoram,
iii {	Johannem	v {	Dorotheam, Stephanam,
	Edmundum		Hestherem,

a cujus natali paucis obiit Die 23 Decembris

Anno {	Domini 1661
	Ætatis 35
	Conjugii 13

Temple arms impaled with a bend, pearl, charged with 3 trefoils, slipped, proper, now borne by the Marquis of Bristol, showing his descent from the Harveys olim Harveys (Harveys now Herveys). I have no doubt the story of the 'famous' Godiva (now revived in Tennyson's beautiful poem) is substantially correct. An historian in the reign of William III. declares that there then existed in one of the church windows in Coventry the following distich:—

'Lurick, for love of thee,
I do set Coventry toll free.'

"This is, as the poet says,

'The woman of a thousand summers back,
Godiva, wife to that grim earl who ruled
In Coventry.'"

A LORD OF A MANOR.

EPITAPHS FROM ABROAD.—

Church of Saint Nicolas, Ghent. Choir. White marble slab to memory of Nicolas French.

D. O. M.

Siste viator, audi, lege, luge.

Hic jacet

Illustrissimus ac reverendissimus præsul

Nicolaus French,

Fernensium in Hibernia Episcopus Humilis:

Sacra Capellæ Pontificæ Comes Assistens:

supremi concilii regni Hybernæ consiliarius ab eodem ad Innocentium X. Pap. cum autoritate deputatus:

illustrissimorum ac reverendissimorum

episcoporum S. Jacobi in Gallicia

Parisiensis in Gallia, ac demum Gaudensis in Flandria

Coadjutor indefessus:

hæresiarcharum, ac hæreticorum tam verbo, quam calamo profigitor acerrimus, collegii pastoralis Hybernorum Lovanii alumnus, magister, præses, benefactor, fundata ibidem bursa 180 flor. annue in perpetuum pro capaciore ingeniis:

tandem exultatus sui a dilectis, patria, episcopatu et grege ob fidem anno 25, presul emeritus emensis pro ecclesia Dei innumeris periculis ac persecutionibus, cunctis semper gratus, omnibus spectabilis, non sine magno patrie sue prejudicio, bonorumque, suspiriis ac lacrymis hoc marmore tegitur, qui vere fuit:
ANIMO pontifex, Verbo angelus: vita sacerdos obijt Gandavi in metropoli Flandriae:
ætatis 74, episcopatus anno 30, incarnationis dominicæ 1678, mensis augusti 23.
Requiescat in pace.

W. H. JAMES WEALE.

SIR THOMAS OVERBURY'S "WORKS."—It is to be regretted that the last editor of Overbury did not resort to a MS. of The Wife, in recommitting it to the press; as all the printed copies are corrupt, in some places so much so as to make complete nonsense of what the author wrote. I do not believe that Sir Thomas Overbury wrote many of the Characters. Were they from his pen at all? At all events, such as were clearly by another pen ought to have been omitted. The fifth edition of The Wife was printed in 1614, 4to (not 8vo), "by T. C. for Laurence Lisle;" and there is an impression by H. Hills, in Blackfriars, 1710, 8vo. The "D. T.," who has verses before the poem, was probably Daniel Tuvill. I am very far from being satisfied that, by "R. Ca.," we are to understand Richard Carew of Anthony; but it is possible, nay, likely. See Ellis's Letters of Eminent Literary Men, p. 98. A broadside by S. Rowlands, upon the death of Sir Thomas Overbury, is preserved; and, I think, it is in the library of the Society of Antiquaries. W. CAREW HAZLITT.

VILLIERS, DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM.—

"In the worst inn's worst room, with mat half-hung,
The floors of plaster, and the walls of dung . . .
Great Villiers lies."

This is mere fiction: there is no reason to believe the house was ever an inn; it was certainly, at the time of the Duke's death, one of the best houses in the little town of Kirbymoorside in which it stands, for it is a good house yet; and with the exception of the windows, and a part which has been turned into a shop, shows no evidence of material modern change. The room, indeed, in which the duke is said to have died, is a mean one, small and not well lighted. D.

VALUE OF LAND IN THE CITY.—It is worth while making a note of the following:—On the 8th of November, Messrs. Fox and Bousfield sold by auction the site, in Gracechurch Street, of the old Spread Eagle Tavern. The plot, consisting of 12,000 feet, of which 5,600 were leasehold and the rest freehold, was put up at 50,000*l.*, and ultimately knocked down at the enormous sum of 95,000*l.* Such was the excitement and the number of bidders on the occasion, that the auctioneers had to adjourn from Garraway's to the greater accommodation of the London Tavern.

PHILIP S. KING.

REMAINS OF AN OLD ENGLISH SHIP.—

"The remains of an old ship, supposed to be identical with the one described by Gov. Bradford (Plymouth Plantation, pp. 217, 251), which was wrecked 'before a small blind harbour, that lies about the middle of Monamoyack Bay, to the southward of Cape Cod,' in the beginning of the winter of 1626-7, is now on exhibition upon Boston Common, and is attracting considerable attention."

W. W.

Malta.

EPIGRAM ON GIBBON THE HISTORIAN.—I found the following malignant epigram on Gibbon this morning in an almost forgotten work by the Rev. R. Polwhele. It is contained in a letter from Dr. Downman to the author, which I transcribe without abridgment.

Who is the archdeacon* to whom the writer attributes these bitter words?—

"April 29, 1794.

"My dear Friend,

"You have here the Epigram applied to Gibbon's Portrait, which our learned Archdeacon repeated to us the other day, though not as his own. I believe, however, that it is his own, and that the translation is Major Drewe's.

"Felix qui Satanae potuisti frangere vires;
Sed quod fecisti, mi Sophe! non satis est.
Dæmonis ut nostrâ de mente recedat imago
Horribilem vultum, Gibbone! tolle tuum.

"To sinners, wonderfully civil,
Gibbon declares there is no Devil.
Ah! trust him not! For, if we look
Upon his portrait in his book,
The boldest infidel would swear
He sees the very Devil there.

"Your's, &c.

"H. D."

(R. Polwhele, Traditions and Recollections, 1824, vol. i. p. 354.)

EDWARD PRACOCK.

Bottesford Manor, Brigg.

Queries.

ANONYMOUS DRAMA.—Will any of your readers oblige me by saying who wrote Editha and Edward, two historical dramatic sketches? The preface and introduction are signed "E. F.," and the imprint is, "London: printed by Thomas Davison, Whitefriars, MDCCCXXV." The volume is a thin octavo, and was not meant for the public eye. B. H. C.

ARCHDALL'S "MONASTICON."—Wanted, the full references to the following works, constantly referred to in Archdall's Monasticon Hibernicum; King's Collect; War. Mon.; Annal. St. Mary, Dubl. Pembridge. J. N. O.

[* The Rev. George Moore, M.A., Archdeacon of Cornwall; ob. March, 1807.—ED.]

CONFEDERATE COLOURS. — Will some of your correspondents give me an heraldic description of their unlucky flag? also, of the arms of the defunct East India Company? Bo-PSILIPZ.

ENNY'S "CORNISH SHERIFFS." — It is stated in Rev. R. Polwhele's Traditions and Recollections, 1826, vol. ii. p. 679, that F. Ennys, Esq., of Ennys amused himself by collecting anecdotes of the Cornish Sheriffs. Mr. Polwhele speaks of it as a valuable and entertaining work, which "I wish the present Mr. Ennys, who possesses the MS., would give . . . to the public." I am anxious to know whether this work has been printed, and if not, whether the MS. is still in existence?

K. P. D. E.

SIR JOHN FORTESCUE, KNT. — Can any reader of "N. & Q." inform me where copies may be found of the undermentioned inedited manuscript works of Sir John Fortescue, Knt., Chief Justice of the King's Bench, and Chancellor, during the reign of King Henry VI., viz.: —

1. A Dialogue between Understanding and Faith (an imperfect copy exists in the Cottonian Collection at the British Museum.) 2. Defensio Juris domus Lancastrie. 3. A Defence of the House of Lancaster (one leaf.) 4. Genealogy of the House of Lancaster. 5. Of the Title of the House of York. 6. A Defence of the House of York. 7. Genealogia Regum Scotiae. 8. A Prayer Book, "which savours much of the times we live in." And any other work or works by the same author existing only in MS., except the following already obtained: — Opusculum de Natura Legis Naturæ; A Declaration on Writings sent out of Scotland; A List of the Commodities of England.

Copies of articles 2–7 at one time formed part of the Cottonian MS. Otho. B. I. See Casley's Cat. of the Royal Library, p. 321, where it is stated to be burnt, which statement appears to be incorrect, as the volume was missing from the Cottonian Collection when Smith made his catalogue of that library previous to the fire (vide Cat. p. 69.) S.

8, Mornington Crescent, N.

JOHN HALKE, ROBERT DOD, ETC. — John Halke was admitted Rector of Upminster, Essex, September 14, 1638; in 1662 he resigned in favour of John Newton, who was inducted on the presentation of John Halke. (Newcourt, Rep. Eccl. ii. 618.) Calamy, in his account of ejected ministers, 1713, mentions Mr. Hawks as a sufferer at Upminster (vol. ii. 307); at vol. ii. p. 313, he mentions John Robotham as ejected from Upminster. (Compare Continuation of Acc. &c., 1727, p. 490.) On the other hand, the Dissenters' List of 1663, quoted by Walker (Sufferings of the Clergy, pt. ii. 387), speaks of Upminster as a sequestered living: if so, Halke must have suffered by the rebellion, not by the Act of Uniformity. I shall be obliged by any information relating to this John Halke.

I should also be obliged by the date of admission of Robert Dod to the rectory of Inworth, Essex (the date given in Newcourt is evidently incorrect), and the date of his death. The Dissenters' List of 1663, quoted by Walker (Sufferings of the Clergy, pt. ii. 281), speaks of this also as a sequestered living. Is there any evidence that such was the case?

I am also anxious to discover the date of death of John Fisher, admitted rector of Hallingbury Parva, Essex, Nov. —, 1610; also, who held the rectory during the Rebellion, and who was rector from the Restoration up to the admission of John Sherwell, A.M., 16 Nov. 1660.

JOHNSON BAILY.

Bishop Middleham.

MAJOR-GENERAL S. LAWRENCE. — Can any of your readers inform me anything about the parentage, birthplace, and of what country was the Major-General Stringer Lawrence, who lies buried in Westminster Abbey? The inscription on his monument only relates to his service. MILES.

"LONDON UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE." — Can any of your readers inform me as to the authorship of three articles published in the London University Magazine, 1829–30? viz.—I. "Ullo's Death: or, the Interruption." Translation of a German farce, by a "Student." Vol. ii. pp. 191–4.—II. Epilogue to the Phormio; Scene, Bow Street.—III. Vol. ii. pp. 380, 413. Translations from (Ehlen-schlager's Eric and Abel. Who edited this University Magazine? R. I.

"OUT OF SIGHT, OUT OF MIND." — This proverbial saying is in substance to be met with in the Imitation of Christ, by S. Thomas à Kempis, in the following words: —

"And when he is out of sight, quickly also is he out of mind." (Translation published by Messrs. Parker, Oxford, 1861, chap. xxiii.)

The work is reputed to have been written before 1430. Can any of your readers refer to an earlier use of this sentence? MARY STEWART.

PENANCE FOR INCONTINENCY. — By what authority would this punishment have been inflicted towards the close of Elizabeth's reign, or between that and the reign of Charles I.? And where ought search to be made for evidence of such a sentence having been carried out in Shropshire? P. F.

[* That is, Archbishop King's Collection of MSS. in the library of the Dublin Society, Kildare House.—ED.]

POISONOUS SPIDERS.—In Sir John Denham's Sophy, Act I. Sc. 2, is this passage:—

"From his virtues suck a poison,
As spiders do from flowers."

Is there any spider that obtains poison in this manner, or does it refer to the deadly Tarantula?
W. C. B.

REFERENCES WANTED.—I should feel much obliged if any of your correspondents would direct me to the original sources of the following passages, which occur in Dr. Giles's Sanctus Thomas Cantuariensis:—

1. "Frons populo nostra conveniat, intus autem omnia dissimilia sint."—Anon. Lambeth. ii. 81.

2. "Dignitas ecclesiastica regiam provehit potius quam adimit dignitatem, et regalis dignitas ecclesiasticam potius conservare quam tollere consuevit libertatem; etenim quasi quibusdam sibi invicem complexibus dignitas ecclesiastica et regalis occurrunt, quum nec reges sine ecclesia, nec ecclesia pacem sine protectione regis consequatur."—Ib. iv. 150; vi. 198, 227.

3. "Pater, cur tam cito nos deseris, aut cui desolatos relinquis?"—Herb. Bosham. vii. 323.

I have also observed this last quotation in the Life of Stephen of Oboize (Baluz. Miscell. iv. 175, 8vo); in the Chronicon Livonium Vetus, edited by Gruber (p. 8); in Arnold of Lübeck (b. iii. c. 3); in the Life of St. Francis, by Thomas of Celano (c. 117, Acta Sanctorum, Oct. 4); and in Wadding's Annales Minorum (i. 197, ed. 1).

J. C. R.

SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS'S PALETTE.—By an advertisement in the Times, Messrs. Christie & Co. announced for sale by auction at Liverpool, on the 20th November and nine following days, the works of art of the late Mr. R. H. Grundy. They comprise (inter alia) "Sir Joshua Reynolds's palette." Mr. Timbs, in his Anecdote Biography, 1860, mentions two of Sir Joshua's palettes: one in the National Gallery, and the other in the possession of Mr. Cribb of King Street, Covent Garden. (Pp. 113, 137.) This, however, I suppose, is another. What history attaches to it?
W. C. B.

SHIP FOUND AT BERNE.—In the Letters writ by a Turkish Spy, who lived Five-and-Forty Years undiscovered at Paris, occurs this passage:—

"In a mine in Switzerland about two hundred and thirty years ago there was found a whole ship fifty fathoms deep with all its tackle, and the dead bodies of many seamen."

Allusion is also made to the ship found at Berne in "The Digression of Ayre," in Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy.

Is it known what circumstance gave rise to this exaggerated relation?
H. C.

CAPTAIN STARKIE.—About the close of the last century, when dread of foreign invasion had caused all England to bristle with bayonets, a corps of volunteers, under the command of a Captain

Starkie, was formed in some part of Yorkshire. Of Captain Starkie I can give no other clue than the few words which I remember written in celebration of the corps by (if I mistake not) one of its members:—

"Our uniforms light blue, my boys, all turned up with red,
With a leather cap and feather to wear upon the head.

Chorus.

Wherever we go
With brave Captain Starkie,
That valiant hero-o-o-o."

The last word prolonged and usually accompanied by a fall of several hardy fists upon the deal table around which the singers sat, making the pots and glasses ring again."

MILES EBOR.

STYLE OF THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.—Can any of the readers of "N. & Q." inform me from some reliable document when the Archbishop of Canterbury was first addressed as "Your Grace?" As is well known, the primates were sometimes appointed legates; the power thus conferred is denominated legatine, and also, especially by earlier writers, legantine. I should be glad of any information as to this latter word.

F. H. ARNOLD.

Chichester.

"UTOPIA FOUND," ETC.—Who was the author of a small 8vo volume, entitled Utopia Found; being An Apology for Irish Absentees, Bath, 1813? As stated on the title-page, it is "addressed to a Friend in Connaught by an Absentee, residing in Bath."

ABRHA.

WINCHESTER SCHOOL.—In the Hampshire Repository, vol. ii. 1804, there is (communicated by Dr. Warton) a prologue written by Bishop Lowth for a performance of Venice Preserved, by the boys of Winchester College. I think this performance took place in 1754. Are the names of the performers known? Perhaps some of your Wykehamist correspondents would favour the readers of "N. & Q." with a copy of the prologue, if not too long for insertion. What is the latest instance of a play acted by Winchester scholars?
R. L.

YARMOUTH SUPERSTITION.—In Horne's Year Book, p. 254, is the following extraordinary passage:—

"The left seat at the gateway of the entrance to the church at Yarmouth is called the Devil's Seat, and is supposed to render any one who sits upon it particularly liable to misfortunes ever afterwards."

Does this superstition prevail at present, and is there any tradition as to its origin?
A. A.
Poets' Corner.

[* There was another Captain Starkey, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, a dwarf beggar and pot-house orator, whose Life was published in 1818, and epitomised in Horne's Every-Day Book, pp. 922, 965, 1510.—ED.]

Queries with Answers.

FOREIGN ORDERS OF KNIGHTHOOD.—Will any of your readers politely inform me the name of a book in which I can find a correct description of the German, Italian, Spanish, &c., Orders of Knighthood? RHODOCANAKIS.

[Some account of the foreign Orders of Knighthood may be found in the following works:—

1. Sir Levett Hanson. An Accurate Historical Account of all the Orders of Knighthood at present existing in Europe; with a Critical Dissertation on the ancient and present state of those Equestrian Institutions. Lond. 8vo, 2 vols. 1802.
2. André Favyn. Le Théâtre d'Honneur et de Chevalerie. Paris. 4to. 1620.
3. C. H. von Gelbke. Description des Ordres de Chevalerie. Berlin, fol. 1832-41.
4. E. Dambreville. Abrégé Chronologique de l'Histoire des Ordres de Chevalerie. Paris. 8vo. 1807.
5. A. M. Perrot. Collection historique des Ordres de Chevalerie, civils et militaires, existant chez les différents peuples du monde. Paris. 4to. 1820.
6. Pierre Palliot. La vraie et parfaite science des Armoiries, ou L'Indice Armorial de Louvan Geliot augmenté. Paris, fol. 1661. Article "Ordres."
7. Al. Sylvii Torelli Armamentarium historico-legale Ordinum Equestrium et Militarium. Farol. 2 tom. en 3 vol. fol. 1751-58.
8. Viton de Saint-Alais. Histoire générale des Ordres de Chevalerie Civils et Militaires, existant en Europe. Paris. 4to. 1811.
9. Histoire des Ordres Militaires. Amst. 4 vols. 12mo. 1721.

Besides these there are particular histories of the most celebrated Orders.]

HEATHEN.—What is the likeliest derivation of heathen?—from the Greek ἡθνη, or the Saxon heathen? B.

[Dr. Richardson, a good authority, has given the following derivation of this word:—"HEATHEN, Goth. Haiþnui; A.-S. Heathne; Dut. Hedninge; Ger. Heydenen; Sw. Hedning; Gr. ἔθνη; Lat. Ethnicus, from the Gr. ἔθνος, a nation; applied emphatically to the ἡθνη, or nations not Jews. But Vossius would give the word a northern origin (in v. Pagus), viz. the Ger. Heydenen, locus agrestis, imprimis quæ erivis plena; places overgrown with heath. Because when the Christian religion was prevailing in cities, the rites of the Ethnici continued in locis agrestibus."

We think there can be little doubt that the immediate source of the word Heathen, as we have it in our language, was either the Anglo-Saxon Hæþen, or the corresponding term of some one of the kindred languages. As to the more remote origin of the word, Wachter thinks it was brought into Northern Europe by the first preachers of the Gospel, and suggests as its probable source Ethnicos, Matt. xviii. 17, or Athens, Eph. ii. 12. Of these two origins Wachter inclines to the latter, and probably most of our readers will prefer the former.]

SIR SIMONDS D'EWES' MSS.—In Nichols's Bibl. Topog. Brit. vol. vi. p. 34, the reader is referred to MS. Harl. 481-4, for the diary of Sir Simonds D'Ewes from Jan. 21, 1621, to March 24, 1646-7, and it is described as consisting of "four 8vo vols. in cipher." On consulting these four volumes, which, by-the-way are rather 12mo than 8vo, I find that vol. i. commences with Sir Simonds' diary for Jan. 1, 1621, and ends with April 20, 1624. But with vol. iii. a jump is made to 1642-3, and this and the remaining two volumes continue the diary down to 1646-7. Where then is the diary for the intermediate years? Nichols had certainly seen it, for he quotes from Sir Simonds' account of his courtship in 1626, and indeed this part of the diary has been frequently referred to. Also, on Jan. 1, 1621, the diary begins as follows:—"Now having finished my former booke upon the last of December, I thought good to begin a second narration with the new yeare," &c. Is the "former booke" known to be in existence? L. B. C.

[Our correspondent does not appear to have consulted The Autobiography and Correspondence of Sir Simonds D'Ewes, edited by J. O. Halliwell, Esq., 2 vols. 8vo, 1845. Chap. xiv. (vol. i.) A.D. 1626, is on Sir Simonds' courtship. It is probable the missing portions are in the library of the College of Arms, as Mr. Halliwell in his Preface (p. vii.) acknowledges his obligations to Sir C. G. Young, Garter, for a transcript of the Autobiography. In the Sale Catalogue of the Manuscript Library of Dawson Turner, June 6, 1859 (lots 129-138) are the following articles: Extracts from Sir Simonds Ewes' Journal, 1619-1626 (from Harl. MS. 646); Literary Correspondence, 1640-1649; Catalogues of his printed books and manuscripts, and Miscellanies.]

COBHAM COLLEGE, KENT.—Sir William Brooke, Lord Cobham, by his will dated 1566, vested the election of the inmates in the rector, churchwardens, "collectors," overseers, &c. Can any of your readers inform me what was the nature of the office of "collector" at the date of the testator's will? I presume all churchwardens and overseers then collected their own rates.

W. NEWMAN, Vestry Clerk.

Gravesend.

[The Collector mentioned in Lord Cobham's will appears to have been a local collector of taxes, such as the Collector of Peter-pence noticed in the Instructions for the Lord Privy Seal, A.D. 1537 (Strype's Memorials, Appendix, No. 79), where we read, that "the Archdeacons of Lincoln and Sarum paid the pence gathered to the Bishop; and the Bishop paid to the Collector, and had his acquittance by the name of Peter-pence." Hence we find that the nominators to the New College of Cobham in each parish were "the parson, vicar, minister, curate, churchwardens, sidemen, collectors, overseers, and super-visors of the poor of the parish." — Vide Thorpe's Registrum Roffense, ed. 1769, p. 247.]

LIMERICK HALFPENNY.—I have an Irish half-penny, Obv. IACOBVS . II . DEI . GRATIA. Bust in profile to right, laureat; neck draped, with a crown stamped on the centre of the neck. Rev. HIBERNIA, 1691. Hibernia seated, with a harp or cross in her right hand. Can any of your correspondents oblige me with a solution of the crown stamped on the king's neck; or refer me to any work on numismatics, where I can find a description of it? W. S. J.

[This is one of the coins called Hibernias, described and engraved in Simon's Essay on Irish Coins, 4to, 1749, p. 64, plate vii., No. 153. As neither Simon, Snelling, nor Ruding take the least notice of the crown stamped on the neck of the King, it would seem to have been subsequently added to the one possessed by our correspondent.]

Replies.

MARSHAL SOULT AND THE BATTLE OF TOULOUSE.

(3rd S. viii. 252, 340, 419.)

In reply to an inquiry under the above heading, in a recent number of "N. & Q." as to how Lord Wellington could justify Soult for having caused that sanguinary battle in 1814, I stated that Lord Wellington was most to blame, having been the aggressor, and aware that the allied sovereigns had been then in Paris for about a fortnight, and that they had declared Napoleon dethroned and Louis XVIII. Sovereign of France; the war ought to have been then considered as virtually at an end, as this proclamation of the allied sovereigns from the capital of France should have been regarded in the same light as if Napoleon had actually abdicated.

There were various replies in "N. & Q." which I did not consider deserving of notice, as they were from anonymous writers, and did not question the correctness of my facts, but clung to the fact that as the official notification of the abdication of Napoleon had not reached the hostile armies then preparing for battle at Toulouse, the thousands of lives thus sacrificed was justifiable.

I find, however, in a recent number of that publication, a letter from COLONEL PONSONBY of the Guards, containing an extract from the papers of his father, the late Sir Frederick Ponsonby, in which it is stated that he was the first who brought the intelligence of Napoleon's abdication to Lord Wellington, having preceded by some hours from Bordeaux Colonels Cooke and St. Simon, who were bearers of the official despatches to that effect. This extract from the papers of so distinguished an officer as Sir Frederick Ponsonby I consider deserving of notice, so far as regards my confirmation of all the facts therein contained, submitting at the same time that such facts do not at all disturb my views of the case, namely, that Lord Wellington, having been aware of this proclamation of the allied sovereigns as to the downfall of Napoleon and the succession of Louis XVIII., ought to have considered the war as much at an end as when Napoleon was forced to abdicate, consequently the loss of life in that battle was unnecessary, it being improbable, if not impossible, after the destruction of the French army in the Russian Campaign, and the invasion of France by the allied powers of Europe, North and South, the declarations in favour of Louis XVIII., and a termination of war at Bordeaux and other cities and towns, that Napoleon could continue to govern that country.

Even Napier, the historian of that war, who generally supported Wellington, admits this to have been an "unnecessary spilling of blood," one regiment alone, the gallant 42nd, having lost four-fifths of their number in their endeavour to retain one of Soult's fortified heights, after being overpowered by numbers, until supported by the 71st and 91st regiments, which were also reduced to what he termed an extended line of skirmishers, compared with what they had been in close contact at the commencement of that sanguinary conflict, — a conflict in which, as I commanded a Regiment, and, as one of the sufferers, from a musket-ball that has never been extracted, I am not likely to forget — which must justify my having a perfect recollection of these facts, and my defence of Soult from the blame which has been cast upon him, when he was not the aggressor, having only defended himself when attacked.

His conduct had been nevertheless so reprobated in this country from misrepresentations of these facts, that the late Lord Aberdeen expressed his surprise in the House of Lords "how any minister could be on amicable terms with a man capable of such a crime." This was noticed by Napier at the conclusion of his history, and how the Duke of Wellington was compelled to defend Soult; but he did not go so far as to say that the severity of the expressions used by Lord Aberdeen were more applicable to himself than to Soult, or, as expressed by Horace in "days of yore," —

"Mutato nomine de te fabula narratur."

This proclamation having been regarded by Napoleon and his followers as their coup de grace, was more worthy of attention than the act of abdication which followed as a necessary consequence; an act that could not be either expedited or retarded by the blood-stained laurels obtained on that occasion.

There were other important facts that should have operated upon the Duke's mind, and prevented this effusion of blood; namely, the ground being so wet in the valley, which was commanded by Soult's fortified heights, as not to admit of the artillery which was required to make breaches; the troops, moreover, not being provided with ladders which ought to have been also looked upon as indispensable for success, the consequence was that all the attacks made under the Duke's immediate orders on the enemy's left failed, with the loss of thousands of lives; and that if it had not been for the almost miraculous success of the two divisions (4th and 6th) detached under Beresford to the extreme right, a distance exceeding two miles (of which my regiment formed a part), this battle would not have been added to the Duke's glorious victories. How dearly it was purchased may be seen by the manner in which Napier describes certain regiments as reduced to thin lines of skirmishers compared to what they had been before the battle commenced. For laurels and vain glory so dearly purchased all that can be said is—Sic transit gloria mundi!

Should the foregoing facts not be questioned, no difference of opinion ought to exist as to whether Wellington or Soult were most to blame for the blood shed at Toulouse, nor respecting the fact as to the result of that battle not having tended in the slightest degree to expedite the abdication of Napoleon, which followed as a matter of course the proclamation of his dethronement by the Allied Sovereigns, and restoration of Louis XVIII., by whom, in conjunction with his allies, not only France but Europe might have been justly considered as then governed.

JOHN SCOTT LILLIE.

Union Club.

LIVES OF DR. BEATTIE.

(3rd S. viii. 349.)

Your Dalkeith correspondent, J. S. G., in giving some interesting information respecting the portraits of Dr. Beattie, makes some inquiries respecting their authorship which I fear will not easily be answered. Will you permit me to suggest to him, or any of your readers, that there is a much greater desideratum (as it seems to me), in regard to the same personage, in the want of any tolerable biography of this great poet.

And yet there are few subjects that afford a more interesting theme for the exercise of biographical genius than a good poetical life of Beattie. Nothing can be further from this than the miserably meagre and dull publication of Forbes, who shows himself much less anxious to erect a memorial of his author than of himself, and than whom it would have been difficult to find any one less qualified for the office he undertook, having produced what may be considered about the very worst specimen of literary biography that ever was written. His advanced age and proximate death may be an excuse for not having produced something better, but it is none for the egotism which urged him to undertake a work which ought to have been entrusted to better hands. The work is, moreover, not only faulty from its deficiencies, but positively disagreeable from its solemn and pompous egotism and affectation: utterly different from the pleasant gossiping egotism of Boswell. It is wonderful how such a man as Forbes appears in this work could have enjoyed such high consideration as he seems to have done in his lifetime, and even after it, in many quarters. Of course his work contains some interesting information, but for the best things in it he is more indebted to the pens of others than his own.

Yet this seems to be the only source of information generally known, even to literary men (if we except a few trivial anecdotes in Boswell, Nichols, and a very few others). Happily there is another Life of the poet of a very different character, and which supplies in a great degree just the information of which Forbes's is so miserably destitute. It is that by Alexander Bower, published in 1804, less than six months after Beattie's death, and more than two years before Forbes's work appeared, in a thin 8vo volume. He, too, was acquainted with Beattie and other members of his family, and made up by diligence in his researches for the scantiness of his materials and entire absence of any literary documents. For all these reasons it is wonderful that the work has remained so generally unknown. Combined with the documents which Forbes has preserved (scattered in letters, &c.), but not used, it would furnish tolerably sufficient materials for a future biographer. (The "Life" by Alexander Chalmers in his edition of The British Poets, though he, too, was acquainted with Beattie, is little else than an indifferent abridgment of Forbes.)

It would appear that Southey at one time thought of giving a biography of Beattie as he has done of Cowper, as it is difficult to conceive why else he should have taken the thankless trouble of giving an analysis of the series of letters in Forbes, published in his Common-Place Book.

I had also once the same intention, and prepared a large store of materials for that purpose, a small part of which, but the best, I have preserved, and shall be happy to place at the disposal of any who would make a good use of them, and give his address (or an address) in "N. & Q."

Does any one know who is the author of "The Minstrel in continuation of the poem left unfinished by Dr. Beattie. Book the third." (London, Longman & Co., 1808, 4to) P^o There is

[* In Bohn's Lives, p. 185, the Third Book of The Minstrel, 4to, 1808, is attributed to Mr. Merivale; by a copy of it, probably the only one, in that most valuable collection, the Bristol Library (Belles Lettres, M. 19), where I read it twenty years ago, and made notes of it. It contains fifty-seven stanzas, but very little action. The plan is different from that indicated by Beattie himself in his letter to Dr. Blacklock (Letter 17), and personally to Forbes (mentioned after Gray's letter, No. 46), because "the author had partly arranged his own design before the original design came to his knowledge"—an insufficient reason, if he had got no further.

Though the work is not a successful one, either as a sequel or a poem (partly for the above reason and partly for others), yet as it has been immortalised in name by being recorded in Watt's Bibliotheca Britannica, it deserves a notice, and even a reprint, though not in its original magnificent form.

W. D.

ISWARA: OSIRIS.

(3rd S. viii. 189.)

1. Lassen (Indische Alterthumskunde, i. 775) says that the meaning of om (otherwise A. O. M. or A. U. M.) cannot now be found in the Sanscrit, but that the word seems to be derived from the old Persic avan. If this be the case, there are not likely to be any Sanscrit "words, symbolic of Brahma and Vishnu, claiming A and U as their initial letters or their power." Iswara, moreover, is not the name of the third person of the triad. His name is Siva; and Iwara is a title common to all the three persons, the votary of each ascribing it exclusively to his own favourite among them. It means the Supreme God, or the Lord of the Universe, Brahm; whose three attributes—of the Creator, the Preserver, and the Destroyer—are personified as Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva.

2. Iswara-Siva is not Osiris in anything but the imperfect assonance of the words; and there are no deities in the Egyptian mythology corresponding with Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva; either in the sound of their names, or in their dignities or attributes.

3. More modern philological and mythological research does not justify the conclusion that the religion of ancient India was in all essential respects the same as that of Egypt, or that there was a connection between them in any respect whatever. There is nothing in common to these two, but what they may have possessed in common with all pagan religions, or what may have occurred independently to men placed in similar circumstances. In 1819 Dr. Pritchard, the great upholder of the unity of races, "confessed that no essential affinity has been traced between the languages of Egypt and of India; nor can we afford satisfactory proof, from authentic history or tradition, of any ancient intercourse between the natives of these countries, or demonstrate that they sprang from a common source. We must, therefore, rest the whole weight of our hypothesis (of identity of their mythologies) upon internal evidence." And in 1854 Sir G. Wilkinson said, very cautiously or doubtfully: "If there is any connection between the religions of Egypt and India, this must be ascribed to the period before the two races left Central Asia,"—that is to say, before their religions became developed into those systems that have been made the objects of comparison by Pritchard, Jones, Moor, and others.

Moor's Hindu Pantheon seems to be out of date as well as out of print. In the preface to a recent issue of the Plates (London, 1861), the editor, the Rev. A. P. Moor, says:

"The advances which have been made of late years in the study of Indian mythology have rendered it unadvisable to issue a new edition of the text of the Hindu Pantheon; nor did it seem just to the memory of the learned author, or to his reputation as one of the first orientalists of his day, to put forth, after an interval of many years, such views or theories of interpretation, as, though frequently the most just and able that have been propounded, he might at the present time, with the additional light afforded by more recent researches, have been inclined to modify or cancel."

V. S. V.

ISMAEL FITZADAM.

(3rd S. viii. 435.)

It must be a quarter of a century ago since I read the lines quoted by Sir J. EDMOND TERNANT; and the last stanza ran in my memory thus:—

"Yes! bury me deep in the infinite sea,
I should burst from a narrower tomb;
Could less than an ocean his sepulchre be,
Whose mandate to millions was doom?"

Where I had become so familiar with the poem, I could not recall; nor was I aware who had written it. But the thought occurred that I possessed two volumes of fugitive poetry—the relics of days when such literature was devoured—and at the end of the first series of The Poetical Album, edited by Alaric A. Watts in 1838, the following lines appear anonymously:—

'NAPOLEON MORIBUNDUS.

"Summe superblam

Quantum meritis."

"Yes! bury me deep in the infinite sea,
Let my heart have a limitless grave;
For my spirit in life was as fierce and free,
As the course of the tempest-wave.

"As far from the stretch of all earthly control
Were the fathomless depths of my mind;
And the ebb and flow of my single soul
Were as tides to the rest of mankind."

whom is probably meant John Herman Merivale, ob. April 25, 1844. See an account of him in the Genl. Mag. of July, 1844, p. 96.—Ed.]

"Then my briny pall shall engirdle the world,
As in life did the voice of my fame;
And each mutinous billow that's sky-ward curled,
Shall seem to re-echo my name.

"That name shall be storied in records sublime
In the uttermost corners of earth;
Now breathed as a curse, now a spell-word sublime,
In the glorified land of my birth.

My airy form on some lofty mast
In fire-fraught clouds shall appear,
And mix with the shriek of the hurricane blast,
My voice to the fancy of fear.

"Yes! plunge my dark heart in the infinite sea;
It would burst from a narrower tomb,
Shall less than an ocean his sepulchre be,
Whose mandate to millions was doom?"

The volumes which have been named also contain the following pieces by Ismael Fitzadam: "Stanzas written on the back of a Letter"; "A Farewell"; "Love: in five Sonnets"; "Parting"; "The Battle of Algiers"; "Stanzas written on the Grave of an Illegitimate Child"; and "The Hour of Phantasy." Several of the above were contributed to the Literary Gazette, in whose columns Miss Landon wrote "Lines suggested by the Death of Ismael Fitzadam." Every one of taste will agree with your accomplished correspondent, that poor J. F. deserved a better fate than the broken heart of a neglected genius:—

"To die in poverty and pride;
The light of hope and genius past;
Each feeling wrong, until the heart
Could bear no more, so broke at last."—L. E. L.

It appears to me that this neglected writer had much of that condensed power which is so remarkable in Campbell's War Lyrics; and his tenderness and delicacy are exquisitely shown in the five love sonnets. I hope we shall hear more about him.

ALFRED GATTY, D.D.

In the Literary Gazette, pp. 419-20, July 4, 1818, is a friendly critique on this author's first publication, The Harp of the Desert, &c. The editor thinks him "more likely an able poet than an able seaman:" and fixes his style and the character of his genius, as between that of Lord Byron and Walter Scott. Quotations from the poems are given in proof, and the conclusion is: "It is often beautiful, and always glowing with poetical fervour; there is no thought we could wish blotted, and few lines that we would censure as lame or incorrect."

In the Lit. Gaz. pp. 593-4, Sept. 16, 1820, is an article under the head "Poems, by a Common Sailor," written to pre-engage public attention in favour of Fitzadam's second volume, Lays on Land, which was then shortly to appear. The Editor quotes six poems from the manuscript, and says—

"The variety of talent which they display, their beauty, their pathos, their unaffected and pure poetic character, will plead more effectually than we can for our Poor Sailor."

In the same journal, pp. 635-6, Sept. 30, 1820, it appears that Jerdan, the editor, had done all in his power to benefit Fitzadam; but he says, "we had no knowledge whatever of the poet, except what his works and our anonymous friend had afforded. We have not at present even the means of tracing him."

The Lit. Gaz., pp. 326-8, May 26, 1821, contains an article on "Lays on Land," by Ismael Fitzadam, then just published. The editor avows all the warmth of an anxious friendship, that the author may receive "from the world the meed his genius deserves." He quotes the preface, and more than four columns from the poems; and closes his notice as follows:—

"We have declared that we will not try to interest the world more than it ought naturally and unwooed to be interested in this poet; nor will we." Let it look at the title-page, and these examples "by an able seaman," and—that must be enough."

The Lit. Gaz. pp. 411-12, June 28, 1823, contains a brief biography of Ismael Fitzadam, from which it appears that the unfortunate genius had an honest pride and independence which rendered the efforts of Jerdan less efficacious than was desired by the latter, who says:—

"Depression of spirits and a cankering sorrow at the neglect which he experienced from the world preyed on Fitzadam's health, and he left London with an almost broken heart. He retired, as we now learn, to his native land—to die."

Then follows a notice from the Erne Packet; or, Inneskillen Chronicle, stating that Fitzadam's real name was John Macken, son of Mr. Richard Macken of Brookeborough, in that county: that the writer was his kinsman, and fellow-editor of that journal, which owed the eminence it had attained almost entirely to the genius of Macken. He says,—"Those terse and elegant compositions both of prose and poetry, which have so often edified and delighted the readers of our paper, were all his own." His death, after a tedious illness, borne with true Christian patience, took place on the 7th June, 1823.

The biography concludes with a monody (of eighty lines) to the memory of Fitzadam, by L. E. L.

It seems that he was much befriended, while in London, by Henry Nugent Bell, who attained celebrity in connection with the Huntingdon Peerage Case. For this last, and other information, see Autobiography of William Jerdan, vol. iii. pp. 39-40, and Appendix C. p. 316.

I am not aware of a third volume of Fitzadam's poems, referred to by SIR J. EMERSON TENNYNT.

As far as I know, the above references are all that will be found in print relating to this great, but almost forgotten genius, Ismael Fitzadam.

W. LEE.

The real name of this gifted poet was John Macken: He was the eldest son of Mr. Richard Macken of Brookeborough, in the county of Fermanagh, in Ireland. He did not assume the name of Fitzadam in consequence of his first production, The Harp of the Desert, having failed to attract the attention which it assuredly deserved; for the volume was published under that name. He had served as a common sailor at the battle of Algiers. In 1821 he published his second volume of poetry, Lays on Land. He found a great friend in Mr. Jerdan, the proprietor and editor of the Literary Gazette; but all the efforts of that gentleman failed to procure for him any substantial patronage. He accordingly left London, wholly disheartened and in broken health, for his native land, and became the originator and joint editor of the Erne Packet, or Enniskillen Chronicle, to which he contributed many elegant compositions in prose and poetry. But only two years after the publication of his Lays on Land, which was his last literary venture, except his pieces in the Erne Packet, he died on the 7th of June, 1823. Further particulars of this extraordinary genius may be read in the Literary Gazette for June 28, 1823, and in the third volume of the Autobiography of Wm. Jerdan, Esq.

F. C. H.

WALTONIAN QUERIES.

(2nd S. iii. 288.)

Who is the "Ward" cited by John Hockenull, Esq., in his Pleasant Hexameter Verses in Praise of Mr. (Thomas) Barker's Book of Angling?

"Markham, Ward, Lawson, dare you with Barker now compare?"

This query has been put by others, besides RIVERLENSIS. A brother angling-book collector suggests (and with every show of probability) that the Ward in question was the translator of The Secrets of Alexis (of Piedmont), published in 1615, and into which he introduced, at pp. 198 and 150, certain recipes, "To Catch River Fish," "How to take great Store of Fish," &c. Lawson's contributions to angling literature were of a similar character, being limited to the practical notes and recipes given with the early reprints of "The Secrets of Angling," by J. D."

"Who was Robert Nobbe?" The name is a printer's blunder, and should be Noble. The latter has no connection with Robert Nobbes, the "Father of Trollers," with whom he is identified in the foot-note.

I take RIVERLENSIS to be the American editor of the Complete Angler, the late Dr. Bethune himself, as in the list of that gentleman's Angling Library occurs the MS., which he thus describes:

"Arte Piscatoria (De), Concerning Angling for a Trout or Grayling.

"This is a very curious MS. by Robert Noble, who appears to have been a clergyman. It begins thus:—

"8 waies, 1. At the top; 2. At the bottom; 3. In the middle. At the top with a fly. At the bottom, with a ground-bait. In the middle with a minnow or ground bait. At the top is of 2 sorts: 1. A quick fly; 2. An artificial fly. At the bottom is of 2 sorts: 1. By hand; 2. or with a float. For the middle, is of 2 sorts: 1. With a minnow for a trout; or, 2. With a ground-bait for a grayling or ombre, vulgo, cummdr.

1. Of fly-fishing at the top: 1. With a natural fly; 2. With an artificial or made fly.

"First, then, of the natural Fly, which are to be used in May and June only; namely, the Green-drake, the Stone-fly, and the Chamlet-fly, to which I may add the grasshopper, the most excellent of any.

"From this follows: 2. With an artificial or made fly, you are to angle with a line (or tawm), &c.

"Then follows a list of flies for each month, the same, and in nearly the same words as Cotton's, in his second part of the Angler, and the treatise breaks off.

"From this it is clear that either Cotton copied from the treatise, or the treatise is a synopsis from Cotton."

And I incline to believe the latter, and that the copyist, in abridging Cotton's instructions, introduced such slight modifications as were suggested by his personal experience. Such cases are common enough. Amongst the Sloane MSS. in the British Museum is a treatise on the sport, analogous to that of Noble, being made up of abridgments of contemporary works, such as Gilbert's Delight, and the True Art of Angling, by J. S.

T. WESTWOOD.

LONGEVITY: WIDOW ROWBOTTOM (3rd S. viii. 426).—Your correspondent speaks of this supposed centenarian as Sarah Edwards, afterwards Widow Rowbottom; but in some of the accounts of her, the certificate of her baptism at Shabbington, Bucks, is quoted, in which she is called Elizabeth Edwards. Perhaps the Rev. Mr. Bernays—who, from his letter to The Daily Telegraph, seems to have thoroughly investigated this case, will kindly tell us how the identity of Widow Sarah Rowbottom and this Elizabeth Edwards is established. I see he takes no notice of this discrepancy in the communication to which I have referred; and in which, by the bye, after stating that she was born in December, 1784, he goes on to say she had, therefore, not completed her 102nd year. Surely, supposing her identity with Elizabeth Edwards to be established, she had not even completed her 101st year. The fact of her son being eighty, does not prove her to have been 100—there are many mothers at seventeen and eighteen. When were her first and last child born?

M. S.

JOHN GAINES (3rd S. viii. 327, 426).—The following cutting is from the Manchester Courier for Nov. 20, 1865:—

"A CENTENARIAN IN YORKSHIRE."—Mr. John Gaines, of Aldfield, near Ripon, died on Saturday week, at the advanced age of 102 years. He was born on the 12th of August, 1763, and enjoyed excellent health to within a few days of his death. His mental faculties were unimpaired to the last."

It will be no difficult task for one of the readers of "N. & Q.," who resides in the neighbourhood of Ripon, to ascertain where Mr. Gaines was baptized, and if the date at all agrees with the alleged date of birth. This being found correct, it establishes a prima facie case; but unless good evidence can be produced to show that the man born in 1763 is the man who died "on Saturday week," we must consider it "not proven."

II. FISHWICK.

ANOTHER CENTENARIAN. — The Times of Nov. 23, 1865, contains a paragraph from the Lynn Advertiser, from which I make the following extract: —

"John Naylor of Hilgay died, and was buried in the same place, Oct. 30th and Nov. 3rd. His eldest son, who is sixty-nine, supposed him to be 110 years old; but by the baptismal register at Welney, he appears to have been 117. He was servant to Dr. Bayfield, Downham Market, some time before 1780; and the same to Mr. E. W. Manby (the Sailor's friend), at Woodhall, Hilgay, about 1794. The following is said to be an extract from the Register of Welney — '1748. John, son of John Naylor.'"

I indulge in the hope that some evidence may be got, which shall prove that this person was or was not the John Naylor of the register. I am now engaged in an endeavour to do so. If he lived with Dr. Bayfield in the capacity of "servant," before 1780, he certainly must be at a near approach to a century old at the time of his death; and assuming that he was only fifteen when he entered the Doctor's service, he would have been a man of five-score years. Unfortunately the time of his life, from 1748 to "some time before 1780," is not accounted for—let us hope it may be.

J. W. BATCHELOR.

Oliham.

A WRITER IN NOTES AND QUERIES (3rd S. viii. 450.) — The writer in Notes and Queries to whom Mr. W. CAREW HAZLITT refers is the undersigned. He has been an amateur editor and author for more than forty years, and has never concealed his name.

As Mr. HAZLITT admits that he is wholly unpractised in controversies of this class, it would be unhandsome on the part of the note-writer, who has had some experience in that line, to call him into the field; nor does he believe that any further illustration of the mystery in question could arise out of a contest with one who expresses himself so magnificently. Nevertheless, it being intimated that the said note-writer has described Thomas Thorpe, the publisher of the Sonnets of Shakspeare in 1609, as a simpleton, it seems fit to repeat his own words: T. T. was "a sagacious man, and a humorist withal." — "The volume of 1609 was no clandestine impression; nor was Thorpe an obscure man. He edited one of the posthumous works of Christopher Marlow, and published some of the plays of Ben. Jonson, Chapman, Marston, etc." The above quotations are from a pamphlet entitled, The sonnets of William Shakspeare: a critical disquisition suggested by a recent discovery. 1862. 8°.

The note-writer has since obtained some further information on Thorpe. He now records two particulars, reserving others for a more suitable occasion. Tom Coryate complains that Thorpe had printed the Odombian banquet, the most elaborate and exquisite specimen of quizzing in our literature, "hugger-mugger"; and the very submissive dedication of Thorpe to the earl of Pembroke, which the note-writer has read, and not without a touch of astonishment, seems to have been designed to make amends for the former unjustifiable offence in giving publicity to the PRIVATE earl of his lordship, then master W. H., by courtesy lord Herbert, to the only begetter of the sonnets, i.e. The earl of Southampton. BOLTON CORNET.

Barnes, S.W. 4 Dec.

DILAMGERBENDI: BINSTER (3rd S. viii. 390.) — With reference to the question whether there is an island between Hayling and Portsea Islands called Binster; if still extant, if inhabited, and what dimension, or if swallowed up by the sea? I have made reference to some old maps (Ordnance Survey): in one it is spelt North Benniss Island; in a more modern map, copied from, or said to be from, Ordnance maps, it is called and written Binster Island; in another, published by order of Government, by Jos. Avery, in 1788, it is there written Binster Island; it is the north-western island of our small group. At high tides it is nearly all under water; some twenty-five years back about an acre was cultivated, now abandoned; fifty years back there was a sheep way to drive sheep over to feed, but so many were drowned by the tides, that it was given up. It is in the manor of Bedhampton, the property of the late Lord Sherbourne, now, I believe, Mr. Dutton; it is inhabited only by wild birds, &c. I have not made reference to the exact dimensions, but it is about twenty or thirty acres. In reference to the word Binsted, there is Binstead near Bognor, Sussex; Binstead in the Isle of Wight; and Binsted, near Allon; and the name is not uncommon. J. S.

Bedhampton.

WALTON'S "LIVES" (2nd S. iii. 485.) — Mr. YEOWELL asks for information respecting a supposed second and third editions of the Lives, published between the years 1670 and 1675. My impression is, that no such editions ever appeared, and that the edition of 1675 is really the second collective issue. I account for its being styled the "fourth" on the title-page, by the fact that two of the Lives were therein reprinted for the fourth time—those of Donne and Hooker.

T. WESTWOOD.

LETE MAKE (3rd S. viii. 374.)—The use of the verb let, to cause, followed by a verb in the infinitive passive, is so common among early English writers that no difficulty ought to have been felt in explaining the words lete make; i. e. caused to be made. We have only to open our Chaucer, vol. i. p. 279:—

"For which this noble Theseus anon
Let senden after gentil Palamon;"

or, Robert of Gloucester, vol. i. p. 144:—

"Gode lawes, that were aleyd, nowe he lette make;
London, that were arst by nome, the ryght eyr he lette take."

VERB. SAP.

Lete make is simply caused to be made. Of this usage of let (= Germ. lassen), the following are examples out of many which might be given:—

"For which Theseus lowd anon test crië,
To styngen al rancour and al envye."

Chaucer, Knight's Tale, c. t. l. 2733.

"For which this noble Theseus anon
Let senden after gentil Palamon."

Ibid. l. 2973.

W. ALDIS WRIGHT.

Cambridge.

LORD PALMERSTON (3rd S. viii. 462.)—Lord Palmerston first appears in Punch with a sprig in his mouth at p. 245, vol. xxi. (1851). He is there represented as "The Judicious Bottleholder," and the sprig was subsequently used generally at the mere whim of the artist; although it was occasionally employed to mark Lord Palmerston, when forming one of a group. Mr. Grocott kindly called attention to Dr. Johnson's lines; but Mr. Punch's sprig was not of myrtle.

M. L.

Vine Cottage.

I believe the query of J., respecting the reason why the late Premier is represented in Punch with a bit of straw in his mouth, can be explained by the fact of a member of the House of Commons having applied to him the term stable, i. e. fixed, firm in resolution. Hence the double-entendre, and the bit of straw.

G. E. M.

Hastings.

ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH, EDINBURGH (3rd S. viii. 209.)—The architect of this church was Captain Andrew Fraser, of the Royal Engineers, the chief engineer in Scotland at the time of its foundation, in March, 1781. I have been unable to learn anything more of his history.

V. S. V.

JOHN DAY (3rd S. viii. 204, 391.)—We see no kind of reason to alter the opinion we have given (Athen. Cantab., ii. 475), that John Day, of Caius College, who wrote plays in conjunction with many others, was one of the authors of The Trai-vailes of Three English Brothers—Sir Thomas, Sir Anthony, and Mr. Robert Shirley; and sole author of The Parliament of Bees.

C. H. & THOMPSON COOPER.

Cambridge.

"WHOM THE GODS LOVE DIE YOUNG" (3rd S. viii. 171.)—A curious agreement with the ancient opinions on this subject occurs in a book on The Atonement, by R. S. Candlish, D.D., Principal of the New College, Edinburgh, and reputed "pope" of the Free Kirk (London, 1861). At p. 183, he says—

"The death of little children must be held to be one of the fruits of redemption. If there had been no atonement, there would have been no infant death. It is on account of the atonement that infants die. Their salvation is therefore sure. Christ has purchased for himself the joy of taking them, while yet unconscious of guilt or corruption, to be with him in paradise. That any children at all die—that so many little children die—is not the least among the benefits that flow from his interposition as the Saviour."

In a graveyard near Hartford, Connecticut, is an epitaph in these words:—

"Here lies two babies so dead as nits;
De Lord he kilt them with his ague fits.
When dey was too good to live mit me,
He took dem up to live mit He.
So he did."

(From Harper's Magazine, August 1856, p. 139.)

V. S. V.

"TATTERING A KIP" (3rd S. viii. 415.)—Wracking a house of ill-fame.

M.

THOMAS AND JOSEPH ARROWSMITH (3rd S. viii. 391.)—Thomas Arrowsmith, son of Joseph Arrowsmith, D.D., Master of St. John's College, Cambridge, born at Lynn Regis, Norfolk, and educated at Hitchin School, was admitted a pensioner of St. John's Oct. 9, 1651, æt. sixteen, being matriculated Dec. 17 following; but migrated to Trinity College, probably in 1653, when his father was appointed Master of that society. He was B.A. 1655-6; Fellow, 1656; M.A. 1659. On March 25, 1668, he was instituted to the vicarage of North Weld Basset, in Essex; and died in 1706. He has verses in the University collection on the accession of Richard Cromwell, 1658.

Joseph Arrowsmith, probably a brother of the foregoing, was matriculated as a pensioner of Trinity College, Dec. 15, 1663; B.A. 1666-7; Fellow, 1668; M.A. 1670. He has verses in the University collection on the death of George, Duke of Albemarle, 1670.

It is difficult to determine which of them wrote the comedy of The Reformation. It has been ascribed to Joseph; but, so far as we can make out, merely because he is the only Arrowsmith,

Fellow of Trinity, whose name occurs in the printed Graduati.

C. H. & THOMPSON COOPER.

Cambridge.

OURANG-OUTANG (3rd S. viii. 205.) — F. C. H. mentions "a species of ourang-outang." This is a common way of spelling the words; and I met with it again some days ago in a review, but it is wrong. The correct spelling is "orang-outan," or better "orang-utan" — the ou being French. Orang, in Malay, means "a man;" and utan, "a wood or forest": so that the two words together just mean "a man of the woods," or "a savage." The Malay word utang, or ítang, means debt or credit; and is, therefore, improperly used with orang. I have seen this stated elsewhere, but my immediate authority is the Mag. Pittoresque for August, 1865 (p. 266), the reading of which suggested this note.

V. S. V.

EGOISM AND EGOTISM (3rd S. viii. 414.) — In reply to your correspondent K. R. C., I would state that I take the distinction between egoism and egotism to be as follows: egoism signifies inordinate, or at least passionate self-love; egotism is the actual expression of that sentiment, by word or action (literally by a constant use of the pronoun, ego). Thus, a man may possess egoism without being guilty of egotism; the sentiment may be strong within him, though he may possess sufficient good taste to avoid making it the constant theme of his conversation. The term egoism is also applied to the doctrine of those who (following the philosopher René Descartes) hold that they are uncertain of every thing but their own existence, and the existence of the operations and conceptions of their minds. Egoist, it may be observed, is usually limited to the signification of a believer in this doctrine, while an egotist is a person continually speaking of self.

PIERCE EGAN, JUNR.

SUICIDE (3rd S. viii. 416.) — I can slightly help MR. EDWARD PEACOCK in his researches. Archbishop Trench, in his valuable little book on English, Past and Present, fifth ed., p. 100, says, respecting the origin of the word "suicide," —

"The coming up of 'suicide' is marked by the passage in Phillips's New World of Words, 1671, 8th edit., 'Nor less to be exploded is the word "suicide," which may as well seem to participate of sus, a sow, as of the pronoun, sui.'"

PIERCE EGAN, JUNR.

COSTREL (3rd S. viii. 394.) — This word occurs in Piers Plowman. Halliwell has it in his Archaic Dictionary, and defines it as "a small wooden bottle used by labourers in harvest time." I am told that the word (spelt koystrel) and the utensil are both still in use by rustics in some parts of Sussex. The Malvern Guide, with its "quaint verses," to which JAYDEE refers, I discovered the rhyme prowling through a museum, and admiring kept them by me for HIGH AND LOW W I have seen it state recollect) that sick when the tide begins time. It was alleged has a similar power has over the tides; begins to fail the way son dies. Can any of this statement occur a querist on "Death With regard to this stance it may be observed waves are less numerous in shallow water, for The rolling of the narrow sea), which not have a very bene

"TREEN" AND " (310, 381, 424.) — In hereon, though at the of Howel Dda, where frequently occurs, it is thereto. The said part. Singular to a Dr. O. Pugh's Welsh edition, the second word as corrupt, and his method of deriving Dr. Davies's Dictionary, 1753. The additions of Dr. Davies follow: — "Traian, Quoting also from gives the words, — "pensationis pro cred Wotton." Also, trae anawg yr pob gwerai tertia pars viri compilers of the Laws of sters." The word of Bible, either in its mutation. The word in the Welsh Conc it may be found in passim. The word of syntax ran = a sl As to "Quarterlar Celt or Manx. The be pedeirran, from p four, and rhan, a sha or rather its mutation, "pedwaran," is very commonly used in Glamorganshire. R. & M.

HUNDRED WEIGHT (8th S. viii. 415.)—The origin of the abbreviation cwt. is easily explained: C representing 100, and the letters wt. being respectively the initial and final letters of weight. The two horizontal strokes placed through € are probably connected with the similar ones in £.

W. C. R.

THE CHURCHING OF WOMEN (8th S. viii. 327, 422.)—I am induced by the remarks of your correspondents on this subject, to inquire, what is the authority for "the Churching of Women" being used, as it so invariably is in country churches, before "the General Thanksgiving"? It seems to me quite to break the service by its introduction there, and the congregation most usually sit down during its reading. The rubric certainly is indefinite as to the place (some convenient place), but there can be little doubt as to the Communion Table being the proper one for the officiating clergyman, and kneeling in front of the rails that for the woman. It is wholly silent as to the time; but the proper one would seem to be before the commencement of divine service. With all due deference to your valued correspondent, QUEEN'S GARDENS, yet I cannot think he is right in his assertion that the rubric requires the woman to repeat the Psalm, "I am well pleased," &c.; or, "Except the Lord," &c., after the clergyman. There is no direction whatever to that effect, as I think he will find by a reference to the Book of Common Prayer.*

OXFORDSHIRE.

That it was usual for the mothers of illegitimate children to be churched appears from the following passage from Crabbe's Poems, "The Parish Register," book i., "Baptisms":—

"Recorded next a babe of love I trace;
Of many loves, the mother's first disgrace.

For rite of churching soon she made her way,
In dread of scandal, should she miss the day:
Two matrons came, with them she humbly knelt,
Their actions copied, and their comforts felt,
From that great pain and peril to be free,
Though still in peril of that pain to be."

J. A. J. H.

* It would seem that the office "Of the Thanksgiving of Women after Childbirth," was intended to be said before the Communion Office, as commanded in the Articles of the Bishop of Norwich, 1536:—"It is to be done immediately before the Communion Service." Custom has, however, sanctioned its insertion before the General Thanksgiving at Morning and Evening Prayer.

The Psalms should certainly be repeated by the woman, with an audible voice, after the priest: see the opening address, "You shall therefore give hearty thanks unto God, and say," followed by the rubric, "Then shall the Priest say." Consult Wheatly On the Common Prayer.—ED.]

"BICKERINGS" (8th S. viii. 413.)—

"Bickerstaff (with its corruption bickerstak) was probably the sign of an inn. It seems to mean a staff for tilting or skirmishing. (Vide Bailey's Dictionary, voce 'Bicker.') In the old ballad of Chevy Chase, we read—

"Bowmen bicker'd upon the bent
With their broad arrows clear."

Lower's Essays on English Surnames, vol. i. p. 205.

Bailey derives the word bicker from the Welsh bicre (a contest) "or perhaps from bickeln, Du. to play at dice, which often gives occasion to wrangling and quarrelling." The first derivation seems preferable. Richardson offers amongst others, Skinner's etymology, v. picket, to fight with pikes. F. PHILLOTT.

COINCIDENCE (8th S. viii. 390.)—I remember my father, who was a contemporary of Burns, stating that the poet was very fond of reading old plays. A correspondent last week referred to an idea in an old comedy which is also to be found in Burns's song of "Green grow the rushes." I beg to refer to another "coincidence." In Burns's song, "Is there for honest poverty," occurs the following verse:—

"A king can mak a belted knight,
A marquis, duke, and a' that;
An honest man's aboon his might,
Guid faith he mauna fa' that."

The idea is to be found in these lines of Rowe:—

"Yet Heav'n that made me honest made me more Than e'er a king did when he made a lord."

If I mistake not, it has already been pointed out in "N. & Q." that the best thought in the same song—

"The rank is but the guinea's stamp,
The man's the gowd for a' that," is also to be found in an old play. C. ROSS.

COLLAR OF SS. (1st S. ii. passim.)—The derivations of the name of the collar of the royal livery, viz. the Collar of SS., are enumerated in pp. 186 and 362, and another is suggested by Dr. ROSE, p. 280. Another correspondent, O., denies that this term has any spiritual or literary derivation, p. 330. The editor's veto on a further discussion of "the origin and probable meaning of the Collar of Esses," p. 395, will perhaps after this long interval of time be withdrawn, and, although Mr. NICHOLS and Mr. FOSS think there can be no reasonable doubt of a letter being intended, pp. 362, 395, I beg leave to call their attention to the following ingenious theory in Mr. KING's Gnostics and their Remains, Ancient and Medieval, p. 76:—

"Almost invariably the back of such a gem (the Agathodæmon talisman) bears a peculiar symbol like the letter S or Z thrice repeated, and traversed by a bar through their middle, the purport of which cannot be more than conjectured. . . . It formerly struck me that it may have been a letter of the Assyrian cuneiform alphabet, to one of which it bears a strong resemblance."

blance; but now I am more inclined to suspect that this device has the same origin as the serpent-entwined club of Esculapius, itself so hard to account for. In many examples the SSS take the form of a spiral winding thrice around the rod in the middle. The medical potency also ascribed to the latter symbol of itself points out an analogy in signification to the distinctive attribute of the god of the healing art. Thus, in the age of Marcellus Empiricus, the fourth century, it had obtained a place in the pharmacopœia, for he recommends the physician to engrave this sigil on a cerulean jasper, and hang it round the neck of any one suffering from pleurisy, adding, 'You will obtain marvellous results.' Whether this promise be true or not, marvellous has been the vitality of the symbol; for reduced to a double S thus traversed by a bar, it became a favourite device in the times of chivalry, being received as the rebus of the word Fermesse (SS fermes); that is, the emblem of constancy. Here then in this Gnostic sigil is to be found the true origin of the SS in the collar of the garter, formerly styled the 'Collar of SSs,' rather than in the popular explanation that the letters are but the initials of Edward IV.'s motto. 'Soyez-loyal,' a prince posterior by a whole century to the institution of the order and its insignia."

BIBLIOTHECAR. CHETHAM.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

A Constitutional History of the British Empire from the Accession of Charles I. to the Restoration: with an Introduction tracing the Progress of Society and of the Constitution from the Feudal Times to the opening of the History, and including a particular Examination of Mr. Hume's Statements relative to the Character of the English Government. By George Brodie, Esq., Historiographer Royal of Scotland. Three Vols. 8vo.

It is now forty-three years since the former edition of this work was published. "During that time," Mr. Brodie remarks, "I have subjected my work to the most searching scrutiny, and carefully reperused my authorities. I have endeavoured, as far as possible, to correct my errors, making alterations and additions wherever by so doing I considered I could throw more light on any subject." Considering the number of historical authorities which have been published since the first edition of Mr. Brodie's book, we are surprised that he did not find more to alter. The great value of the work consisted originally, and still does so, in the searching way in which the writer has followed Hume, and exposed his inaccuracies, paragraph after paragraph. The author's principles are liberal, and his opinions of Charles I. severe and unfavourable, but he gives his authorities (the best at the time when he wrote) with great fairness. This new edition is a wonderful improvement on the former in printing, binding, and the general "get up" of the book. The number of volumes also is reduced from four to three, and the index much improved.

A History of the Gipsies, with Specimens of the Gipsy Language. By Walter Simson. Edited, with Preface, Introduction, and Notes, and a Disquisition on the Past, Present, and Future of Gipsydom, by James Simson. (S. Low & Son.)

We are somewhat startled by the author's assertion, "that there cannot be less than 250,000 gipsies of all castes, colours, characters, occupations, degrees of education, culture, and position in life, in the British Isles alone, and possibly double the number." Be that as it may, the gipsy race and the gipsy language are subjects of no ordinary interest, both socially and ethnologically; and the work before us—the result of much time, labour, and expense, is valuable as a contribution towards a complete history of this extraordinary people. The work is, for the most part, occupied with the gipsies of Scotland; but gipsydom is so much alike everywhere that most of what is true of the Scottish gipsy holds good of the rest of the race. The Index to the present work is full, and most useful.

The Literature of the Sabbath Question. By Robert Cox, F.S.A., Scotland. In Two Volumes. (MacLachlan & Stewart.)

This work is intended first, as a help to those who wish to study the Sabbath Question in a thorough and impartial manner, and, secondly, as a contribution to that discussion, and to the history of opinion about the weekly day of rest in Jewish and Christian times. It contains, in addition to the portions of Scripture which bear upon the subject, a copious bibliographical list of works in which the various opinions upon it are maintained, including occasionally very copious extracts. The whole forms a very complete and exhaustive handbook of the materials for the consideration of this important question.

BOOKS RECEIVED.—

An Enlarged and Illustrated Edition of Dr. Webster's Complete Dictionary of the English Language, thoroughly revised and improved. By Chauncey A. Goodrich, D.D., and Noah Porter, D.D. Part XII. (Bell & Daldy.)

We congratulate Messrs. Bell & Daldy on the completion of this very useful and valuable Dictionary.

Gutch's Literary and Scientific Register and Almanack for the Year 1866. (W. Stevens.)

When a work like this has gone on for a quarter of a century steadily improving, we need do no more than record its appearance.

Aurora; or, Rays of Light on the Road of Life. Original Table-Talk on all Kinds of Subjects. By W. Tarbet Young. (Rivington.)

A little book with many neatly expressed thoughts on every variety of subject.

A List of Provincial Words in Use at Wakefield, in Yorkshire. Collected by W. S. Banks. (J. R. Smith.)

Tommy Toddlers's Comic Almanack for all t' Foaks e t' World for 1866. (N. Hirst, Leeds.)

Two contributions to the history of the Yorkshire 'Doric,' and the latter very amusing.

DOCTOR MARIGOLD'S PRESCRIPTIONS forms the subject of the Christmas Number of All the Year Round. Mr. Dickens's introduction, in which he describes Doctor Marigold—a 'Cheap Jack!—is one of the finest bits of writing we shall see this Christmas.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE has passed into the hands of Messrs. Bradbury and Evans, and will be edited in future by Mr. E. Walford. We hope we see in this a security that the Biographical Department, the most valuable feature of Silvanus Urban, will be carefully looked after.

THE BRITISH ARMY AND NAVY REVIEW has been transferred to Mr. Bentley of New Burlington Street, who will publish the new Number for January, 1866.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES WANTED TO PURCHASE.

CHALMERS'S ENGLISH POETS, from Chaucer to Cowper, 8vo. 1810.
Vol. XII. containing Broomes, Pitt, &c.
Vol. XIII. " Collins, Dyer, &c.
Vol. XIV. " Akenaide, Boyse, &c.

* Letters stating particulars and lowest price, carriage free, to be sent to M^s. W. G. SMITH, Publisher of "NOTES & QUERIES," 22, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Notices to Correspondents.

THE CHRISTMAS NUMBER of "N. & Q." will be published on Saturday next, December 16th. Advertisements for insertion in it must be sent in by noon on Thursday, the 14th.

OUR CHRISTMAS NUMBER, to be published on Saturday next, will be enlarged to thirty-two pages, and will contain, in addition to many curious miscellaneous articles—

Two Christmas Notes.
Lancashire Proverbs.
Devonshire Household Tales.
Yarmouth Superstitions.
Peg Tankards.
Yorkshire, Yarmouth, and Ulster Folk Lore.
A Curious Custom.
O O at Christmas.
Yorkshire Household Riddles.
The Italian St. Swithin, &c.

NOTES ON BOOKS. We are compelled to postpone until next week our notices on Heure, Langens's beautiful Christmas book, The Life of Man Symmetrical, &c. by John Leighton; Smiler's Lives of Boulton and Watt; C. Knight's Old Booksmen; Dyer's Roma, &c.

M. D. The MS. Wick Bible was no doubt used by Mr. Forehall in the beautiful edition in four vols. 4to, published by the University of Oxford, which was edited by that gentleman and Mr J. Madden.

S. J. H. will find the names of the twelve candidates for the Oriel fellowships in "N. & Q." 3rd S. vi. 326, 329.

D. BAR BARNETWELL. The query respecting the lecture on Witchcraft at Huntingdon has appeared twice in "N. & Q." (1st S. vii. 231; 2. 164), but elicited no reply. No mention is made of this lecture in the Report of the Charity Commissioners.

ERRATUM.—3rd S. viii. p. 430, col. 1, line 24, the obelisk (†) should be placed after the word "unknown," at the end of the sentence preceding that in which it now stands.

A Reading Case for holding the weekly Nos. of "N. & Q." is now ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and Newsmen, price 1s. 6d.; or, free by post, direct from the publisher, for 1s. 6d.

"NOTES AND QUERIES" is published at noon on Friday, and is also issued in MONTHLY PARTS. The Subscription for SEVEN COPIES for Six Months forwarded direct from the Publisher (including the Half-yearly INDEX) is 11s. 6d., which may be paid by Post Office Order, payable at the Strand Post Office, in favour of WILLIAM G. SMITH, 22, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., where also all COMMUNICATIONS FOR THE EDITOR should be addressed.

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

THE CHRISTMAS GIFT BOOK.

In Foolscape 4to, elegantly printed and bound,

E NOCH A R D E N.

By ALFRED TENNYSON.

Copiously Illustrated by Drawings on Wood by ARTHUR HUGHES.

London: EDWARD MOXON & CO., Dover Street.

Now ready, in Two Volumes, post 8vo, price 21s. cloth,

S E E S A W. A N O V E L.

By FRANCESCO ABATL Edited by W. WINWOOD READE.

London: EDWARD MOXON & CO., Dover Street.

MOXON'S MINIATURE POETS.

I.

A SELECTION from the WORKS of ALFRED TENNYSON, Poet Laureate. Price 5s., elegant cloth, with Portrait, and ornamental headings.

II.

A SELECTION from the WORKS of ROBERT BROWNING. Price 5s., elegant cloth, with Portrait, and ornamental headings.

III.

A SELECTION from the WORKS of FREDERICK LOCKER. Illustrated by DOYLE and MILLAR. Price 10s. 6d. elegant cloth, with Portrait.

IV.

A SELECTION from the WORKS of WILLIAM WORDSWORTH, Poet Laureate, selected and arranged by FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE, M.A. Price, 1s. elegant cloth, with Portrait and ornamental headings.

MOXON'S MINIATURE POETS.

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.

I.

CHASTELARD: A Tragedy. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. Price 7s.

II.

ATALANTA IN CALYDON. Second and Cheap Edition. Price 6s. cloth.

III.

THE QUEEN-MOTHER and ROSAMOND. Two Plays. Price 1s. cloth.

LANCELOT and other POEMS. By WILLIAM FULFORD. Fcap. 8vo. Price 6s. cloth.

COWL and CAP and other POEMS. By MISS MACREADY. Price 6s. cloth.

POEMS by the late EDMUND J. ARMSTRONG, T.C.D. Price 10s. 6d. cloth.

London: MOXON & CO.

LAW LIFE ASSURANCE

FLEET STREET, LONDON

FOR THE ASSURANCE OF THE LIVES OF PERSONS IN EV

Invested Assets—FIVE-AND-A-QUARTER MILLION
Annual Income—HALF-A-MILLION

Assurances are granted upon the Lives of any Persons for Sums not exceeding £10,000, either with Premium without participation in Profits.

Profits are divided every fifth year, four-fifths thereof being appropriated to the persons assured on the Six Divisions of Profits which have been made, Bonuses amounting in the aggregate to Policies.

The Claims paid to 31st December, 1861, amounted to £6,590,091, being in respect of Sums assured on respect of Bonuses thereon.

Prospectuses, Statements of Accounts, Forms of Proposal, &c., may be obtained, and Assurance Country, or by application direct to the Actuary at the Office in London.

PARTRIDGE & COZENS, MANUFACTURING STATIONERS.

102, FLEET STREET, corner of Chancery Lane.

Carriage paid to the Country on Orders exceeding 20s.

The LARGEST and most varied Stock in the Kingdom of Note, Letter, and Fcap. Papers, Envelopes, Account and MS. Books, Household Papers, &c.

PARTRIDGE & COZENS' celebrated GUINEA CASE of STATIONERY forwarded free to any Railway Station in England, on receipt of Post-office Order.

NO CHARGE for Plain Stamping Crest, Arms, or Address on Paper or Envelopes. Coloured Stamp reduced to 1s. per 100. Polished Steel Crest Dies engraved for 5s. Business or address Dies from 3s.

SERMON PAPER, plain, 4s. per ream: Ruled ditto, 4s. 6d. An immense variety in all sizes and qualities always in stock.

Illustrated Price List of Ink-stands, Despatch Boxes, Stationery Cabinets, Postage Scales, Writing Cases, &c. post free.

THE PRETTIEST GIFT for a LADY is one of JONES'S GOLD LEVERS, at 11l. 11s. For a GENTLEMAN, one at 10l. 10s. Rewarded at the International Exhibition for "Cheapness of Production."

Manufactory, 43A, Strand, opposite Somerset House.

First Class Prize Medal, Dublin, 1863.

THE WORLD-RENEWED WHEELER & WILSON PRIZE MEDAL LOCK-STITCH SEWING MACHINES, from 9l. and upwards, with all recent improvements and Additions.

These machines execute all descriptions of work in any material with speed, strength, durability, beauty, and economy. They are ornamental in the Drawing Room, a pleasant and healthful exercise in use, and can be worked by a child. Instructions gratis to all purchasers. Illustrated Prospectus gratis and post free.

OFFICES & SALE ROOMS, 139, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

INK SOLVENT.—This preparation instantly removes ink, ironmould, and fruit stains from all kinds of linen, paper, or the skin, by merely wetting the stains with the SOLVENT. For removing blotts it is exceedingly convenient, as it obviates the use of an erasing knife. 1s. per bottle. Made only by PIESSE & LUBIN, 2, New Bond Street. The trade supplied.

SALOM'S NEW OPERA and FIELD GLASS, and THE RECONNOITERER GLASS, price 10s. 10d., sent free.—This "Tourist's Favourite," through extraordinary division of labour, distinctly shows small windows 10 miles off, landscape at 30 miles, Jupiter's moons, the Lunar Mountains, &c.—The MARQUESS OF CARMARTHEN: "The Reconnoiterer is very good." EARL OF BRADFORD: "I find it all you say, wonderfully powerful for so very small a glass."

EARL OF CAITHNESS: "It is a beautiful glass."—REV. LORD SCARSDALE "approves of it."—LORD GILFORTH, of Ampney: "Most useful."—LORD GALVAGH: "Remarkably good."—SIR DIONY CAVENDISH, of Brompton: "It gives me complete satisfaction, and is wonderfully good."—MAJOR STRAKEY, of Wrenbury: "Quite as powerful as that for which I gave 5l. 5s."—CAPT. SEXTON, Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield Lock: "I have found it effective at 1,000-yards range."—F. H. FAWCETT, of Farnley Hall, Esq.: "I never before met an article that so completely answered the recommendation of its maker, nor, although I have tried many, a Glass combining so much power for its size with so much clearness."

The Field: "We have carefully tried it at an 800-yard rifle range against all the Glasses possessed by the members of the Corps, and found it fully equal to any of those present, although they had cost more than four times its price." Naturalist and Quaker: "What intending tourist will now start without such an indispensable companion to a pleasure trip?"

The celebrated "HYTHE" GLASS shows bullet marks at 1,200 yards, and men at 3 miles, price 3l. 6d. All the above Glasses, respectively bearing the registered trade-marks, "Salom," "Reconnoiterer," and "Hythe," are only to be had direct from, and by written application to, SALOM & CO., 98, Prince's Street, EDINBURGH. No Agents of any kind in London nor elsewhere.

Five Days' Sale

TO be SOLD by

Upper Hall of the Sec Glasgow, on TUESDAY, following day, the very late STEPHEN WIL particularly rich in Old Poet referred to the Catalogue contents within the limits of the importance of 8l.

Also a small Collection Medals, and other Curious Catalogues, price 6l., w. or to 10l. H. G. CLARK, on the receipt of Six Postage

Glasgow, November, 1863

"Purity and

COLMAN'S P

bears their Trade Ma

It was the only Mustard

GREY

Their GENUINE and l

ticularly recommended for

For Medicinal Purp

Sold by

J. & J.

CHANG, the MA

tion.—This marvellou dinary sensation at the Cou at 232, Strand, from 10 till 4 14 Stamps.—H. G. CLARK

THE GALANTY

a GALANTY SHOW

Bridge, Billy Button, Moth

free for 12 Stamps.—H. G. C

THE MAGIC DO

These wonderful an tions daily at 232, Strand, 14 Stamps.—H. G. CLARK

SAUCE.—

WORCESTER

This delicious com

"THE C

Is prepared s

The public are respectfully should see that LEA & P&L Bottle, and Stopper.

ASK FOR LEA

See Sold Wholesale and MESSRS. CROSS & E 80NS, London, &c., &c.: AS

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 207.

NOTES:—Two Christmas Notes by W. B. Mac Cabe, 489—
Eastern Origin of the Christmas Tree, or the Tree of Love, 491—A Curious Custom, Id.—Pall Mall: Croquet, 493—
Folk Lore, 493—Christmas Customs in Ireland, 495—National Portrait Exhibition, 1865, 496—The Paston Letters,
Id.—Literary Pseudonyms—The Bass and the May—
First Principles—Puppet Shows—Hoops and Crinolines
498.

QUERIES:—Anonymous—Artemus Ward—Bonar—
Churching-Pew—Clameur de Haro et Charte Normande—
Frangipanis and the House of Hapsburg—Ingenious
Genealogical Puzzle—Hymnology—Lindsay Family—
William Nanson Lettson, Esq., M.A.—Curious Medal—Numismatic—The Pendrell Family—Pynsent Family——Quadrilles—Shakespeares of Fillinghley—St. Jerome's Hat, 499.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—A Wooden Leg—Bankers of London—Jo. Castor—Spanish Main—Eucharistic Vestments, &c., 501.

REPLIES:—Lincolnshire Household Riddles, 502—Devonshire Household Tales, 504—Bishop Thomas Percy of Dro-more, Id.—Accordance between the Songs of Birds and the Seasons of the Day, 505—White used for Mourning, 506—The Temple Family, Id.—Hag's Prayer—Bede Ale—
The Italian St. Swithin—Peg Tankards—Lord Palmerston: Lines on Lord Houghton: "New Whig Guide"— John Cruso, LL.D.—Coin of Tiberius—Meyers's "Letters": Wall?—Pancake Bell and Devil's Bell at Dewsbury—Death in Soundings—Daughter and Dafter—The Christian Name of "Date"—Artistic: Forge, &c—"The Secrets of Angling"—Elizabeth Heyrick—The First
Duke of Gloucester and Stephen Penny, &c., 507.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

TWO CHRISTMAS NOTES BY W. B. MAC CABB.

I.—CHRISTMAS TREE: ATTEMPT TO TRACE IT TO ITS REAL ORIGIN.

Various suggestions have been made as to the origin of "the Christmas Tree." Mr. Timbs, in his interesting miscellany Something for Everybody (p. 127), suggests its being traceable to the ancient Egyptians and their palm-tree which produces a branch every month, and therefore held to be emblematical of the year. The Germans may be said to claim it as peculiar to themselves, as being indicative of their attachment to Christianity: they identify it with the apostolic labours of St. Maternus, one of the earliest, if not the very first, of the preachers of the Gospel amongst them. They have a legend of his sleeping under a fir-tree, and of a miracle that occurred on that occasion. With them the fir is the genuine "Christmas-tree"—like their faith it is "ever-green," in storm as in sunshine, in winter as in summer; and it is emblematic, with its fruits and ornaments, both of "the tree of knowledge" in Paradise, and the still more sacred "tree" of Golgotha. (Cassel, Weihnachten, pp. 146, 147, 148.)

I do not think, with Mr. Timbs, that "the Christmas-tree" is traceable to Egypt, nor with the Germans, that its formation originated with themselves. Like many other of our festivities at Christmas, I believe it is distinctly traceable to the Roman Saturnalia; and was, not improbably, first imported into Germany with the conquering legions of Drusus. "The Christmas-tree," such as we now see it, with its pendent toys and mannikins, is distinctly portrayed in a single line by Virgil:—

"Oscilla ex alto suspendunt mollia pinu."

Georg. ii. 389.

What, then, were these pretty oscilla that were hanging from a lofty pine? They were, says Mr. C. D. Yonge, in his edition of Virgil (notes, p. 68), "Little masks of Bacchus." They were, it is said, by Carolus Ruæus (Delphin edition), "little earthen images sacred to Bacchus, and made to his likeness" (imagunculas fictiles, Baccho sacras, et ad ejus speciem effictas), "and were supposed to afford protection to the vines, and confer fertility on every side towards which the images, impelled by the wind, turned their faces." I shall not trouble your readers with quoting the original passage in Virgil, in which mention is made of the oscilla. The following translation by Dryden is sufficiently close and intelligible for my purpose to show the similarity between a pine-tree laden with oscilla, and a "Christmas-tree":—

"Thus Roman youth, deriv'd from ruin'd Troy,
In rude Saturnian rhymes express their joy;
With taunts and laughter loud, their audience please,
Deform'd with vizards cut from barks of trees:
In jolly hymns they praise the god of wine,
Whose earthen images adorn the pine,
And there are hung on high, in honour of the vine;
A madness so devout the vineyard fills,
In hollow valleys and on rising hills;
And whate'er side he turns his honest face,
And dances in the wind, there fields are in his grace.
To Bacchus therefore let us tune our lays,
And in our mother-tongue resound his praise."

Georg. ii. 383-392.

A further confirmation—I may venture to add—a distinct proof of the accuracy of my suggestion as to the original idea from which our modern "Christmas-tree" is derived, will be found in Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities (p. 846, 2nd ed. in verb "oscillum"), where there is given an engraving "from an ancient gem (Maffei, Gem. Ant. iii. 64) representing a tree with four oscilla hung upon its branches." Any one who will take the trouble of looking for himself into that invaluable work will at once perceive that it is an exact picture of a "Christmas-tree." I believe that senior members of a family now-a-days, in presenting to their juvenile relations a "Christmas-tree," are, in so doing, only imitators of the old Pagan Romans. I think there is in Suetonius the proof that Tiberius made such a present (a toy pine-tree with pendent oscilla) to his nephew Claudius; and that the present was characteristic of the giver: it was the infliction of a cruel joke upon the imbecility and drunken propensities of the recipient. "The sixth and seventh" days of the Saturnalia, it is observed in Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities (2nd ed. in verb. "Saturnalia," p. 1009), "were occupied with the sigillaria, so called from little earthenware figures (sigilla, oscilla) exposed for sale at this season, and given as toys to children." Bearing these facts in mind, we can the more keenly appreciate the signification of the words used by Suetonius describing Tiberius's treatment of his nephew, when seeking for consular power and dignity:—

"Tiberius patruus petenti honores consularia ornamenta detulit. Sed instantius legitimos flagitanti, id solum codicillis rescripsit: 'Quadraginta aureos in Saturnalia, et sigillaria misisse ei.'"—Suet. Claud. c. 5.

There can, we think, be little doubt that to a person of whom it could, at any time, be said "ebrietatis infamiam subiit," amongst the toys presented him by his grim uncle, was a mimic pine-tree with its pensile masks or images of the god of wine-topers.

Whether this suggestion be well founded or not I shall not pretend to determine: but there can, I think, be no doubt that the true original of "the Christmas-tree" is to be found in the pine and its branches hung with "oscilla ad humanam effigiem arte simulata," to use the words of Macrobius (Saturn. lib. i. c. 7.)

II.—TWENTY-TWO SUPERSTITIONS CONNECTED WITH THE CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS IN FRANCE IN 1741.

A Roman Catholic clergyman (M. Thiers), writing in the year 1741, denounces various superstitions then existing in France. I have made a selection of such as have reference to the time of Christmas:—

1. Bathing on Christmas Day.—It is a superstition, says M. Thiers, to bathe on a Christmas Day or on Ash Wednesday, with the hope or intention thereby to be free from fevers or toothache.

2. Not eating Meat on Christmas Day.—It is a superstition not to eat meat on Christmas Day, for the purpose of escaping sickness by fever.

3. Christmas Eve-bread for Cattle.—To bake bread on Christmas Eve, and put it in the cow's drink after she has calved, in order that she may be the sooner freed from l'arrière faix.

4. Lending on New Year's Day.—Not to lend anything upon the first day of the new year, lest one should be unlucky for the whole of that year.

5. Christmas Day Corn, Fortune telling.—To take twelve grains of corn on a Christmas Day, and to give to each the name of one of the twelve months: to put them afterwards on a shovel slightly heated, beginning with that which bears the name of the month of January, and continuing to do the same with the rest: and when there is one that jumps on the corn will be de contrary, it will be jump. There is (double superstition cause it is intended and next, that the mas Day, rather than Mizauld (Centur. v. vice in another mod stitious.

6. Cabbage on St to eat cabbage on that saint lay conce tyrdom (parce qu' pour ériter le marty found?

7. Fire on Chris one's neighbours fi Circumcision, for fe (Thus in the origi by the awful blank,

8. Baking Brea bake bread betwee les deux Noël); i. e. Lord and the Circ would bring misfor

9. Bread for the ing the whole of th the table, both nigh Virgin comes at the you.

10. New Year's Fountains.—To go upon the New Year and a nosegay, with better and more w

11. Christmas D of preserving your tire of the coming plums (prunes) on

12. Christmas Ca stated especially of they call Le pain white as they can they cut a small piec a knife, three or fou served for the purp of various maladies, is reserved for the E amongst the family gâteau des rois.

13. Christmas B believe that the bi will remain good mouldy.

14. The Three K the night of the E blood on the foreh kings," Gaspar, Mel wards look in a mirror, and believe that the person will see himself there as he will be at the hour of his death, and in whatsoever manner he may die.

15. Lessive at Christmas time, &c.—Not to make a lessive during the quatretems nor Rogations, nor on the days the Tenebras are sung, nor from Christmas Day to the Epiphany, nor during the octave of Corpus Christi, which, in certain places, are called Les Octoubres, nor on Fridays, for fear some mishap might occur.

16. The Sieve on St. Thomas's Day.—Not to make any use of a sieve on St. Thomas's Day.

17. St. Stephen's Day: bleeding Horses.—Bleeding horses upon St. Stephen's Day. Better to do it that day than at any other time in the year.

18. Christmas Day Dinner-cloth.—To carry in a cloth (nappe), which has been used at the dinner on Christmas Day, the corn which you are about to sow, in order that the seed may produce a better and finer crop.

19. Christmas Mass-bread.—To keep bits of bread blessed at the three masses on Christmas Day, and take them as a cure for certain maladies.

20. Midnight Christmas Mass.—Upon returning from midnight mass at Christmas, to make the cattle drink before you re-enter your dwelling, and to do this without speaking to any one, with the intention of preserving them from certain diseases.

21. Yule Log Superstitions.—It is superstitious to believe that a log (une buche) that is begun to be set on fire on Christmas Eve (that which is called the trefoir, or le tison de Noël), and that is so kept burning every day until the Epiphany, can secure against conflagration and thunder all the year the house in which it is laid under a bed or some other place; that it can prevent those who dwell there from having kibes (les mules au talon) during the winter; that it can cure animals of many diseases; that it can deliver cows ready to calve (a vêler) by steeping a bit of it in their drink; finally, that it can preserve corn from rust, by casting its ashes over the fields.

22. The Provence Yule Log; Christmas Carol.—It is superstitious, says our French theologian, to believe, say, and do all that is believed, said, and done with the Christmas log (trefoir) or la buche de Noël, and Christmas-bread (du pain de Noël) in a great many places, and especially in Provence. The trefoir being prepared, all the family assemble together on Christmas Eve; they then go to fetch it, and it is borne in state (en cérémonie) into the kitchen, or into the apartment of the master or mistress of the dwelling. In bearing it, they sing, divided into two choirs, the following provençal rhymes:—

"Souche bandisse
Deman sara panisse;
Tout benx ca y entre,

Premes enfantan,
Cabres cabrian,
Fedes aneillan,
Fren bla-et prou-farino,
De vin une pleuo tino!"

Let the log rejoice,
To-morrow will be bread-day;
Let all be welcome that come here.
May the women have babies,
And the goats have kids,
The sheep have lambs;
Let there be plenty of corn and flour,
And of wine a full cask!

The trefoir is then blessed by the smallest and youngest person in the house, who pours a glass of wine over it in the form of a cross, saying, "In nomine patris," &c. After which it is set on fire. Such very great respect is paid to it that no one dare sit down on it for fear that, in profaning it, he might attract some malediction upon himself. They preserve during the entire year its charcoal, which they put into the composition of several of their remedies; and they believe that this charcoal, though placed red hot upon the Christmas cloth (la nappe de Noël), would not burn it. This same cloth (nappe) is laid during the three feasts of Christmas, and it is then covered with the nicest dainties and best meats they can procure.

Dinan, Côtes du Nord, France.

EASTERN ORIGIN OF THE CHRISTMAS TREE, OR TREE OF LOVE.—It has been conjectured that in the fifth century of our era certain forms and ceremonies appertaining to Buddhism were introduced in the church of Rome by the barbarians from the East. I apprehend that at the same period the Christmas Tree was first used on the continent of Europe, and by the same people, it being an old Buddhist custom, still observed in Asia, for the people, on certain festivals, to stick a tree in the ground, upon the natural and artificial branches whereof they suspend their offerings and presents.

H. C.

A CURIOUS CUSTOM.

Some time ago, having read that at Bassora, in the pashalic of Bagdad, all the ladies and virgins of the environs paid an annual visit to a tomb which they covered with flowers, after having kissed it seven times, I was anxious to learn the origin of so singular a pilgrimage. The following is the result of my search:—Under the reign of Mirza-Abbas, at a small village called Mendelbi, in the Kurdistan, a young girl was living with her aunt. This young maiden was often surprised in tears, and particularly on one occasion, after the arrival of an itinerant hawkers. At the oft-repeated request of her aunt to disburden her mind, she said that she was not the humble village maid she seemed to be, but that she was the daughter of the renowned general, Meli-abeth, who, upon the false accusations of his enemies, had been condemned to death, but had afterwards been reprieved; and that for sixteen years he had been languishing in a prison. She also said that she was determined to obtain his release, or die in the attempt. The fortress in which her father was imprisoned was situated upon the river Tigris, thirty-two days' walk from Mendelhi. At this her aunt gave her all the money she possessed, and her blessing. When Hal-mehi reached Bas-sora, she found she was without resources; but being bent upon releasing her father, she was nothing daunted, but resolved to beg for shelter at the first house she met. It was accorded; the owner was a merchant, who took a kindly interest in the heroic girl. She confessed her ambition, and he encouraged, and promised to aid her. She then, at his advice, began to teach herself swimming, and when she found she could swim across the river, she obtained a piece of canvass and painted her name upon it. She was recognised. The next time she contrived to throw a file through the prison grating. He filed the bars, and made an appointment with his daughter to escape the first dark night. The merchant gave her a boat; they escape; but as they are on the point of landing, the alarm is given, and they are assailed by a shower of darts, and Hal-mehi falls in the boat wounded by an arrow. Other boats are in the pursuit; they are captured, and the governor of Bas-sora commands them both to be strangled. His command is obeyed. When Mirza-Abbas, the king, heard this, he exclaimed, "For the sake of the daughter, I would have forgiven the father." At his order and expense a monument was erected to their memory with this inscription: "To the noblest of maidens, who died in the noblest action." The queen visited the spot, and from that time it became customary to perform a pilgrimage to her tomb upon the anniversary of her death.

ARTHUR EDWARD LOWNDES.

PALL MALL: CROQUET.

Lovers of croquet, who are disposed to trace its origin to the fashionable "Pall Mall" of Caroline celebrity, may find some interest in the following notices of the latter game. Croquet already possesses such fascinations of its own, that it can hardly derive any increase of popularity from a conceivable association with the monarch for whom the game above-mentioned had such charms.

Charles II. and his pleasure-loving courtiers were much addicted to this species of "ball-play." Pall Mall seems to have admitted of a variety of play. A woodcut illustration may be seen in Knight's History of England (vol. iv. p. 205), which represents the king and his nobles at their favourite game in with his mallet hoop, suspended pole at some height the suspended ring time, to the gros admitted between commends itself a representative of pastime of St. Jam

Pale Maille is "a with a mallet struck ing, at either end of at the fewest blows, (Cotgrave's descriptio

This compound the "Mail," is d maille (or from p mallet, vide Bailey, says Nares, "the mall, the stick end of which he quotes

"If one had paile alley: for it is a re even."—Fr. Garden]

A marginal note

"A paile mal is a long staffe, to strike s men and gentlemen i

This, and the fr the French origin.

"Among all the before the paile mal like sport, not violent opportunity of discourse the other. I marvel foolish toys which we have not brought Sir Robert Darlington See Brand's Popular.

Another game, by Strutt as played ring fastened into t

"A ball is to be d alley to the other wit about three feet three far, it resembles pall i

After describing sending the ball t require much skill ball, he says —

"This done, the pla ground, where there is also necessary for t game is completed."—edit. book ii. p. 104.

The games abo have suggested ou of croquet; "arch the game develop quired a more exte ment of hoops for the greater display of the players' skill. I have sent this note in the hope of eliciting some more satisfactory information on the subject, but cannot conclude without entering a decided but most respectful protest against any further "hoop" development: that already attained being amply sufficient to satisfy the taste and requirements of the age. F. PHILLOTT.

Folk Lore.

ULSTER FOLK-LORE.—A clerical friend in the co. Tyrone, has sent me the following note, which may, I think, be as new to the readers of "N. & Q." as it was to me:—

"Trying for Heart-Fever.—A woman came to me and said her husband was lying [i.e. confined to bed]. 'He was tried yesterday for heart-fever, and they are now preparing herbs to lift or take it off him.'

"Clergyman.—What way did they try him?

"Answer.—They took stones and put them in the fire, and if they frizzed in the fire, then he had the heart-fever.

"Clergyman.—What is that?

"Answer.—A kind of weight about the heart and disinclination for food.

"The above answers were given seriously by a labourer's wife."

I regret my friend did not mention "the herbs" used for a remedy in heart-fever. He, however, mentions in a postscript the use in his parish of burdock as a cure for scrofula. AITKEN IRVINE.
Kilbride, Bray.

YORKSHIRE HOUSEHOLD RIDDLES.—A lady of my acquaintance, seeing the batch of riddles in "N. & Q." (3rd S. viii. 325), has supplied me with the following, which seem of equal merit with those quoted by S. BARING-GOULD:—

1. "Hitti Titti on the wall,
Hitti Titti got a fall;
Ten score men and ten score more,
Could not set Hitti Titti as it was before."
Ans. An egg.

2. "Black I am and much admired;
Men do seek me till they're tired;
Tire horse and tire man,
Tell me this riddle if you can."
Ans. Coal.

3. "Round the house, and round the house,
And in at the parlour window."
Ans. Sunshine.

4. "Creep hedge, crop corn,
The little cow with the leather horns."
Ans. The hare.

5. "Under the water, and over the water, and never touches the water."

Ans. A maid with a pail of water on her head passing over the bridge.

6. "As I was going to St. Ives,
I met on the way three old wives;
Every old wife had three cats,
Every cat had three kits;

Tell me how many kits, cats, and old wives
Were going to St. Ives."

Ans. None, as they were all coming away."

7. "Two brothers we are, and great burdens we bear,
By which we are sorely oppressed;
With truth we may say, we are full all the day,
And empty when we go to rest."

Ans. A pair of shoes.

I remember all these as familiar acquaintance in the hours of childhood; but neither myself nor the lady who has called them to my remembrance ever saw them in print. T. B.

To your Riddles among the Vulgar you may add the following. They are Lancashire chiefly:

1. "Red within and red without,
Four corners round about."

Ans. A brick.

2. "All hair but the head."

Ans. A cow tic.

3. "Four stiff standers,
Four diddle danders;
Two hookers, two smookers,
And a flip by."

Answer. A cow.

4. "Clink clank under the bank,
Ten against four."

Ans. A woman in pattens going a-milking.

5. "Little Nanny Neppicoat
Has a white petticoat;
The longer she stands,
The shorter she grows."

Ans. A candle.

I suppose "Elizabeth, Elsiebeth, Beasy, and Bet" is known throughout England. P. P.

O O AT CHRISTMAS.—It was formerly a custom throughout France, says Sir Thomas Urquhart, and is still in some parts of it, to make, in the parish church, about seven o'clock in the evening, for the nine days next before Christmas Day, certain prayers or anthems, called the Christmas O Oe, because in the books which prescribe these anthems they begin with O O, as, O Sapientia, O Adonai, O Radix, &c. To him that was last married in the parish, especially if he be one in good circumstances, is carried a very large O, represented in burnished gold on a large piece of very thick parchment, with several ornaments of gold or other fine colours. This O was, every evening of the nine days, put on the top of the lutrin: there staid the O all the time that the anthem was singing. The person to whom the O had been sent was wont in return to make a present of a piece of money to the curate, who on his part spent some of it in regaling his friends. After the holidays, the O was carried back to the new married man, who set it up in the most honourable place of his house. SHOLTO MACBUFF.

N. P. P. Training College, Dorchester.

ASH-LEAF SUPERSTITION.—The following Midsummer Eve superstition has been given me:—

"Pluck an even ash leaf, and, putting it into the hand, say—

The even ash leaf in my hand,
The first I meet shall be my man.

Then, putting it into the glove, say—

The even ash-leaf in my glove,
The first I meet shall be my love.

And, lastly, into the bosom, say—

The even ash-leaf in my bosom,
The first I meet shall be my husband.

Soon after which the future husband will make his appearance."

What is meant by an even ash-leaf, and is this superstition still believed in any part of the country?

A. A.

Poets' Corner.

CHAINING.—A most peculiar custom called "chaining" is observed in some parts of Monmouthshire, on the occasion of popular weddings. I believe the bride usually pays "the lads of the village" so much per head to meet her, after the sacred rite has been solemnized, with chains of hay and straw, at the churchyard gate. The strange ceremony of chaining is then and there performed. What is its signification, and is this the only county in which it is practised?

JAMES PITT.

Stapleton Road, Bristol.

WILL O' TH' WISP.—

"In the parish of St. Austle, in Cornwall, there is a singular phenomenon: it is the appearance of light near the turnpike-road at Hill-head, about three quarters of a mile west of the town. In the summer season it is rarely to be seen; but in the winter, particularly in the months of November and December, scarcely a dark night passes in which it is not visible. It appears of a yellow hue, and seems to resemble a small flame. It is generally stationary, and when it moves it wanders but little from its primitive spot, sometimes mounting upward, and then descending to the earth. As it has frequented this spot from time immemorial, it is now rendered so familiar that it almost ceases to excite attention. It is somewhat remarkable that, although many attempts have been made to discover it in the place of its appearance, every effort has hitherto failed of success. On approaching the spot it becomes invisible to the pursuers, even while it remains luminous to those who watch it at a distance. To trace its exact abode, a level has been taken during its appearance, by which the curious have been guided in their researches the ensuing day; but nothing has hitherto been discovered."—Gent. Mag. 1827, pt. ii. p. 637.

Is the appearance spoken of above still visible?

A. O. V. P.

SINGING IN ONE'S EARS: A SUPERSTITION ABOUT IT.—A short time since, a young lady, a parishioner of mine, said suddenly, in my hearing, to another lady present, "Give me a number!" The lady she addressed was talking at the time, and did not notice the request at once; she was almost immediately told that it was too late. The young lady then gave us the following explanation: She had a "singing" in her ears; when this occurs to one, one should at once ask for a number, and at once get it; one should then count the letters of the alphabet till one comes to the number given: the corresponding letter will be the initial letter of the name of the person one is destined to marry.

JOHN HOSKINS ABRAHAM, MA.

Combe, near Woodstock.

LANCASHIRE PROVERBS.—

"Robin Hood could bear any wind but a thaw wind.

The Devil's children always have the Devil's look.

Like a pig's tail, going all day, and nothing done at night.

A wise head makes a still tongue.

Every dog considers himself a lion at home.

One half of the Devil's meal runs to bone.

There's no getting white meal out of a coal-smith.

He has none of his chairs at home (i. e. he is wrong in his head).

Don't stretch thy arm further than thy sleeve will reach.

Every herring should hang by its own gills.

They are not all thieves that dogs bark at.

There's more flies caught with honey than with ale.

That man is safest who always serves a good conscience.

A man might as well eat the Devil as the broth he's boiled in.

It is not the hen that cackles most which lays most eggs.

Jackasses never can sing well, because they pitch their notes too high.

A mouse that has only one hole is easily taken.

A woman's tongue wags like a lamb's tail.

A small house has a wide throat.

Attorneys' houses are built upon the heads of fools.

Those who are doing nothing are doing ill.

Brawling curs never want sore ears.

Truth and sweet oil always come to the top.

They are as thick as inkle-weavers.

It is all in the day's work."

For the majority of the above I am indebted to the Sequel to the "Felley fro Rochde's Visit tath Greyt Eggsibishun," describing "What me an my mistress seed an yerd ath Greyt Eggsibishun in 1802." I have heard, also, the following rhymes, which hardly come under the denomination of Proverbs, and are, I fancy, too purely local to be called Lancashire sayings:—

"Them that buys beef buys bones,
Them that buys land buys stones,
Them that buys eggs buys shells,
But them that buys ale buys nothing else."

Don't they sometimes buy cocculus indicus, strychnine, &c.?

"Many men has many minds,
But women has but two;
Everything would they have,
And nothing would they do."

I am sure, Mr. Editor, that you will acknowledge this a libel as readily as HERMENTRUDE.

FOLK LORE FROM THE CARNIC ALPS.—Whilst travelling last summer among some of the remote valleys to the south of Austria, as yet almost undisturbed by English tourists, we met with a curious piece of folk lore, which may perhaps be worth a place in your notes on the subject.

It is believed that there exists a monster in the secluded parts of the mountains, with a body about the size of a goose, a flat head, and a beak like a hawk; it has two legs, but runs trailing its body along the ground, and leaving a filthy black streak, wherever it goes. It has no fur or feathers, but a smooth skin, and a pair of wings like a bat. It is said to be not unfrequently seen by the woodcutters on the mountains, coming out from its holes among the rocks always before a terrific storm, but has never been caught, as, if it bites ever so slightly, no remedy can save the life of the rash investigator. These particulars were gathered from a native of Udine, on the Italian side of the Santa Croce Pass, but were entirely confirmed by a man from Kôtschach on the Carinthian side, both speaking of it as a matter of common belief.

The fact of having a second independent witness, and the evidently bona fide way in which he spoke of it as a thing generally known, prevented any suspicion of the story having been got up specially for our instruction.

Perhaps some of your correspondents more learned than the writer in natural history, may be able to suggest that it is the description of some animal or bird which really inhabits the mountains, exaggerated by the superstitious terror of the woodcutters into the mythical creature described above.

There were other particulars which the writer cannot now recall sufficiently clearly to put them on paper, but all tending to increase the mysterious and uncanny nature of the "Unthier."

HERMAGORAS.

CHRISTMAS CUSTOMS IN IRELAND.

Many of what are called the "good old customs" are not now observed in the rural districts of Ireland, and I have heard ignorant old men attribute the falling off to the introduction of railways, the improvement of agricultural operations, and cattle shows!! Amongst some of the customs that I remember in the south-east of Ireland were the following:—

A week or two before Christmas, landed proprietors would have slaughtered fine fat bullocks, the greater portion of which would be distributed to the poor; and farmers holding from ten acres of land upwards were sure to kill a good fat pig, fed up for the purpose for the household, but the poorer neighbours were also certain of receiving some portions as presents. When the hay was made up in the farm yards, which was generally about the time that apples became ripe, quantities of the fruit would be put into the haystacks and left there till Christmas. The apples thus received a fine flavour, no doubt from the aroma of the new-mown hay. In localities of rivers frequented by salmon which came up with the floods of August and September, the inhabitants used to select the largest fish, pickle them in vinegar, whole ginger and other spices, and retain them till Christmas, when they formed a most delicious dish at the breakfast-table. Large trout were preserved in like manner for the same purpose. Eggs were collected in large quantities and were preserved in corn chaff, having been first rubbed over with butter. I have eaten eggs so preserved after three or four months, and they tasted as fresh as if only a day old. In districts where the farmers were well-to-do, and in hamlets and villages, young men used to go about fantastically dressed, and with fifes and drums serenade and salute the inhabitants, for which they generally were rewarded with eggs, butter, and bacon. These they would afterwards dispose of for money, and then have a "bathe," which, as Dr. Todd, of Trinity College, Dublin, truly says, is a "drinking bout." These bands of itinerant minstrels were called "Mummers." They are not now to be met with. It was usual for people to send presents to each other, which consisted chiefly of spirits (potheen, home-made whisky), beer, fine flour, geese, turkeys, and hares. A beverage called "mead," which was extracted from honeycomb, after the honey was pressed therefrom, was also a favourite liquor, and when mixed with a little alcoholic spirit, was an agreeable drink, but deceitful and seductive, as well as intoxicating. This used to pass in large quantities amongst neighbours. "Christmas cakes" and puddings were extensively made and sent as presents. The latter were particularly fine, and made of fine flour, eggs, butter, fruit, and spices. I have never met anything in cities or large towns to equal them in their way, both as regards wholesomeness and flavour.

Of course the houses were all decorated with holly and ivy, winter natural flowers, and other emblems of joy. People hardly went to bed at all on Christmas eve, and the first who announced the crowing of the cock, if a male, was rewarded with a cup of tea, in which was mixed a glass of spirits; if a female, the tea only, but as a substitute for the whisky, she was saluted with half-a-dozen of kisses, which was the greatest compliment that could be paid her. The Christmas block for the fire, or Yule-log, was indispensable. The last place in which I saw it was the hall of Lord Ward's mansion, near Downpatrick, in Ireland; and although it was early in the forenoon, his lordship

(then a young man) insisted on my tasting a glass of whisky, not to break the custom of the country or the hall. He did the same himself.

There were many other customs observed, but I only mention the above because they are now "dead and gone," like those who observed them in the "good old days." S. REDMOND.
Liverpool.

NATIONAL PORTRAIT EXHIBITION, 1866.

[We are glad to find that the interest in the proposed Exhibition still increases, find that it is beginning to get known among the possessors of "twos and threes" of Historical Portraits.—Ed. "N. & Q."]

Being desirous of doing a little to further the interesting Exhibition of National Portraits, I have written down, as they occurred to me, the names of the most remarkable persons in the reign of Henry VIII.

Portraits of many, if not of all these persons, exist no doubt somewhere, and there is scarcely one that would not be seen with interest.

If the list could be admitted into "N. & Q." it might induce the owners of such pictures to offer the loan of them, and tempt others to suggest names I have overlooked:—

HENRY VIII. 1509—1547.

His Wives.

Catharine of Arragon.	Anne of Cleves.
Anne Boleyn.	Catharine Howard.
Jane Seymour.	Catharine Parr.

His Children.

Mary.	Elizabeth.	Edward VI.
-------	------------	------------

His Sisters and Brother.

Prince Arthur.
Margaret, married James IV. of Scotland, and Earl of Angus.
Mary, married Louis XII. of France, and Charles Brandon.

His Grandmother.

Countess of Richmond and Derby, who survived his accession.

Some Members of his first Council.

Archbishop Warham, Chancellor.
Earl of Shrewsbury, Steward.
Lord Herbert (afterwards Earl of Worcester), Chamberlain.
Sir Edward Poynings, Comptroller.
Sir Thomas Lovel, Constable of the Tower.
Sir Thomas, afterwards Lord Darcy.
Fox, Bishop of Winchester, Secretary and Privy Seal.
Cardinal Wolsey.
Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk.
Frances Brandon, Marchioness of Dorset, mother of Lady Jane Grey.
Sir Thomas More.
Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex, Secretary of State.
The Earl of Surrey, who commanded at Flodden, and was restored to the Dukedom of Norfolk, forfeited by his father.

S.
Lord Howard, great Flodden.

Sir Edward Howard, French commander's son Duke of Buckinghamland.

The Countess of Sal Sir Anthony Denny Cranmer, Archbishop Fisher, Bishop of E Tindal, who translated Anne Askew, friend Sir Ralph Sadler, A Wriothesley, Earl of Surrey, gentleman, scholar, soldier, c

PORTRAIT OF T was formerly at H the possession of t would be viewed and I venture, the the Committee of t hibition to the subj

BISHOP GAUDE Rectory, Stanhope, of the pictures was Gauden; who is in a book inscribed El desirable portrait f

THE P

So great is the remarkable series o shall gratify our re abstract of the ver ticity and the good Mr. Bruce read bef on the evening of have derived it fr the 9th inst., with source:—

"Mr. Bruce, after which the subject fell cicty of Antiquaries, Merivale, pointed out gated was not one of particular individual, suspicions which had

[* We presume this pal character. His el cur until after the Re the king and his brot importunate claims book. We do not att controversy, to what c trivance of the Bishc as such portrait shoul when considering the Paston Letters. The writer's opinion was, that these suspicions had been generated by the imperfect way in which the facts had been ascertained, and that they were to be met by a fuller and more accurate statement. He then set forth what were the succession and position in the world of the leading members of the Paston family in the fifteenth century. During that period the chief persons of the family were Sir William Paston, a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas and three successive Johns (a son and two grandsons of the Judge), who all followed one another as heirs-at-law, inheriting the lands and much of the other property of the family on the deaths of their respective predecessors. Of the three Johns, the second was never married, whilst the wives of Sir William and of the other two Johns were named Agnes, Margaret, and Margery. These are the principal correspondents in the letters in question, which are written in the freest and most communicative manner, and lay open and explain all the domestic affairs, the interests in public movements, the intriguing at elections, and the lawsuits of this particular family, and all the ordinary relations of the life of English people during the period of the Wars of the Roses. Vols. I. and II. were published in 1787, under the editorship of Mr. John Feun, a private gentleman, resident at East Dereham. The editor was somewhat slow to learn the value of his book, but not at all negligent in the performance of his duties as editor. He was especially anxious to satisfy his readers of the authenticity of his papers. He stated their descent in the family of Paston until they were 'finally in the possession of the Earl of Yarmouth'; they then became the property of Peter Le Neve, a great collector, antiquary, and herald, from whom they devolved to 'honest Tom Martin, of Palgrave,' another antiquary and collector, on his marriage with the widow of Le Neve. On Martin's death his collections were purchased by an apothecary at Diss as a speculation, and from him they 'came' to the editor. Mr. Merivale had objected that it did not appear which of the Earls of Yarmouth parted with the papers. Mr. Bruce gave details which showed that of the two Earls of that title one was a gentleman of good learning, a traveller, and collector of curiosities; the other married one of the natural children of Charles the Second, entertained his royal father-in-law at Oxnead Hall, then the magnificent seat of the Pastons, and brought upon himself and the Paston family speedy and total ruin. The second Earl died in 1732, at the age of seventy-eight, the recipient of a pension of 200*l.* from the Crown. His library was dispersed by auction in 1734. Oxnead Hall was allowed to fall into decay, and was finally pulled down and the materials disposed of. In 1750 the Earl's estates were sold, at the instance of his creditors, under an order of the Court of Chancery, for the sum of 92,700*l.*, to Lord Anson, the circumnavigator. In answer to another objection, that it did not appear in what way the papers 'came' from the apothecary at Diss to the editor, it was shown from the Minutes of the Society of Antiquaries that it had been by 'purchase.' Mr. Merivale had condemned the pedigree of the papers given by the editor, because no legal claim could be rested on documents which had passed through so many hands; Mr. Bruce contended that in that respect the Paston Letters were like all the historical manuscripts in our great collections—in the British Museum, the Bodleian, and the Public Record Office—no legal claim could be rested upon any of them; and that no editor was bound to give such a history of his papers as would establish a legal claim, but only such as would satisfy all the ordinary requirements of one who desired to use the papers for historical purposes. Mr. Bruce then considered the account given by the editor of the palaeographical peculiarities of his papers, which Mr. Merivale had stated that he had pretermitted as unimportant. Mr. Bruce controverted the propriety of this course. He showed that Mr. Merivale, had, as it were, put the editor upon his trial on suspicion of having dealt dishonestly with his papers. In answer, it was right to consider his whole conduct, and if it could be concluded, from what he had done, that he designed to give a fair and full description of his papers, to tell all he knew or thought important, it ought not to be hastily suspected, from any supposed want of completeness, especially in the case of a gentleman of the most unimpeachable character, that he was dealing otherwise than honestly. Mr. Bruce then explained what information the editor had given. He had described the paper, the paper-marks (with respect to which Mr. Bruce thought he was the first English antiquary who gave representations of them, and applied them as tests of antiquity), the sizes of the sheets of paper on which the letters were written, and of the particular pieces of paper used by the letter-writers, 'for our ancestors were compelled by a scarcity of the required material to be a paper-sparing race,' the paper being cut off from the sheet at the end of the letter. The editor had then explained the way in which the letters had been folded up, fastened, and directed, the characters of the seals, the contrivances by which they were preserved, and the insignia they bore. From these particulars he had proceeded to the character of the handwriting, the ink, the effects produced by damp, and his reasons for printing two copies of every paper, one containing all the contractions, and exhibiting the very spelling of the originals, the other, on the opposite page, printed in words at length and in modern orthography. To render all this information more intelligible, he had added at the ends of his various volumes engraved plates, containing altogether fac-similes of 187 of the signatures to the letters, 98 paper-marks, and 56 seals; besides which he had appended to every letter a statement of its size in inches, and a description of its watermark. Finally, that all this extraordinary editorial particularity might be tested by the ocular observation of the very best living judges in such matters, he had left the original papers for a month in the Library of the Society of Antiquaries, for general inspection and examination—a fact which had been doubted, but which Mr. Bruce thought he proved beyond possibility of further question. The transaction took place in the days of Astle, Gough, Caley, and many other eminent antiquaries,—men who could not have been deceived by pretended originals, and to court whose inspection would have been an act of madness on the part of a dishonest editor. Mr. Bruce gave other evidences of the editor's obvious anxiety to satisfy inquirers; amongst them, he permitted an entire transcript of one of the most interesting letters to be published in fac-simile in the European Magazine for April, 1787, a copy of which fac-simile Mr. Bruce was enabled, by Mr. Thomas, to lay upon the table. The success of the work far outstripped the expectations of the editor. A second edition of Vols. I. and II. was immediately called for. Mr. Merivale doubted whether this were a real second edition. Mr. Bruce showed that it was an actual reimpression, with many alterations, and two new plates of fac-similes. Vols. III. and IV. were published in 1789. The editor died in 1794, and Vol. V. was not published until 1828. Mr. Bruce then proceeded to relate the circumstances of the disappearance of the originals. Whilst those of Vols. I. and II. were lying under inspection at the Society of Antiquaries, it was communicated to the editor that the King, George the Third, was desirous to see them. The editor offered them at once as a present to the Royal Library. The offer was accepted. The papers, bound in three volumes, were presented at a levee on the 23rd of May, 1787, and in return the editor was knighted. But the papers never reached the Royal Library. There is a tradition that they were last seen in the hands of Queen Charlotte, and that she lent them to one of her ladies in attendance. What became of them nobody knows. They have been searched for, and cannot be found. Their disappearance was, no doubt, a very singular circumstance, and was rendered stranger still by the circumstance that all the other originals had also disappeared. Mr. Serjeant Frere, who saw the concluding fifth volume of the publication through the press, after the death of Sir John Fenn, believed that the originals of the second and third volumes were also given to the King, and stated that he had not been able to find those of Vol. V., but had edited that volume from transcripts made many years before by Mr. Dalton, a most respectable gentleman, who died at Bury St. Edmunds, in 1860, at the age of ninety-four. On both points Serjeant Frere was probably mistaken. It was shown from papers of Mr. Dalton that the originals of Vols. II. and III. were in his possession, and in that of Sir John Fenn, after the gift to George the Third; and with respect to the originals of Vol. V., they really were in the possession of Serjeant Frere, although overlooked by him. They were exhibited this evening by his son, Mr. Philip Frere, and were now left by him at the Society of Antiquaries for general inspection. Together with them there were exhibited about 250 other papers, many of them Paston Letters, which Sir John Fenn did not design to publish. Mr. Bruce described the exhibited papers, and commented upon the care and particularity with which they had been kept and arranged by Sir John Fenn. He declared them to be unquestionable remains of the period to which they purported to belong, and vouched for the accuracy with which such of them had been printed as he had had time to compare with the originals. He also declared that he had not found the slightest trace of any garbling or interpolation, and that the only additions made to any of them that he could find were pencil memoranda of Sir John Fenn, as to their having been copied and noted, and indorsements of the contents, made in a modern hand, without any attempt at disguise. Mr. Bruce further showed that the whole correspondence was so full of coincidences and connexions, in story, phrase, and character, and was bound together by so many links and clues, that the recovery of one volume of originals gave a conclusive sanction to the whole, and sufficiently refuted the suspicions which had been founded upon the supposed concealment by the editor of the fact that he had other papers in his possession, upon the general character of the correspondence as being inconsistent with the presumed illiteracy of the age in which it was carried on, and upon the supposed improbability of its preservation; he also showed that phrases and expressions objected to by Mr. Merivale as having a modern air were found in the exhibited originals exactly as printed by Sir John Fenn. "The truth is," he remarked, "that our forefathers of those days were plain-speaking, manly Englishmen, and cast our language into a form the rough edges of which we have somewhat smoothed, but which we have been wise enough never to attempt substantially to alter. When we read their papers we feel that we can claim them as ancestors, not merely by the use of a common lineage, but by those also of a common speech." Mr. Bruce concluded by remarking that, of the presumed anachronisms in manners adduced by Mr. Merivale, two had been sufficiently answered by Mr. Gairdner; as to that one founded on the allusion to playing-cards, he gave extracts from statutes and parliamentary petitions, which sufficiently established their common use from 1461 to 1475. He concluded by expressing his hope that a consideration of the original documents now produced would induce Mr. Merivale to do justice to the character of Sir John Fenn, and again to accept the Paston Letters for what Mr. Hallam termed them, his "faithful through the dark period to which they relate."

In justice to Mr. Merivale, we will add that which he addressed to the meeting, "the able sincerity and manly candour of which the Athenæum very justly, "our readers will be slow to appreciate":—

"At whatever cost to my reputation for ingenuity, cannot, of course, refrain from congratulating sincerely this Society, and, I may add, the country on the result of the few doubts which I threw on time ago. The appearance from custody above suspicion—the gentleman who produced them being here—of what we are told are the 'originals' of volume of the Paston Letters, goes, of course, very far to make an entire end of the controversy. It is pronounced any controversy absolutely closed; pleadings have been examined; but, subject to examination, I do not think any one probably will doubt the authenticity of the four first volumes although the originals have disappeared, if they declared that they have before them the full originals of volume, now in this very singular manner recover the presence, therefore, of papers like those, all that I ventured to throw out disappear,—vanish air; they become like what Mr. Frere's relation on that box, 'toys for children.' Therefore I have slightest wish—of course it would be idle—to re-controversy, or to express any doubt, as to anything has been thrown out to-night. If it were or not my ingenuity to raise those doubts, at all events it is very misplaced ingenuity, in the present state of to argue upon them, or to continue them."

LITERARY PSEUDONYMS.—There are two curious points in connection with this subject in our own early literature. In 1621, Richard of Basingstoke, who had published an Æ Britanniarum between 1597 and 1607, in books, with his name on the title-page, a the nom de plume of William Bas in a translation which he published of R. Smith's treatise Author and Substance of the Protestant Church Religion. It is the more remarkable that should have fixed upon Bas, since at that time there was one, if not two, writers of the name, though, to be sure, neither of them, as we know, affected theological literature.

Prefixed to Richard Grenaway's translation of the Annales of Tacitus, 1598, there is an entry signed "A. B.;" and in Ben Jonson's Conversations with W. Drummond of Hawthornden, we are told that this A. B. was no other than Robert of Essex. Now, it has not, to my knowledge, occurred to any of the "Shakespeare's Sonnets" or rather "Mr. W. H." controversialists, that illustration was required to establish that the men in Shakespeare's time occasionally hid their identity beneath fictitious signatures, as apposite one than this could hardly be proposed if Drummond's report of what Jonson told him reliable. Here we have no less a person than Robert, Earl of Essex, figuring at the foot of an epistle before a book as simple A. B.! Still, so far as my personal opinion goes, there is no strict analogy. If for Mr. W. H., we could read W. H., there might be.

A history of Noms de Plume would have its interest. John Serjeant, the antagonist of Jeremy Taylor, Henry Hammond, &c., wrote under the names of Holland and Smith; and William Warford published a work in 1603, and put George Doulye on the title-page as the name of the author. Modern pseudonymy seems to have set in with the struggles which preceded the Reformation. The promoters of that great movement were obliged to resort to all kinds of expedients for shielding themselves from persecution, and to this among the number.

W. CAREW HAZLITT.

THE BASS AND THE MAY.—In Bacon's Essay on Prophecies, he mentions one which he says he did not well understand. The first three lines, however, are all that I am at present concerned with, viz.:—

"There shall be seen upon a day
Between the Baugh and the May,
The black feet of Norway."

This seems to refer to two islands, the Bass and the May, at the mouth of the Firth of Forth, standing as it were like sentinels, one on each side, to guard the entrance, twenty-five and thirty miles respectively E.N.E. and N.E. of Edinburgh. The black feet of Norway often passed between them, in the roving times of the Normans; and only a twelvemonth ago a black ship of Norway, after passing between them, was driven ashore in a storm, near my own garden door. In all the editions, however, I have seen, the first of these names is Baugh: but that looks very like a mistake or a misprint for Bass, which gives very nearly the Scottish pronunciation of Bass. V. S. V.

FIRST PRINCIPLES.—This phrase seems to be in very general use, and even Mr. Herbert Spencer calls one of his books First Principles of a New System of Philosophy. But are there, or can there be, such things as second or third principles? I presume not: therefore the first is uselessly redundant, for all that it means is expressed in the prin. If Sir Isaac Newton's Principia were to be called Prima Principia, the absurdity would be seen at once. V. S. V.

PUPPET SHOWS.—There is a chap-book entitled the "Songster's Magazine, being a Choice Collection of the newest Songs sung at Ranelagh and Vauxhall Gardens, the Theatres Royal, and all other places of public Entertainment." Mr. Halliwell, in his Notices on Fugitive Tracts and Chap Books, printed for the Percy Society, says, "Although this tract is of a comparatively recent date, it is worthy of notice as containing a copy of the puppet play of the 'Broken Bridge.' This puppet play seems to have been not only a favourite drama in England, but also in France. I saw it performed at Nîmes in Languedoc, the puppet characters and the purport of the dialogue being the same. The scene represents a bridge of one arch rent by a broad fissure; the stage on which the puppets performed was erected at one end of a booth, pitched under the wall of the grand old Roman amphitheatre. Much in this show and its performances recalled to mind Gines de Passamonte and his puppets in Don Quixote." H. Q.

HOOPS AND CRINOLINES.—I am told by some young ladies that crinoline is decidedly going out of fashion, at which I rejoice. I am old enough to remember one wearer of the hoops of other days. They were not altogether admired by the gentlemen in those days any more than crinolines are now; e. g. Jany's Art of Dancing:—

"Dare I in such momentous points advise,
I should condemn the hoop's enormous size:
Ofills I speak by long experience found,
Oft have I trod th' immeasurable round,
And mear'd my shins bruist black with many a wound."

P. Q.

Queries.

ANONYMOUS.—Can any of your readers inform me who was the author of numerous poems which appeared in the earlier volumes of The Pocket Magazine, London, 1820-22? These poems had the signature "Basil." The following are the titles of some of them:—"Lines written in a Churchyard," from the Latin of Dr. Johnson (in vol. vi.), "Infant Hours," "The Sabbath," "The Irish Fiddler," "Adieu to Isle" (of Wight), "Song of Sea Sprites," &c. &c. The author was, I think, subsequently a correspondent or contributor to Hone's Table Book.

2. Who was author of a series of humorous papers called "The Barleycorn Club," published in The Literary Gazette, 1828, edited by Mr. Jordan? R. I.

ARTEMUS WARD.—Artemus, or Artémus? In consequence of the double how so lately made by Artemus Ward to the British public, this question of long or short has given rise to a lively discussion. Some think that, in accordance with Artemus mentioned by St. Paul, Artemis the Greek Diana, and ἀρτεμης, the Greek adjective, we ought undoubtedly to say Artémus; nay, they go so far as to express their full conviction that Artemus is only the New Testament Artemas Anglicanized. Others, however, would be glad to know what can be said in favour of Artemus. Sugerman.

BONAR. — Can any of your readers tell me from what the family name "Bonar" is derived?

II.

CHURCHING-PEW. — Upwards of seventy years ago, two dashing young unmarried ladies were journeying from London to Norfolk by coach, and from some accidental cause were compelled to spend Sunday at a village on their route. In the pride of beauty and finery they made their way to church, and to the most conspicuous pew near the pulpit. I believe they wished themselves elsewhere when the clergyman commenced reading the "Churching-Service" of the Church of England, and were still more dismayed when the clerk, at the close of the sermon, asked them for the customary fee for the additional service which their presence in the "Churching-Pew" had unluckily brought down upon them.

Is the "Churching-Pew" still to be met with?

M. D.

CLAMEUR DE HARO ET CHARTE NORMANDE. — The "Privilege du Roy," so often found in old French books, usually contains the following clause:—

"Commandons au premier nostre Huissier ou Sergent, de faire pour l'exécution d'icelles tous actes requis et nécessaires, sans demander autre permission, et nonobstant Clameur de Haro, Charte Normande et Lettres à ce contraire," &c.

What were the Clameur de Haro and Charte Normande?
J. WOODWARD.
New Shoreham.

THE FRANGIPANIS AND THE HOUSE OF HAPS-
BURG. — In Mr. Goldschmidt's article on the "Ghetto at Rome," at p. 330 of the Shilling Magazine for November, is the following passage:—

"The Hapsburgers for a long time boasted of their descent from the Frangipanis, who again were proud of their descent from the Emperor Augustus, until it was proved beyond a doubt that the Frangipanis originally were Jews, when the Hapsburgers gave up their pretensions."

I should be obliged for any information as to the descent of the House of Hapsburg from the Frangipanis; and as to the Israelitish origin of the latter family.

J. WOODWARD.

New Shoreham.

INGENIOUS GENEALOGICAL PUZZLE. — It has often occurred to me that—instructive, learned, and interesting as are the pages of "N. & Q."—they want enlivening occasionally with lighter matter; for it has been well observed that—

"Seria non semper delectant: non joca semper:
Semper delectant seria mixta jocis."

With this view I forward the following genealogical puzzle, which I heard from a native of South America, and which, as far as I know, has never appeared in English:—

Two ladies, walking together, perceived two gentlemen coming to meet them; upon which one of the ladies said to the other: "Here come fathers, the fathers of our children, the husbands of our mothers, and our own husbands." Quæritur how could two men fulfil in their persons all these relationships?

F. C. I.

HYMNOLOGY. — Can any one tell me the Christian and surname of the author of a hymn beginning—

"Oh! how the thought that I shall know,
The Man that suffer'd here below,
To manifest His favour?"

Also, in what collection a correct version of the entire hymn may be found.

F. G. V.

LINDSAY FAMILY. — Lord Lindsay, in his Life of the Lindsays (ii. 286), refers to a work by Martin William Lindsay, Esq., entitled Memoirs of the House of Dowhill. Has this ever been published? If so, where can I obtain a copy, and not, who is in possession of the original MS.?

H. J. S.

Oxford.

WILLIAM NANSON LETTSOM, Esq., M.A. — The library of this deceased gentleman, who was translator of the Nibelungenlied, and editor of Sidney Walker's Notes on Shakespeare, was sold by auction by Sotheby, Wilkinson, and Hodge, Nov. 20, 1865, and three following days. He was Trinity College, Cambridge; Browne prizeman 1816, 1817; B.A. 1818; M.A. 1822. In Stapleton's Eton School Lists he is called son of I. Lettsom, and is said to have been for a short time at Lincoln's Inn, and to have died young. The latter statement is of course inaccurate. We desire the exact date of his death.

C. H. & THOMPSON COOPER

Cambridge.

CURIOUS MEDAL. — I have found on some belt in Devon, dated 1670 to 1675, the impress of a well-executed medal one inch and three-quarters in diameter. Within an elaborate border of roses and leaves there are two faces under one head covering. Viewed one way it represents a mitred bishop; the other way a cardinal; on another a crown king and a pope. Can any reader of "N. & Q." favour me with their history, or refer to any collection or publication where they may be seen.

H. T. ELLACOMBE, M.A.

NUMISMATIC. — 1. A twenty soldi piece bears the date 1704, with the legend: "FERD. I. H. I. D. G. PARM. PLAC. VAST. D." Ferdinand the first of the name was, at this date, Duke of Parma, Piacenza, and Guastalla; but what is the meaning of the letters "I. H. I."?

2. A coin bears on one side the words "CIVIT. TEATINA," and on the other "KNOVS. R. S. S."

with three lilies on a shield. I find that both Charles VIII. and Charles IX., of France, had possession of Naples for a short time. Did the people of Chieti, during either of these intervals, coin money giving to the invader the title of King of Sicily? Or, what is the date of the coin?

S. J. H.

THE PENDRELL FAMILY.—This family being, I believe, entirely extinct in the male line, can any of your readers oblige me with the names of the descendants, who, at the present time, are the recipients of the royal pension awarded by Charles II. for his preservation at Boscobel after the battle of Worcester?

H. W. T.

PYNSENT FAMILY.—In 1767 mention is made in a letter from Mr. Gerard Hamilton to Earl Temple of Sir Wm. (Robert?) Pynsent as a person expecting the first ecclesiastical preferment that should be vacant after Lord Bristol had provided for his brother. I feel anxious to know from which of the second Sir Wm. Pynsent's brothers this clerical baronet descended. Sir Wm. Pynsent, first baronet, had three sons living to maturity—William, second baronet; John, buried at Erckfont, Wilts, 1749; Robert, Deputy-Clerk of the Crown, buried there, 1738; Lancelot, aged nine, buried 1690.

Perhaps a correspondent may favour me with the names of any Pynsents, who may have joined in the attempt to set aside the will of Sir Wm. Pynsent, second baronet, who left his estate to the Earl of Chatham, and died 1765 (two years before this mention of Sir Robert as a baronet), and an expectant of an Irish bishopric. E. W.

QUADRILLES.—A seasonable query suggests itself. Can any one tell me why the first four figures of "The First Set" were formerly known as Le Pantalon, L'Eté, La Poule, and La (or Le?) Trenis? I have a faint recollection of reading, in an article in Chambers's Edinburgh Journal long ago, that M. Trenis, a French dancing-master, was the inventor of the terpsichorean combination which bears his name; but I do not think that I have ever heard why the other figures received such strange appellations. ST. SWITHIN.

SHAKESPEARES OF FILLONGHLEY.—Are the Shakespeares, whose monuments remain in the parish church of Fillonghley, near Coventry, a branch of the poet's family? The spear, their well-known armorial bearing, appears on the tomb of George Shakespeare, who died in 1690. There is also a tablet recording some gift to the parish by one of that name; and I was informed by the present vicar that there are still Shakespeares amongst the peasant portion of his flock.

In Fillonghley church, until recently, a singular altar cloth has been in use—a pall with the arms of the Holbeck family, once impropiators of the tithes, emblazoned in gold embroidery. It is still kept in the vestry, and has probably been an unique decoration of the holy table.

THOMAS E. WINNINGTON.

ST. JEROME'S HAT.—What is the meaning of the broad-brimmed hat represented as worn by S. Jerome, and what are the earliest instances of it known to exist? I have seen it stated that it is a Doctor's hat, and distinguished from that of a Cardinal by having only plain tassels at the ends of the cords. Further information would oblige

J. T. F.

Queries with Answers.

A WOODEN LEG (3rd S. viii. 416.)—In a local bookseller's catalogue I find—

"Testament, 4to, black-letter, with notes in italics, and numerous very curious cuts, one of which represents the Devil with a wooden leg. Imprinted by Rychard Jugge, 1552."

I have not here the means of verifying the description, but I assume the representation to be of the ordinary wooden leg; and, if so, it carries the invention to a period somewhat earlier than Ambroise Paré. The question of greater interest is, why is the devil so represented?

Whatever the answer may be, the suggestion contained in the learned note, connecting the wooden leg with Vulcan's expulsion from heaven, must be taken into account.

JAS. EDWARD DAVIS.

Stipendiary Magistrate, Stoke-upon-Trent.

I have an edition of Tyndale's New Testament with woodcuts (said to be by Virgilius Solis), printed by Jugge in 1553; and in one of the woodcuts the devil is represented as a cunning old beggar with a wooden leg.

JAYCEE.

Aberdeen.

[On referring to the two New Testaments in question—1552, 1553—we find that, so far as the indistinctness of the woodcut will permit us to judge, the case is not that of a wooden leg substituted for a leg that has been lost, but rather that of a lame leg doubled up at the knee, and supported by a clumsy contrivance somewhat resembling a small round one-legged table. This last is a very different thing from the wooden leg portrayed, described, and brought forward by Paré; and therefore, though the two New Testaments do take precedence of Paré's first edition by a few years, say eleven or twelve, we still incline to our already expressed opinion, "that the wooden leg of the present day, as usually made, was mainly brought into public use by Ambroise Paré." At the same time we readily admit, and have indeed already shown (ante p. 416 et seq.), that a wooden leg of some sort was known long before the days of Paré.

Then comes the question—But why is the devil represented lame? To this we would reply, following out the very apposite suggestion of our worshipful correspondent

1. "As I was going over London Brig,
I spies a little red thing;
I picks it up, I sucks it blood,
And leaves it skin to dry."
Ans. An orange.
2. "As I was going over Westminster Brig,
I met a Westminster Scholar;
He pull'd off his hat, an' drew off his glove,
And wished me good morrow.
Pray tell me his name, for I've told it to you."
Ans. Andrew.
3. "As I was goin' over Humber,
I heard a great rumble;
Three pots a boilin',
An' no fire under."
Ans. Water under the boat.
4. "When I was going over a field of wheat,
I picked up something good to eat,
Neither fish, flesh, fowl, nor bone,
I kep' it till it ran alone."
Ans. A hegg.
5. "As I was goin' over our garden gap,
I spied my Uncle Ned;
With pins and needles up'n his back,
An' we kep' joggin' on a-head."
Ans. A prickly-otchin (urchin, hedgehog).
6. "As I was goin' through our garden,
I spied a man in a red coat,
With a stick in his hand, and a stone in his throat.
If you'll tell me this riddle, I'll give you a groat."
Ans. A cherry.
7. "Round the house and round the house,
And leaves a white glove i' th' window."
Ans. Snow.
8. "Round the house and round the house,
And leaves a black glove i' th' window."
Ans. Rain.
9. "Round the house and round the house,
And in my lady's chamber."
Ans. The sun.
10. "Hickamore, 'ackamore,
Sits over th' kitchen-door;
Nothing so long, and nothing so strong,
As Hickamore 'ackamore,
Sits over th' kitchen-door."
Ans. A cloud.
11. "Black within and red without,
Four corners round about."
Ans. The chimney.
12. "Black within and black without,
Four corners round about."
Ans. The oven.
13. "Black within and black without,
Three legs an' a iron cap."
Ans. A porridge-pot.
14. "Full of holes, and holds water."
Ans. The reckon-hook, i. e. the pot-hook which hangs in the reekin', or chimney, with holes to regulate the height of the pot from the fire.
15. "A riddle a riddle as I suppose,
Fifty eyes and never a nose."
Ans. A wire sieve.
16. "There was a man rode over moor,
Grey-gristle was his horse,
Bent saddle was his bow;
I've told his name three times,
Still you may not know."
Ans. "Was" was his name. (The third line is probably wrong.)
17. "Four-and-twenty white horses on yonder hill;
Gnaw they go, gnaw they go, now they stand still."
Ans. Your teeth.
18. "Ten men's length, and ten men's strength,
An' ten men can't rear it."
Ans. A waggon-rope. (The expected answer being a ladder.)
19. "Brass cap an' wooden head,
Spits fire an' spews lead."
Ans. A gun.
20. "Nanny-goat, nanny-goat, in a white petticoat,
The longer she stan's the shorter she grows."
Ans. A can'te.
21. "Long legs an' sho't thighs,
Little 'ead an' no eyes."
Ans. The tonga.
22. "Grows i' the wood, an' whinnies i' the moor,
And goes up an' down our house-door."
Ans. A sweeping-brush (which is supposed to be of horse-hair).
23. "Grows i' the wood, an' yowls i' the town,
An' addles i' master many a crown."
Ans. A fiddle. (The strings of which are out-gut.)
24. "Black I am an' much admired,
Men may seek me while they're tired;
Weary horse an' weary man,
Tell me this riddle if you can."
Ans. Coal.
25. "My ribs is lined w' leather,
I've a hole i' my side,
An' I'm offense (often) used."
Ans. Bellows.
26. "Mother, father, sister, brother,
All runnin' after one another,
An' can't catch one another."
Ans. Mill sails.
27. "As I went out so I came in,
An' out of the dead I saw the livin' spring;
Seven there were, an' six there be,
Tell me that riddle and then hang me."
Ans. A bird, with a nest and five young ones, in a dead horse.
28. "Riddle me, riddle me, riddle me ree,
Tell me what my riddle's to be?
Thru' a rock, thru' a reel, thru' an old woman's spinnin' wheel;
- * "Rock" is here the spindle, as in the Jacobite song:—
"I sold my rock, I sold my reel,
And see hae I my spinning wheel,
And all to buy a cap of steel
For Dickie Macphailan that's slain."
(See "N. & Q.," 3rd S. vii. 331.)

Thruff a milner's hopper, thruff a bag o' pepper,
Thruff an old mare's shink shank bone;
Such a riddle I have known."

Ans. A worm.

29. "It is in the rock, but not in the stone;
It is in the marrow, but not in the bone;
It is in the bolster, but not in the bed;
It is not in the living, nor yet in the dead."

Ans. The letter R.

30. "Itum Paraditum all clothed in green,
The King could not read it, nor Madam the Queen;
They sent for the wise men out of the East,
They said it had horns, but it wasn't a beast!"

Ans. Prick-holly.

31. "In cums two legs an' sets hisself down
Upo' three legs, wi' one leg in his hand.
In cums four legs, an' takes one leg frae two legs.
Up starts two legs, an' throws three legs after four legs,
An' gets his own leg again."

Ans. A man sits on a three-legged stool in a butcher's shop, with a leg of mutton in his hand, which a dog snatches and runs away with."

32. "When is an oven not an oven?"

Ans. When she's a gate (i. e. upping, the fire
"drawing" satisfactorily.)

The wit of some of these is, I am afraid, dull enough; but it is impossible to estimate the amount of amusement that they have afforded by the farm labourers' cottage fire-sides. I myself can well recollect the uproarious merriment that used to be excited by "In comes two legs;" while "Itum Paraditum" caused rather a feeling of undefined mysterious awe. I used to muse on the connection between this riddle, the Gospel narrative, and the sprigs of holly stuck in the pew-corners at Christmas, during long sermons. I am certain that my first idea of the existence of "London Bridge" was derived from these riddles. I should be glad to know whether the hedge-hog is called "Uncle Ned," apart from the riddle? Also, what is the origin of the Lincolnshire expression "black wet," for thoroughly wet? (see No. 8). No. 10 is still beyond my comprehension. I should be glad to see a correct version of No. 16.

The above were most of them "asked" by one or two different nurse-maids, and by an old village dame named Mary Burton, who was a sort of oracle. I believe she explained the "black glove" as being a black cloud, seen through the window. I have also heard "Itum Paraditum" from my grandmother, who was born in 1772, and remembered it from her childhood. I have no doubt that both this one and some of the others were in existence long before that time.

J. T. F.

The College, Hurstpierpoint.

DEVONSHIRE HOUSEHOLD TALES.

(3rd S. viii. 222.)

Though I fear my recollections are almost too misty to be of any use to your correspondent, MR. BARING-GOULD, I remember being told a tale some thirty years ago, when living near Exeter, which I send, hoping it may be new to him:—

THE DEVIL AND THE TAILOR.

A well-dressed gentleman knocked at the tailor's door one night, and calling him out of doors, ordered a suit of clothes, to be delivered to him in a certain lane, on such a night. After the gentleman was gone, struck by his mysterious behaviour, the tailor repented of his bargain, and fearing who it was he had agreed to serve, went to the parson for advice. The worthy man recommended him to keep his word, and promised to go with him to deliver the goods. They went together to the lane, the parson made the devil appear in his true form, and rescued the tailor, but unfortunately I quite forget how it was done.

I was told at the same time a pixy story about a churlish and a kind-hearted farmer. The pixies stole from the churl and filled the other's barn, till finding he watched them at their work, they deserted him. I do not enter into particulars, because the same story is told of the Sussex fairies, in almost the same words it was told to me of the pixies, by M. A. Lower, in his Contributions to Literature. I was told one thing in Devonshire, which may be well known to others, though I never saw it in print, viz., that all clergymen are conjurers ex officio; and in support of the assertion these two stories were gravely repeated as having happened in the next village. The gentleman referred to was a venerable evangelical clergyman, nearly related to one of the county families. The first story ran, that going to church one Sunday he saw two boys stealing apples; he cast a spell upon them, and compelled them to remain in the tree till they were seen by the congregation on coming out of church, when he released them. The other story was, that in common with all his clerical brethren, he had a conjuring book; and that the clerk finding himself alone in his study one day, ventured to open it, and that his curiosity was rewarded by having his ears well boxed by unseen hands. The unfortunate clerk was also pointed out to me by name, which I think made the belief more curious, as identifying it with living persons.

L. C. R.

BISHOP THOMAS PERCY OF DROMORE.

(3rd S. viii. 161.)

I must beg a niche in "N. & Q." for a final article on this useful man, feeling assured that any of your readers, who, like myself, are interested in the Ballad Literature of this country, will be glad at any time to hear or read of one so eminent and industrious in that department.

To me the question seems very doubtful as to whether he really was connected with the ducal family or not, "adhuc sub judice lis est"; but I think that there is no doubt of his having set up the claim in his lifetime. However, on looking over Burke's History of the Commons (vol. ii. p. 14, edition 1836), I find the good bishop's claim to, even if possible, a higher lineage—a descent from the kings of France, England, Scotland, and Ireland, and from Charlemagne.

This is said to be through the ancient family of Baskerville of Wotton, in Herefordshire, from which are derived the families of—"Pembruge, of Mansel Gamage; Rowdon, of Rowdon; Barnaby, Brigginsshaw; Hopton, of Canon Frome Court; Lowe; Percy, of Bridgnorth; Isted, of Ecton; Monington, of Westhide," &c. (p. xiv.)

This pedigree is said in the above-named work to have been "compiled by Dr. Percy, the celebrated Bishop of Dromore, and authenticated by incontestable proofs." So it would seem certainly from this as if an anxiety to trace descent from an illustrious stock entered occasionally into his mind, and that he did not quite agree with the opinion of Juvenal—

"Stemmata quid faciunt? quid prodest, Pontice, longo Sanguine censeri?"

But after all it was his best title to honour and fame that, from humble birth,* and from the useful, though certainly obscure position, of the clergyman of a quiet country village, he made his way to a high position by his writings and industry. Though his claims to a high descent may be doubted and questioned, yet his industry and valuable writings have secured for him a permanent reputation in the field of English literature, whilst his worth, goodness, and discharge of his duties as an exemplary priest and bishop, have gained him one of higher kind.

Let me record his epitaph in Dromore Cathedral, which certainly in this case is not overdrawn:—

"Near this place are interred the remains of the Right Reverend Thomas Percy, D.D., Lord Bishop of Dromore, to which see he was promoted in May, 1782, from the Deanery of Carlisle in England. This exalted station he filled nearly thirty years, residing constantly in his diocese, and discharging the duties of his sacred office with vigilance and zeal: instructing the ignorant, relieving the necessitous, and comforting the distressed with pastoral affection. Revered for his eminent piety and learning, and beloved for his universal benevolence by all ranks and religious denominations. He departed this life the 30th day of September in the year of our Lord 1811, in the 83rd year of his age.

* His father was a grocer in the Cartway at Bridgnorth. I have an excellent photograph of his birth-place there.

" . . . Non ego pauperum
Sanguis parentum, non ego, quem vocas
Dilecte, Mæcenæ, obibo,
Nec Stygiâ cohibebor undâ.

Hor. Carm. II. xx. 5."

OXONIENSIS.

ACCORDANCE BETWEEN THE SONGS OF BIRDS AND THE SEASONS OF THE DAY.

(3rd S. viii. 325.)

In a compilation before me there is an interesting passage on this subject, subscribed "Dr. Jenner." I should be glad to know the book in which it occurs:—

"There is a beautiful propriety in the order in which singing-birds fill up the day with their pleasing harmony. The accordance between their songs, and the aspect of Nature at the successive periods of the day at which they sing, is so remarkable, that one cannot but suppose it to be the result of benevolent design.

"First the Robin (not the Lark, as has been generally imagined), as soon as twilight has drawn its imperceptible line between night and day, begins his artless song. How sweetly does this harmonize with the soft dawning of the day! He goes on till the twinkling sunbeams begin to tell him that his notes no longer accord with the rising scene [sun?]. Up starts the Lark, and with him a variety of sprightly songsters, whose lively notes are in perfect correspondence with the gaiety of the morning. The general warbling continues, with now and then an interruption by the transient croak of the Raven, the scream of the Jay, or the pert chattering of the Dow. The Nightingale, unwearied by the vocal exertions of the night, joins his inferiors in sound in the general harmony. The Thrush is wisely placed on the summit of some lofty tree, that its piercing notes may be softened by distance before they reach the ear, while the mellow Blackbird seeks the lower branches.

"Should the sun, having been eclipsed by a cloud, shine forth with fresh effulgence, how frequently we see the Goldfinch perch on some blossomed bough, and hear its song poured forth in a strain peculiarly energetic; while the sun, full shining on his beautiful plumes, displays his golden wings and crimson crest to charming advantage. Indeed, a burst of sunshine in a cloudy day, or after a heavy shower, seems always to wake up a new gladness in the little musicians, and incite them to an answering burst of minstrelsy.

"As evening advances, the performers gradually retire, and the concert softly dies away. At sunset, the Robin again sends up his twilight song, till the still more serene hour of night sends him to his bower of rest. And now, in unison with the darkened earth and sky, no sooner is the voice of the Robin hushed, than the Owl sends forth his slow and solemn tones . . . well adapted to the serious hour."

EIRIONWACH.

[This beautiful passage is an extract from the late Dr. Jenner's paper, entitled "Some Observations on the Migration of Birds," read before the Royal Society on Nov. 27, 1823, and published in the Philosophical Transactions, vol. cxiv. pt. i. pp. 11—44. The paper was presented to Sir Humphrey Davy by the Rev. G. C. Jenner, who, to use his own words, "had the peculiar happiness to accompany his uncle in most of the investigations of the phenomena of migration. Had it pleased Providence to have spared him a little longer, he might probably have corrected some inaccuracies in the style and order of his paper, that may now perhaps appear conspicuous to the reader, but which I did not conceive myself justified in attempting." Consult also John Baron's Life of Edward Jenner, M.D., 8vo, 1838, ii. 278.—Ed.]

WHITE USED FOR MOURNING

(3rd S. vii. 458.)

To wear black for mourning costume appears to have been the prevailing custom among all ranks in this country. At the funeral of a king, at the funeral of a citizen, the mourner's habiliments are alike significant of the last dark resting-place. The mourners of some loved one; the friends of one who has shone as a light in literature: the relatives of some departed representative of a noble house, all—"all in black."

"'Tis not alone my inked cloak, good mother,
Nor customary suit of solemn black,—
That can denote me truly:—
These, but the trappings and the suits of woe."

Hamlet, Act I. S. 2.

It has, however, been suggested that white for mourning may have occasionally been used. Strutt tells us (quoting from Hall) that "Henry VIII. wore white for mourning after he had beheaded Anna Bullen." He also adds that, "At the funeral of Mary Queen of Scots, the ladies had Purris-heads and barbes, and the gentlewomen whyte heads = headdresses."

Jesse, in his Memoirs of the Court of England during the Reign of the Stuarts (1840), says, that "James issued an indecent order, that no mourning should be worn for his deceased son" (Prince Henry); and that "we do not know what may have been the king's costume on the occasion; but Sir James Finett, a nice observer, and master of the ceremonies to the court, distinctly says that the Princess (Elizabeth) was apparelled in white."

So far we may conclude that the dress of Henry VIII. and that of the Princess Elizabeth was not, strictly speaking, mourning at all. Henry's dress was no doubt assumed as a mere thing of fancy; Elizabeth obeyed the order of King James her father, and mourned in white for a brother "to whom she was strongly attached."

There is a curious passage in Fuller's Pirgah Night, p. 98, book 4. After referring to King David's mourning, Psalm xxxv. 14, he says that, "We say mourning shirts, it being customary for men in sadness to spare the pains of their laundresses." Fuller evidently here alludes to some peculiar custom existing in his days. It may be that the mourning shirt is shown in the miniature (1937. Exhibition of Portrait Miniatures, South Kensington Museum), "of the gentleman dressed in a white linen habit, with a black cloak thrown over the left shoulder, and under the right arm."

A quotation or two from Brand's Popular Antiquities (vol. ii. Bohn's edit.) bearing upon this subject, may perhaps be not out of place here. At p. 283 he says, that "At the funerals of unmarried persons of both sexes, as well as infants, the scarves, handkerchiefs, and gloves given as mourning are white."

In Archæologia, 1706, vol. xii., the Rev. Mr. Wright, in his short notice relating to the parish of Llanretheline, Monmouthshire, p. 100, says:—

"In such obscure parts of the kingdom ancient customs are frequently retained. The common people of this parish tie a dirty cloth about their heads when they appear as chief mourners at a funeral. The same custom likewise prevails in different places."

At p. 284:—

"They generally give black or white gloves, and black crape handkerchiefs to those that carry the pall; sometimes also white silk scarves."

"Six pretty maids pray let me have,
To bear me to the silent grave;
All-cloth'd in white—a comely show,
To bear me to the shades below."—P. 285.

W. H. Maxwell, in his Border Sketches, vol. ii. p. 164, says that—

"All who follow the body to the grave are attired in decent mourning. The funeral appointments of the married are sable altogether, but those of the unwedded are trimmed with white; and young females, or women who die in child-birth, are attended by girls dressed in white, some of whom precede the coffin, while others support the pall."

In Adams's Weekly Courant (Chester newspaper), Nov. 30, 1787, there is the following:—

"We hear from good authority that the remains of his Grace the late Duke of Rutland (Lord Lieutenant) will be carried in great funeral procession to the water-side (Dublin). . . . It is determined to spare no expense that may be necessary. No less than eight hundred pieces of linen have been bought up upon the occasion, which, it is estimated, will make six thousand scarves."

I presume the scarves were white linen, but perhaps some Dublin correspondent better acquainted with the circumstance will explain.

"Toll! toll! toll! How solemn!—white plumes! white scarves!—Hush!"—Diary of a late Physician.

GIBSON.

Liverpool.

THE TEMPLE FAMILY.

(3rd S. viii. 472.)

May I be permitted to announce that I have lately been engaged in inquiries respecting the Temples, the result of which will be published in The Herald and Genealogist. It would give me satisfaction to communicate with the gentleman who states that he has long been a collector of materials connected with their pedigree; but I am at a loss to discover him merely as a CONSTANT READER of the Post, quoted in the Leeds Mercury.

I may however mention, in regard to what has been printed in p. 472, that I have made two remarkable discoveries. One is, that the "Extracts from the Register of Sibbesdon," printed in Nichols's History of Leicestershire (iv. 658), are not really from that place; but from Stowe, in Buckinghamshire. The CONSTANT READER states, "The registers of Sibstone-cum-Temple record thirty-three births and twelve burials of this ancient family." I suspect his only authority for that statement is the History of Leicestershire, though the baptisms are there actually thirty-four, and the burials eleven.

My other discovery is, that there has always been a great mistake as to the dates of the patents of twenty-one of the baronetcies created at the first institution of the Order in 1611. The third seal of those patents took place on the 24th Sept. 1611; and conferred the dignity upon four families, of which Temple of Stowe was one. The fourth was dated on the 12th Nov. in the same year, and advanced seventeen more to the same rank. There was no further creation until the 27th May, 1616, in consequence of a question of precedence and other difficulties, of which some account will shortly be published in the series of papers on the "Institution and Early History of the Dignity of Baronet," now in progress in The Herald and Genealogist. The date of the Temple creation has, in p. 472, been given as Nov. 12, 1112 (sic), by what may be dissected as a conglomeration of three errors. The last committed is the merely typographical misprint of 1112 for 1612: the second, a placing of the Temple creation among those of November instead of September; but the original of all is that I have already mentioned, of assigning all these twenty-one creations to 1612 instead of 1611.

An error in the paragraph quoted is in the name "Edward Temple, who married (1647) Eleanor Harvey:" this should be Edmund, as in the epitaph which follows. That epitaph is more accurately and more perfectly published in Bridges's History of Northamptonshire. "(Bury)" is an insertion which does not occur in it, and it is altogether wrong. The place was called Stanton Barry, not Stanton Bury.

The writer also states that—

"The last of the line, Edward, was buried at Sibberton-cum-Welford, in 1796, with three sisters, the children of Purbeck Temple: the headstone to Edward's grave bears the Temple arms."

By Sibberton I have no doubt that Sibbertoft, in Northamptonshire, is intended; which is near Welford, but they are not united parishes. I shall feel obliged to any friend who will communicate the memorial lines upon the headstone, and a description of the arms. It is for the first time that I learn that any of the family were surviving in Northamptonshire at so recent a date.

The pedigree of that branch is important in regard to the descent of the baronetcy, which was assumed in 1786 by Sir John Temple, the great-great-great-grandfather of the present Sir Grenville; but "whose descent or right to the title has never been ascertained," as it was remarked by Mr. Courthope, the present Somerset Herald, when he edited Debrett's Baronetage in 1835.

At the same time the article of Temple was retained in the work, because it was thought possible that the present line of baronets might have descended from Edmund of Sulby, above-mentioned, whose children are described in the epitaph at Welford, printed in p. 472.

The failure of the male line of the Palmenston Temples, as well as of those which once flourished at Stowe, lends a more than usual interest to this inquiry; which derives its difficulties in some measure from the great number of branches that existed in the seventeenth century, and the similarity of Christian name in the several lines.

JOHN GOUGH NICHOLS.

HAG'S PRAYER: HOG'S PRAYER (8th S. viii. 403.)—What seems to be a sort of profane parody on the Hag's prayer has been current in Leitham, to my knowledge, for the last sixty years at least. It reads thus:—

"Matthew, Mark, Luke, John,
Haud the horse till I leap on;
Haud him stieve, haud him studdy,
Haud him like a blind cuddy."

Which may be translated thus:—

"Matthew, Mark, Luke, John,
Hold the horse till I leap on;
Hold him firmly, hold him steadily,
Hold him like a blind donkey."

Cuddy is our vernacular representative of the new-fangled donkey, and not seldom the animal gets the double name of cuddy-ass. V. S. V.
Edinburgh.

I have to-day seen for the first time any reference to this subject in "N. & Q.," and am surprised that you have not yet received a solution, as Mr. HOARE's allusion must be familiar to many of the clergy in Kent, though I hope that it is not "the only form of devotion known to the boys who tend swine in this county."

Many years ago two clerical friends elicited the following version from one of these boys. I give the words as they were repeated to me, though no doubt in different agricultural districts they might be found to vary. The "Hog's Prayer" is the name of a doggerel which is in constant use among the boys who tend the pigs in the stubble fields after harvest. It may perhaps represent the counting of the pigs on the road home, and is read off notches cut on the handles of their whips:—

"Two before one,
Three before five,
Here one, there one,
Four all alive.
Here two, there two,
Three at the cross;
Here one, there one,
Jack at the last!"

C. A. M.

Hougham Vicarage.

In a prize essay upon the "Social Condition of the Agricultural Labourers," written by the Rev. — Hammond, formerly of Northbourne Vicarage, Kent, and presented at a county meeting at Canterbury some few years ago, mention was made of the above. It simply consists of a doggerel hieroglyphic cut upon the handles of the pigwhips used by the boys who attend the herds of swine sent into the stubble-fields after harvest. It is as follows:—

II I III V I I X
II II X I I X

"Two before one, three before five,
Here one, there one, Jack is alive;
Here two, there two, Jack at the cross,
Here one, there one, Jack is the last."

I remember, after reading the essay referred to, often requesting the boys I have seen in the fields to let me look at their whips, and have always seen the notched hieroglyphics, which they have told me was the "Hog's Prayer," but could never give any meaning thereto. ALDERSHOT.

BEDE ALE (3rd S. viii. 436.)—This, I believe, was the Bid or Bed Ale, which was drunk at the convivial assemblies at the houses of newly married persons. The custom was most likely the occasion of many excesses and abuses, which seem to have led to the prohibition to brew it. From this we may gather that it differed in its ingredients and mode of preparation from the ale in common use. F. C. H.

THE ITALIAN ST. SWITHIN (3rd S. viii. 453.)—In July, 1862, the undersigned sent a communication to the Athenæum in respect to the Welsh St. Swithin. The Editor did not see fit to insert the letter entire, but in the Weekly Gossip (No. 1812, July 19, 1862, p. 85), appeared the extract subjoined. Should the Editor of "N. & Q." kindly admit the extract to his columns, it will be there more usefully preserved, and the references contained therein may prove of service to A. A. and others:—

"A friend in Wales asks us to add the name of the Welsh St. Swithun, viz. 'Cewydd-y-gylaw,' i. e. Cewydd of the rain, to the list of Swithuns given in our last number. Those of our readers who may wish to trace the history of this rainy saint, will be glad to have the following clues to inquiry:—For an account of his festival, held on the 1st of July, see 'Iolo MSS.' pp. 152, 558; for the names of churches dedicated to him, see Rees's Welsh Saints, pp. 236, 338. For an account of his 'forty days' rain power, or pour, see Lewis Glyn Cothi's Works, vol. i. p. 5. vv. 10, 11."

R. & M.

A correspondent, under the signature of A. A., requests to have the legend of St. Bibiana, and the day of her festival. By a curious coincidence, I read his request on the very festival of the saint, it being December 2nd. The life of this holy virgin and martyr, abridged from her acts, may be seen in Alban Butler's Lives of the Saints, at the 2nd of December. But A. A. will be disappointed if he expects to find anything in any legend of St. Bibiana, which could have given occasion to the Roman weather proverb. I say the same of the history of St. Medard, and of our own St. Swithin. Other countries expect so many weeks of rain, if certain other days prove wet. These are mere superstitions, attached rather to the seasons than to the festivals. The French imagine that St. Medard influences the month of August: "Tel S. Medard, tel Août:" that the weather on St. Urban has its effect on the vintage: "Tel S. Urbain, telles vendanges:" and that dews in March will produce fogs after Easter, and in August: "Autant de brouillards après Pâques, et au mois d'Août, que de rosées au mois de Mars." Frederick II., Duke of Saxony, used to expect snow to last till the next new moon. F. C. H.

PEG TANKARDS (3rd S. viii. 455.)—Having often seen, and carefully examined the famous Glastonbury cup, or peg tankard, in the possession of Lord Arundell of Wardour, I am enabled to rectify some mistakes of Fosbroke, as quoted in the note in "N. & Q." at the above reference. The cup is made of heart of oak, and holds four quarts, wine measure. Instead of eight pegs, as stated by Fosbroke, and even by Dr. Milner, it had originally only six, of which there are now but four remaining. There are, it is true, Apostles carved round the cup; but they are not twelve only, but thirteen; St. Paul and Judas are introduced, and St. Matthias omitted. The names are chiefly in Latin, but St. Peter is named Peder. Various birds and beasts are represented round the foot—a goose, an eagle, a swan, a pelican, a horse, and a stag. Below these are dolphins in pairs, facing each other, and the cup rests upon three lions. F. C. H.

LORD PALMERSTON: LINES ON LORD HOUGHTON: "NEW WHIG GUIDE" (3rd S. viii. 457.)—It seems to be the fashion to palm all the unclaimed jokes on Lord Palmerston, as if our late Premier had nothing to do but to amuse himself with literary trifles. I have a copy of the "Literary Squabble on the Pronunciation of Monkton Milnes's Title," printed on a quarto broadside, bearing the signature "J. R. P.," which are the initials of our dramatic and historic antiquary, James Robinson Planché, who is known to be the ingenious author of the lines.

For the letter S, which your correspondent makes the settler of the question, should be substituted the letter T, one of the disputants named in the opening.

It really would be interesting if some of your correspondents would point out Lord Palmerston's contributions to the New Whig Guide. D. S.

JOHN CRUSO, LL.D. (3rd S. viii. 391.)—By Mr. Crouse, of Caius College, is doubtless meant John Cruso, matriculated as a sizar of that house July 5, 1632; B.A. 1635-6; Fellow, 163-; M.A. 1689; incorporated at Oxford 1643, having lost his Fellowship at Cambridge for his loyalty; LL.D. 1652; admitted an advocate Nov. 12, 1652. He was Chancellor of the diocese of St. David's; died in 1681, and published various works.

C. H. & THOMPSON COOPER.

Cambridge.

COIN OF TIBERIUS (3rd S. viii. 310.)—This coin was struck for the colony of Utica near Carthage. M. M. I. v. represent "Municipes Municipii Julii Uticensis." See Vaillant on Colonial Coins, Parisii, 1688, where many similar ones are represented and described. The coin is of no particular rarity. The seated figure is said to be Livia, wife of Augustus.

J. C. WITTON.

Bath.

MEYERS'S "LETTERS": WALL? (3rd S. viii. 107.)—When Governor Wall was brought out for execution, the mob shouted, "Cut his liver out," the words which it was said he used while directing the flogging of Armstrong (see "N. & Q." 3rd S. viii. 438). Tros begged for mercy from Achilles,— Νήπιος, οὐδὲ τὸ ᾗδην, ὃ οὐ κείσσεσθαι ἔμελλεν.

Οὐ γὰρ τι γλυκύθυμος ἄνθρωπος ἦν, οὐδ' ἀγαθόφρων,
'Αλλὰ μάλ' ἐμμεμαώς· ὃ μὲν ἥπτετο χεῖρεσι γούναυ,
'Ιέμενος λίσσεσθ', ὃ δὲ φασγάνῳ οὐκ ἔπαρ'
'Ἐκ δὲ οἱ ἥπαρ ὕλισθεν, ἀτὰρ μέλαν αἷμα κατ' αὐτοῦ
Κόλπῳ ἐπέπλησεν.—Iliad, xx. v. 466-471.

Pope, shocked by the coarseness of the picture, or wishing to suppress the anatomical difficulty, translates this—

"The ruthless falchion oped his tender side;
The panting liver pours a flood of gore
That drowns his bosom, 'till he pants no more."

Lord Derby does it honestly:—

"Gashed through the liver as from out the wound
The liver dropped."

H. B. C.

U. U. Club.

PANCAKE BELL AND DEVIL'S BELL AT DEWSBURY (3rd S. viii. 368.)—I beg to add my testimony to that of J. H. that the ringing of the Pancake Bell is not peculiar to Lincoln. It has been rung in Dewsbury, at eleven o'clock in the morning of Shrove Tuesday, from time immemorial. There is a figure of a dog carved in stone on the roof of the Church Institute (formerly the vicarage) of Dewsbury, which is said to have been discovered during some repairs of the church, and placed in its present position by one of the former vicars; and the legend concerning this dog is, that when it hears the pancake bell it will jump down from the roof. There are generally some children to be seen standing about the Institute, a little before the bell begins to ring, expecting to see the dog jump down, but it is needless to say that their expectations have not been gratified as yet. In connection with the tolling of the Devil's Passing Bell at Dewsbury parish church on Christmas Eve, of which mention was made in "N. & Q." some years ago, I have often been told by old people, and in fact it is a common tradition in Dewsbury, that the Devil was buried in the churchyard here, though I have not been able to discover the grave.

C. J. S.

DEATH IN SOUNDINGS (3rd S. viii. 414.)—Probably most of the invalids referred to "died almost immediately after reaching soundings," because they "had lingered for many weeks in blue water" with incurable disease, and would have died about the same time if they had not come into soundings. The death of others might be accelerated on approach to land, by changes of air, and especially of temperature, which might be hurtful or beneficial, according to the various forms of disease. D.

DAUGHTER AND DAFTER (3rd S. viii. 444.)—In connection with the discussion on these words, it may be remarked that in the dialect of North East Yorkshire gh has the sound of f in several words in which those letters are now commonly silent: though is thof; through, thruf; plough, plouf; and, what is most to the purpose, slaughter is pronounced slaftther; and why not, if we retain laughter? D.

THE CHRISTIAN NAME OF "DATE" (3rd S. viii. 125.)—While communicating some "entries respecting the family of a Thomas Shaxspere, innkeeper, copied from the Parish Register of St. Mary Magdalene, Oxford," the Rev. W. D. MARGRAY, curate, says,—"For those of your readers who are curious in Christian names, I may mention that a boy was lately living in the parish who answers to the unique Christian name of Date." Surely Date is merely an abbreviation of Deodatus. It appears from my predecessor's entries in the Baptismal Register of this parish, that on Nov. 9, 1861, he christened a girl Lis, evidently an abbreviation of Elizabeth; and that on Sept. 7 in the same year, he christened a boy Nat, doubtless an abbreviation of Nathaniel, though, if one had but one's ear to judge by, one might think it a nickname given in consequence of the exhibition of a nature by no means devoid of guile. I shall be happy to contribute to a future number of "N. & Q." a list, with dates, of odd Christian names which occur in the Registers of this parish.

JOHN HOSKYNs ABRAHAM, M.A.

Combe, near Woodstock.

"THE SECRETS OF ANGLING" (3rd S. ii. 207.)—There certainly were at least four early editions of this work. Of the first and fourth of these, there are several perfect copies extant. The supposed second and third hold to existence, as far as I am aware, each by a single copy, the imprint in both cases having been cut off by the binder. The date of the second is conjectured to be circa 1620. That the two are distinct is shown by a reference at the end of the work to the shop where certain ingredients for baits are to be procured. This reference differs in all four editions.

I may refer those who are interested in this question to the second volume of the Fisherman's Magazine, to which I contributed as complete a bibliography of the "Secrets of Angling," as the scanty circumstances of the case permitted. The sale referred to in "N. & Q." 2nd S. vi. 79, under the head of "Waltonian Literature," was that of Mr. Prince's Collection. T. WESTWOOD.

ELIZABETH HEYRICK (3rd S. viii. 444), respecting whom S. Y. R. makes inquiry, was the elder daughter of John Coltman of Leicester, and the wife of John Heyrick of the same place, lieutenant in the 15th, or King's Own, Light Dragoons. She was born Dec. 4, 1769, was married in her twentieth year, was a widow in her twenty-ninth, and died Oct. 18, 1831. Soon after her widowhood she became a member of the Society of Friends from conviction.

The writer knew her personally, and has received many of the principal facts of her life from the lips of her venerable and only sister, now nearly ninety years of age. She was a warm philanthropist, and steadily set her face, and exerted her utmost influence, against all cruelty and oppression. By the united efforts of herself and sister, the annual bull-baitings at Bonsall, in Derbyshire, were finally suppressed. She once sat at a window in Smithfield to assure herself of the alleged cruelty exercised there. After which she wrote very forcibly upon the subject; her pamphlets had a wide circulation. She entered into a correspondence with R. Martin, Esq., M.P., and the writer has been assured that through their joint influence the goads in Smithfield were considerably shortened.

A warmer friend and a more fervent advocate the negro slave could not possibly have had. The pamphlet alluded to by S. Y. R., and which led to such amazing results, was entitled Immediate not Gradual Abolition, &c., and is one of several on the same topic. It arrested the attention of members of the House of Commons, and was quoted in that House before the authorship was fully known as the production of the other sex. Elizabeth Heyrick's habits of self-denial and private benevolence were far too numerous, and too sacred ever to be made public. Her motives were purified by divine love; and, after a life of usefulness, and greatly endeared to her family and friends, she sank happily and peacefully to rest in the sixty-second year of her age.

Eighteen tracts and pamphlets, all on philanthropic subjects, are known to have been published by E. H., and these were not the limits of her pen. A. L. C.

32, Princes Street, Leicester.

RALPHSTOWN FAMILY (3rd S. viii. 372.)—Nisbet, in his Scotch Heraldry, vol. i. p. 374, gives the arms of Ralstoun or Ralphstoun of that ilk, county Renfrew, "argent on a bend azure, three acorns in the seed or." In his Historical and Critical Remarks on the Ragman Roll, he makes the following observation:—

"Hew de Ralstoun of that ilk, a family of antiquity in the county of Renfrew, as far up as the reign of Alex. III., and gives out as the tradition that they are descended of a son of the Earl of Fife. But how that tradition is vouched I cannot say, but their arms does not favour that, for they do not wear the lion rampant, the arms of the Earl of Fife, but three acorns on a bend, intimating that they are of the same race and stock with those of the surname of Muirhead."

The only explanation of the arms of the family in the county of Meath is that the Ulster King-of-Arms accepted a coat, which the Lord Lyon of Scotland would have rejected as spurious.

GEORGE VERN IRVING.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

The Life of Man symbolized by the Months of the Year, in a Series of Illustrations by John Leighton, F.S.A., and portrayed in their Seasons and Phases. With Passages selected from Ancient and Modern Authors. By Richard Pigot. (Longman.)

If, to parody Keats's well-worn lines,—

"A book of beauty is a joy for ever,
Its loveliness increases"— verily Mr. Leighton's new Christmas Book will not only be the favourite of the present season, but the favourite for many seasons to come. It is a book of great pictorial beauty—of great typographical beauty; and with reference to the collection of illustrative passages from the ancient and modern poets, we may add that it is a book of great moral beauty. The larger illustrations in which Mr. Leighton's skilful pencil preaches on his chosen text, "The tree of the field is Man's Life," and in which he symbolizes Man's Life under the figure of the Twelve Months of the Year, are very original, very suggestive, and marked with great power; while the hundreds of smaller engravings, head-pieces, borders, vignettes, &c., scattered throughout the volume, now illustrating the poetical quotations, and now illustrated by them, are no less striking. The mention of poetical quotations reminds us to do justice to Mr. Pigot, by whom the collection has been made. The task of filling such a carcanet — is no easy one, but Mr. Pigot has done his part extremely well. His good judgment and Mr. Leighton's artistic skill have happily combined to produce a volume which no one can open without delight, or ponder over without profit.

“Of orient pearls at random strung.”

A History of the City of Rome, its Structures, and Monuments. By T. H. Dyer, LL.D. (Longmans.)

This excellent work must not be mistaken for what is ordinarily called a History of Rome, which in truth is that of the Roman Empire, but is strictly that of the City itself: its rise, growth, maturity, and ultimate decay. It is not, however, merely a guide book to the different remains; but contains pari passu such portions of the history of the nation as naturally elucidate that of the buildings themselves. From the first fortifications of the Palatine, the first rudiments of the Forum, the Comitium, the early Curia, the Jupiter Stator, the Agger of Servius Tullius, the Cloaca Maxima, the Mamertine Prison, the Vesta, the Janus, and, above all, the Capitol, to the latest and most sumptuous works of the luxurious Emperors, every building of any note on record has an adequate notice; whether any of its remains be still extant or no. With the early history most scholars are familiar; and long and severe have been the controversies as to the relative positions of the Capitol and Tarpeian, the Comitium and Greco-stasis, the exact sites of the new shops where the sad death of Virginia, “the fairest maid in Rome,” took place, where the Gauls scaled the Arx, and where afterwards Manlius was hurled down, where Cicero denounced Catiline, and where Horace lounged and was plagued by the chattering bore he has immortalised,—these and hundreds of other points have been written of, again and again. Seldom so well as by Mr. Dyer. But the latter part of the history, the darker pages of the Roman decline, have never been so ably and completely written before. The author now and then modestly refers to the great Gibbon; but it is easy to see that he himself is fully familiar not only with the classic authorities, but with the Byzantine writers, collected by the worthy old Benedictine Monks, and the still more abstruse Itineraries, Memorabilia, and other recondite lore. We consider his work one of the most valuable literary cinclia of 1865.

Lives of Boulton and Watt, principally from the Original Soho MSS., comprising also a History of the Invention and Introduction of the Steam-Engine. By Samuel Stiles. (Murray.)

This handsome volume completes Mr. Smiles's series of The Lives of the Engineers. The author had intended to follow up his Life of George Stephenson, the principal improver and introducer of the locomotive engine, by a life of James Watt, the principal inventor and introducer of the condensing engine; he abandoned his work, however, on finding that such a task had already been taken in hand by Mr. Muirhead. Mr. Smiles has now been induced to resume it, in consequence of being permitted to examine the extensive collection of documents brought from Soho, including the original correspondence between Watt and Small, between Watt and Boulton, and between the latter and his numerous friends and business correspondents; the result of such examination leading him to believe that, notwithstanding the publication of Mr. Muirhead's valuable Biography, the story of the life of Watt would well bear to be told again, in connection with the life and labours of Matthew Boulton of Soho.

But though the work before us is professedly only a biography of the partners in that old Soho firm, which so long enjoyed a world-wide reputation, it will be found to contain memoirs of the other men of genius who have at various times laboured at the invention and application of the steam-engine. The volume is beautifully printed, well illustrated, and will be welcome to all who take an interest in the history of steam machinery in this country.

Little Foxes; or, The Insignificant Little Habits which mar Domestic Happiness. By Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. (Bell & Daldy.)

The idea on which this little work is founded is as well carried out as it is well conceived, and the book it is hoped will contribute to the extermination of those “Little Foxes that spoil the Vines”—the unsuspected, unwatched, insignificant little causes that nibble away domestic happiness, and spoil the comforts of home.

Messrs. DEAN & SON have issued for the spelling public several little volumes. Black Jokes and Brown for Country and Town—funny, but rather vulgar:—Arithmetical Tables designed for the Young are put into Rhyme to be Chanted or Sung, well calculated to fix such Tables in the memory.—The Jolly Old Man who easy Down Derry Down, is a capital novelty; as is also their Little Red Riding Out, which is a book cut into the figure of this old favorite of our nurseries. The same publishers will early in January issue the New Edition of Debrett's Peerage.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books, to be sent direct to the gentlemen by whom they are required, whose names and addresses are given for that purpose:—

ROBSON'S LONDONER'S MEDICINE. Vol. I. 4to. (The address required of the person who reported a copy.)

Wanted by Rev. Alfred Gatty, Ecclesfield Vicarage, Sheffield.

LODGE'S PORTRAITS. 4to ed. Any odd numbers or prints.

Wanted by Bookworm, St. John's Villa, Clifton.

WORKS OF SIR THOMAS BROWNE, M.D. Old edition, about 1680.

BOWELL'S LIFE OF JENKINS. 4 Vols. Illustrated edition, 1847.

THE LETTERS OF PLINY THE YOUNGER. By William Melmoth. Vol. II. 1748.

Wanted by Rev. E. Macphail, Fosse, Radstock, Bath.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

C. L. The allusion in the Rev. F. Robertson's letter is obviously to the late Queen Adelaide.

ERRON HARMLESS. We shall be glad if the Rev. Dr. Barker, E. F. Barton (Carlisle), and all other Correspondents who may wish for information as to the editions of the King's Book, will state the page, date, last paginal figure, number of leaves of Contents; also, if the Prayers are at the end of it has the “Emblem,” and any other particulars.

AN INQUIRER will find some accurate particulars of the Albion of Isidore Marshall in Lewis's Topog. Dict. of Wales, art. “Walespool.”

F. Galenus Martius M.S. “De Censura Operum Philosophicorum” has not been printed.—For notices of early water-marks on paper, consult “N. & Q.” and 8. vols. vi, vii, and viii.—There is no doubt that Ulrich von Hutten is intended by the Utriusque of the writer of the M.S. note.

R. B. PROCTOR. Only one volume of The Albion Magazine was published, 1838–9, consisting of 325 pages.

T. B. An extended account of John Gough, the blind mathematician, is printed in Corn. Nicholson's Annals of Kendall, 1861, pp. 155–160.

ERRATUM.—2nd & 3rd vols. p. 441, col. 2 line 12 from bottom, for “college lecture” read “college lectures.”

“NOTES & QUERIES” is registered for transmission abroad.

MORE CURES OF ASTHMA, AND CURES THIS WEEK, BY DR. LINDEN'S PEPPERMINT WAFERS.—From Mr. C. Collins, Chemist, Bristol Lane, Bournebridge, December 11, 1865: “Several have taken them for Asthma, Coughs, &c., and in every case they have had the desired effect. In my opinion, they surpass anything that has been offered to the public.”—They give instant relief of Asthma, Consumption, Croup, Colds, and all disorders of the Breasts and Lungs. Price 1s. 6d. per box. Sold by all Druggists.

DESCRIPTIVE AND LYRICAL POEMS.

THIRD EDITION.—Now ready, at all Libraries, with Frontispiece by F. GILBERT, toned Paper, crown 8vo, price 6s.

BEAUTIES OF TROPICAL SCENERY, LYRICAL SKETCHES, AND LOVE-SONGS.

WITH NOTES.

To which are added, "LAYS NEARER HOME."

By R. N. DUNBAR.

"This is a charming volume; the poems are full of vitality, and rich, varied, profuse beauties sparkle and glow in lyrical description, and brilliant fanciful association."—Morning Post.

"It is a volume of poetic pictures."—Observer.

"The love-songs are worthy of Thomas Moore."—Critic.

"The glowing pages breathe great warmth of feeling, and possess a redundancy of poetic imagery. The notes appended are valuable."—Morning Herald and Standard.

"We add our voice to the chorus of praise which has been called forth by these very pleasant and harmonious poems."—Illustrated London News.

London: ROBERT HARDWICKE, 192, Piccadilly.

THE CHRISTMAS GIFT BOOK.

In Foolscap 4to, 21s. elegantly printed and bound,

E N O C H A R D E N.

By ALFRED TENNYSON.

Copiously Illustrated by Drawings on Wood, by ARTHUR HUGHES.

London: EDWARD MOXON & CO., Dover Street.

"One of the prettiest of the Christmas books."—Times.

Second Edition, copiously illustrated, and beautifully bound,

E P H E M E R A.

By LADY WOOD and MRS. STEELE.

Foolscap 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

Times, Dec. 14th, 1865.

"Mrs. Steele's poems have the defects of youth—impatience, crudity, carelessness; but they also have the riches of youth—its graceful cast, its rush of spirits, and its force of expression. . . . The pencil is Lady Wood's language, and she uses it well."

London: EDWARD MOXON & CO., Dover Street.

THE GEM EDITION.

SONNETS AND SONGS BY WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

Edited by FRANCIS TURNER PALGRAVE, M.A., late Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford. With a Vignette Title, engraved by Jeans, from an Antique Gem, 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN & CO., London.

SCIENTIFIC PRESENTS.—Elementary Collections to illustrate the New Edition of "Lyell's Elements of Geology," and facilitate the Study of Mineralogy and Geology can be had at 2, 5, 10, 20, 50, to 500 Guineas; also single specimens of Minerals, Rocks, Fossils, and Recent Shells, Geological Maps, Hammers, all the Recent Publications, &c., of J. TENNANT, Mineralogist to Her Majesty, 149, Strand, London. Private instruction is given in Geology and Mineralogy by Mr. TENNANT, F.G.S., 149, Strand, W.C.

GENTLEMEN'S LIBRARIES.

LIBRARIES CATALOGUED with SCIENTIFIC INDEXES if desired, by Mr. E. JEANS, who has had much experience.—Address, Post-Office, 163, Strand, London, W.C.

Just published, price 5d.

THE NEW LATIN PRAYER-BOOKS. A Letter to a Friend in the Shires. By WILLIAM JOHN EWE.

London: DORRELL & SON, Charing Cross.
Brighton: GEORGE WAKELING, Royal Library.

W. HARPER'S CATALOGUE of CHEAP BOOKS, Ancient and Modern, will be forwarded Gratis and Post Free on application.
33, Tabernacle Wall, London, E.C. (near Finsbury Square.)

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 208.

Christmas, 513.

NOTES:—The Lady Greene, temp. Charles II., ib.—Shakespeare in Germany, 514—The Northern Scolds, 515—Burial-places of Adam and Eve—Epigram on the late Rev. D. C.—The First Cotton Mill in America—Easterly Winds—Joseph-Marie Quérard—Appropriate Motto—Nick Names—Poets Laureate, 516.

QUERIES:—The Algem-Tree and Peacocks—Baskerville Query—A Commentary of Servius on Terence—The "Decameron" and the "Bahar-Danush"—Derivation of "Conrad"—Escalop Shells worn by Roman Senators—Adam Frier—John Gaule—Hymn by Archbishop Whately?—Hymns—Old Paintings—"The Poor Man's Grave"—Portrait said to be of Rubens—Stewart, Napoleon's Servant—West—Westmoreland Dialect, 518.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—Geddes' Translation of the Bible—Surenhusius, &c.—"Don Nipperly Septo"—Solomon and Aristotle—Eikon Basilike—"Should he upbraid"—Genre, 520.

EMPLIES:—Notes on Fly-Leaves, 521—"Two Pairs" or "two Pairs," 522—Human Skin Tanned, 524—Seals of the Emperors of Germany, ib.—Wills of the Seventeenth Century—Cross Writing—Perplexed Relationship—Winthrop Pedigree—See of Evreux—Origin of the Terms Whig and Tory—Penance for Incontinence—"Tatterling a Kip"—Morison's "Scottish Poets"—"Durance vile"—The First Duke of Gloucester and Stephen Penny—Strange Ship Charade—"Amicus Plato," &c.—Poyle Arms—Biochimo on Chess—Burial of Sir William Stanley—Rhyming Alphabet—Tilson's Lincolnshire and Warwickshire Pedigrees—Basil—"Memoirs of Scotland," 1714—Zlad—Peacock's Feathers—The Highwaymen of Stangate Hole, &c., 525.

Notes on Books, &c.

CHRISTMAS.

The rolling year is waning fast away,
The lengthen'd heats are yielding to the cold,
The Sun's fierce drought has changed to chill and rain,
And thick'ning mists both morn and eve enfold.
Sadly and slow the ling'ring year decays,
Sad are its lessons still to erring man,
That short and troublous are his happiest days,
The measure of his life is but a span.
But, on the threshold of the closing year,
All-bounteous Heaven has giv'n one sacred day
Our griefs to stay, our rising hopes to cheer,
E'er the old twelvemonth passes slow away:
And as the bells in joyous change resound
With England's own peculiar mazy art,
In every home may hopefulness be found,
Peace and goodwill to ev'ry house and heart.

Care begone! avault! away!
This is labour's holiday!
All relaxed the weary strain,
Work of hand, or toil of brain.
Softened heart and gentle brow,
These be our companions now;
Cheery hopes be winging round;
Strife and enmity lay drowned.
Spread the board, and fill the cup,
Heap the fire and stir it up!

Then to Christmas tales repair,
Ringing laughter echoing there;
Riddle quaint, enigma fine,
Or the Owl's acrostic line.
Some, around the cheery blaze,
Tell the lore of other days;
From the page which bids us round,
"Make a note" of what we've found;
What the rustic folk believed,
What the village bard conceived;
Tale of ghost, or spell, or charm
Luck to bring, or ward from harm;
Cloven ash, or earth-fast briar,
Hollow coal that leaps from fire:
Witch who spite of weird care
Found her fate in form of hare,
Proof 'gainst shot, or leaden ball,
Yet by silver groat to fall.

Then anon to fairy tale,
How they graced the hill and vale,
Clad like ladies of the court,
Or arrayed in knightly port;
Unlike those of sullen mould,
German dwarf, or Danish trolld,
Nymph of Rhine, who oft beneath
Lures the gazer down to death.

Then the hand shall wander free
Flying o'er the ivory key,
And the voices glad resound
Merry glee, or catch, or round,
Such, perchance, in days of old,
Saxon gleemen joyful trolled;
Now in tempered tones its mirth
Still enchants the English hearth.
Closer sitting pairs be seen,
Confidences grave between,
Weighty trifles, smothered sighs,
Trembling hands, and trusting eyes.
Homeward then we must repair,
Wrap the shawl to guard the fair;
Farewell breathed in earnest tone;
Lengthened glances when she's gone;
Dreams at night—but I have done—
Thus may still our Christmas run.

Notes.

THE LADY GREENE, temp. CHARLES II.

In the letter dictated by Nell Gwynne, printed from Mr. Tite's collection of autographs in the fifth volume of The Camden Miscellany, is a passage, which (when put into due orthography) is as follows: "Mrs. Knight's lady mother is dead, and she has put up a scutcheon no bigger than my Lady Greene's scutcheon." The Editor has remarked in his notes that Mrs. Knight was a singer of great celebrity, and a rival to Nell Gwynne in the tender regard of Charles II.; but adds that he has not been able to identify Lady Greene.

There can be no doubt, however, that this was another of the King's quondam favourites, and the mother of his son Charles Fitz Charles (sometimes called Don Carlos), created in 1675 Earl of Plymouth (ob. 1680). She had also by the King another child named Katharine, who is stated by Sandford, in his Genealogical History of England, 1707, to have died in infancy, but who, I am informed, under the name of Dame Cecilia, was a nun of the English Benedictines at Dunkirk; and, having lived to be very aged, died in 1750.

Katharine Pegge, daughter of Thomas Pegge, Esq., of Yeldersley, co. Derby, by Katharine, eldest daughter of Sir Gilbert Kniveton, of Mercaston and Bradley in the same county, having attracted the King's affection during his exile, gave birth to the Earl of Plymouth in 1647. She became the wife of Sir Edward Greene, of Sampford, in Essex, Bart., who died in Flanders in Dec. 1676, having sold the manor of Sampford to Sir William Halton, and ruined an ancient family by gaming and extravagance. Lady Greene herself had probably died shortly before the inditing of Nell Gwynne's letter, which is supposed to have been written in the summer of 1678. In Nichols's Literary Anecdotes of the Eighteenth Century, vol. vi. p. 225 (where there is an account of the Earl of Plymouth and of his wife, the Lady Bridget Osborne, who was remarried to Dr. Bisse, Bishop of Hereford), it is stated that Lady Greene had no issue by Sir Edward. From some documents which are about to be published in The Herald and Genealogist, it is shown that Justina Greene, who was a nun of the house of English Benedictines at Pontoise, and died in 1717, aged fifty, was their daughter, and there were two more sisters. Eugenia Greene, another member of the same community, was the daughter of Sir Edward Greene, of Sampford, by his third wife, Anne, daughter of Sir George Simmons of Oxfordshire; she died in 1700, aged seventy-three.

The two works on the Extinct Baronetage, by Courthope and Burke, both make but one Baronet of Sampford, created in 1660, and who died in Dec. 1676. But they vary in regard to his marriage: Burke states that Sir Edward Greene married three wives: Courthope that he "married —, daughter of — Pegge." Morant, in his History of Essex, gives the names of the three wives: 1. Jeronima, dau. of Sir William Everard of Linstead; 2. Mary Tasburgh; and 3. Anne, dau. of Sir George Simmons. I believe the fact to have been, that there were two Baronets; that the first Sir Edward Greene, created in 1660, died in the year 1674; and that the spendthrift as spendthrifts are wont to do, ran a short course, and died in Dec. 1676, as above-mentioned.

There are two portraits of (Katharine Pegge) Lady Greene—one, a half-length, with her son standing by her side; the other a three-quarters, both either by Sir Peter Lely or one of his pupils mentioned in the Literary Anecdotes, and apparently preserved in the family of Pegge—of which another branch, that of Beauchief, co. Derby, produced the eminent antiquaries Dr. Samuel Pegge and his son Samuel Pegge, Esq. the author of Curialia; the latter the father of Sir Christopher Pegge, M.D., F.R.S. J. G. S.

SHAKESPEARE IN GERMANY.

The demonstrations that are constantly occurring in Germany of love and veneration for the personal character of Shakspeare, combined with the most critical appreciation of his works, have just been partly embodied in a volume which it is intended to publish annually,* and which is edited by a distinguished poet and dramatic critic. The volume contains more than twenty articles on Shakspeare and his Commentators, including notices of books and some recent works regarding him; and a list of publications and notices respecting the poet that appeared in Europe and America during 1864 and 1865, down to the month of August—in which list some of the communications in "N. & Q." are included, showing the keen-eyed attention of German literati to everything connected with Shakspeare.

It must be gratifying to the feelings of the German people to know that their gifts to the Shakspeare Museum, in honour of the poet, are conspicuously displayed in it, and strike the eye of every beholder by their elegance and grace. These gifts consist of the Address, beautifully written and embellished, from the "Free German Hochstift" to the Corporation of Stratford, congratulating the people of Great Britain on the Tercentenary of the Birth of William Shakspeare; and a very charming wreath of oak leaves and acorns, which was placed upon a bust of Shakspeare at Frankfort on the occasion of the tercentenary celebration, presented by the English circle at Frankfort, to be deposited as a memorial in the Museum.

The following list is given of the number of Shakspeare's plays which were acted during the year 1864, in the various cities mentioned:—Berlin, fifteen plays; Weimar, fourteen; Carlsruhe, thirteen; Vienna, twelve; Dresden, eleven; Munich, ten; Hanover, nine; Stuttgart, eight.

The volume concludes with a Memorial addressed to the German governments on the importance of additional encouragement being given by them, in the universities and elsewhere, to the study of the English language in particular, and of modern languages in general. The example of France is quoted, which has recently given to the living languages, by the zealous efforts of M. Duruy, the present Minister of Public Instruction, a fitting place in the studies of the empire; and the teachers of these languages are placed on an equality, in point of rank and emolument, with the teachers in other branches of instruction. From the example of France, an argument is drawn by the memorialists to urge the German government to follow in the same wise and liberal course.

* Jahrbuch der Deutschen Shakspeare-Gesellschaft im Auftrage des Vorstandes herausgegeben durch FRIEDRICH BODENSTEDT. Erster Jahrgang. 8vo. Berlin, 1865. G. Reimer. [This volume is dedicated to H. R. H. the Grand-Duchess Sophia of Saxony.]

J. MACRAY.

THE NORTHERN SCALDS.

(AN ENUMERATION OF THE PRINCIPAL NORTHERN SCALDS WITH THEIR POEMS IN ALPHABETICAL ORDER, AND THE APPROXIMATIVE EPOCHS IN WHICH THEY LIVED.)

Arinbiarnor-drapsa,* by Egil Skallagrimson; died between A.D. 995 and 998.

Banda-drapsa, by Eyolf Dadaskald; under Eirik Hakonarson, Jarl of Norway, during the early part of the eleventh century.

Belgo Kaga-drapsa, by Thormod Kolbrunarskald; under Olaf Tryggvason, King of Norway, which latter was killed A.D. 1000.

Bersoglis-visur, by Sighvath Thordson; under Olaf Tryggvason, and under Magnus the Good, Kings of Norway—the latter died in 1047.

Beru-drapsa, by Egil Skallagrimson; under Eirik Blodex, expelled in 936.

Biarka-mal, by Biarka hinn gamli, i. e. the old.

This is a battle song of which it is difficult to determine the precise epoch, and which is not quite entire. Northern historians state that the same scald had composed a poem on Ragnar Lodbrog (the Roland of northern romance), which they term Biarka-mal. It is probably the same composition as here mentioned.

Blagagla-drapsa, by Arnor Jarlaaskald; under Magnus the Good.

Bragar-bot, by Snorri Sturlasson; assassinated in 1241.

Bva-drapsa, by Thorkel Gislason; under Olaf Tryggvason.

* The Scaldis possessed a superabundance of terms for their compositions. A poem was termed in general dikt. When it had become popular, it received usually the name of forn-quædi; when it was of any considerable length, it was called brôgd or bragr; and stíck or visur, when it only included several strophes. Lyrical compositions were termed liod, saungr, or odr; and slagr when they required an accompaniment. The quida, or quædi, was either an elegy or a poem composed on some tragical event; the mansaungr (German Minnesang) was amorous, the spa was prophetic, and the galdr usually magical. When a poem was written in form of a dialogue, it was termed mal; when heroic or eulogistic, lof or brodr; when short, flochr; and drapsa, when it celebrated kings or heroes.

Eirika-drapsa, by Hallfreid Vanrædaskald; under Eirik Hakonarson, the end of the tenth century.

Eirika-drapsa Hakonarson, by Thord Kolbeinson; under Eirik Hakonarson.

This poem is also known by the name of Belgakaka-drapsa, and attributed to Thormod Kolbrunarskald.

Eiriks Kongs Goda Drapsa, by Markus Skeggiason; under Knut Helg, killed in 1086.

Another scald had the same name, Hialti Skiggiason. He composed, anno 990, a song against the Scandinavian gods, reported in the Njal-Saga. Elfar-visur, by Einar Skulason.

Other poems by this scald are cited in the Heimskringla, and by Torfæus in his History of Norway. He was born in Iceland about the year 1080, voyaged much, was ordained priest about 1137, and died probably 1161, after which we have no farther mention of him.

Erfis Drapsa Harald Hadræd, by Arnald Jarlaaskald; under Magnus the Good.

Erling-drapsa, by Sighvath Thordson; under Olaf Tryggvason.

Fyrst Stefla-mal, by Egil Skallagrimson; under Eirik Blodex.

Geisli, by Einar Skulason.

Getseki Heidrekskonungs: a political and moral poem, of which both the epoch and the author remained unascertained.

Glym-drapsa, by Thorbiorn Hornklofi.

This is an heroic poem on the victory of Hafursfiord, which Harald Harfagr gained against the inhabitants of the Orkneys, and by right of which he retained possession of these islands. The Fugarakinna has preserved several lines of another poem by the same scald, wherein he describes the Court of Harald.

Glælogns-quida, by Thorarin Loftunga; under Swein Ulfson, King of Denmark, who died in 1076.

Grafeldar-drapsa, by Glum Geirason; under Harald Grafeld, King of Norway, killed in the latter part of the tenth century.

Gramaga, author unknown.

Grotta-saungr, author unknown.

Gudmund Helga Drapsa, by Arnor Jonason; epoch unknown.

Hafgerdinga-drapsa, author and epoch unknown.

Hakonar-drapsa, by Guttorm Sindri; under Hakon the Good, killed in 963.

Hakonar-mal, by Eyvind Skaldaspildir; died in 963.

Hakonar-quida, by Sturl Thordeon; under Hakon Hakonarson, King of Norway, died in 1263.

Heleygia-tal, by Eyvind Skaldaspildir; under Hakon the Good.

Haralde-drapsa, by Thiodolf Arnason; under Harald Hadræd, King of Norway, killed in 1066.

Haralde Sigundason-visur, by Harald Hadræd.

King of Norway. Another King of Norway, Magnus Barefoot, was also a scald.

Hatta-lykill, by Snorri Skurlasson; under Hakon Hakonarson. This poem is also termed Nikorar-visur.

Hatta-lykill, by Rangnvalth; under Eirik Helg, King of Sweden—the latter killed in 1161. The poem is found in Ihre.

Höfud-laun, by Egil Skallagrimson.

Höfud-laun, by Thorarin Loftunga; under Knut the Good, King of Denmark.

Höstlaungr, by Thiodolf Hvinverski; under Thorleif Spake, Jarl of Denmark.

Hrafn-mal, by Sturli Thordson; under Hakon Hakonarson.

Hrafn-mal, by Thormod Trefilsson.

Hund, by Erpur Lutandi; under Biorn ad Hange, King of Sweden.

The assumed descent of this prince, from so mythical a person as Ludbrog, affords little evidence whereby to approximate his epoch: probably the early part of the tenth century.

Hus-drapa, by Ulf Uggason; under Olaf Tryggvason.

Jarla-nid, by Thorleif Jarlaskald; under Harald Hadrada.

Jansvikinga-drapa, by Biorn, Bishop of Orkney; died 1222.

Kalts-floekr, by Biorn Gullbrarskald.

Knuts Rika Drapa, by Ottar Swarti; under Knut Rik, King of Denmark; died 1036.

Knuts Rika Drapa, by Sighvath Skald; under Knut Rik.

Konar-visur, by Thorleif Jarlaskald; under Harald Hadrada.

Kraka-mal, author and epoch unknown. This is the well-known poem known in English as the death song of Regnar Lodbrog.

Lilja-lag: a poem in honour of the Virgin Mary, by Eystein Arngrimson; died in 1361.

Ljóða-lykill, by Lept Guttormsson: the commencement of the fifteenth century.

Magnus-drapa, by Arnor Jarlaskald; under Magnus the Good.

Magnus-drapa, by Biorn Kreppendi; under Magnus the Good.

Magnus-drapa, by Thorcel Hamarskald; under Magnus Barefoot.

Magnus-floekr, by Thiodolf Arnason; under Magnus the Good.

Merlins-spa, a translation of the prophecies of Merlin, by Guolang Leifson; died in 1219.

Nizar-visur, by Stein Herdisarson; under Harald Hadrada.

Olaf-drapa, by Harald Vandrædaskald; under Olaf Tryggvason.

Olaf-drapa, by Stein Herdisarson; under Olaf Kyr, King of Norway; died 1093.

Olaf-drapa Tuiskalda, by Hallarstein; under Olaf Tryggvason.

Rekstefia, by Hallarstein.

Rötha-drapa, by Thiodr Siareksson; under Olaf Tryggvason.

Sendibit, by Jorunna Skaldmær; under Haral Harafagr.

The Kristnisaga quotes the verses of another female skald.

Sigurdar-balkur, by Ivar Ingemundarson; under Eystein Magnusson, King of Norway.

Sigurdar-drapa, by Kormak Ogmundarson; under Harald (Græfeld, King of Norway.

Sonar Torrek, by Egil Skallagrimson.

Stuttfeldar-drapa, by Thorarin Loftunga.

Sweins-floekr, by Thorleik Fag; under Harald Hadrada.

Thoralfs-drapa, by Thord Siareksson; under Olaf Tryggvason.

Thors-drapa, by Eilif Gundrunarson; under Hakon Jarl of Hladnes.

Tug-drapa, by Thorarin Loftunga.

Uppreister-drapa, by Hallfred Vandrædaskald; under Olaf Tryggvason.

Vellekla, by Einar Skalaglam; under Hakon, Jarl of Hladnes.

Vestur-sarar-visur, by Sighvath Skald; under Swein Tiuskeg, King of Denmark, 1014.

Vikars-balkur, by Staffkath; identity doubtful.

Ynglingatal, by Thiodolf Hvinverski; under Thorleif Spake, Jarl of Denmark.

Besides these old poems, for the most part incomplete, there is a large quantity of more modern sacred and profane poetry, principally anonymous.

J. G. F.

11, Rue de Montyon, Paris.

BURIAL-PLACES OF ADAM AND EVE.—The Mohammedans generally believe that Adam was buried at Mecca between the Mukam, or Place of Abraham, and the Hujur-ul-Aswad, or the Black Stone, near where Imam Shafai is buried. North of the town of Jeddah, on the Red Sea, is a tomb with a circular top, which the Arabs assert to be the burial-place of Eve. In the Shajrat-ul-Atrak (Svo, 1830) it is written that Noah took up the bones of Adam and Eve, placed them in the ark, and afterwards buried them at Jerusalem. In the History of Egypt by Murtadi, translated by Monsieur Vattier and J. Davies (London, 1672), appears the following:—

"Immediately God commanded the four winds to bring together about him all he had ordered to be put into the ark, which they did. He took in at the first door the wild and tame beasts, the reptiles and the birds; at the second (which was that of the middle) he took in meat and drink, and the body of Adam, which was in a shrine. Then he entered himself at the highest door with his children, and those who had believed in him. Relations agree not about the number of the faithful who entered into the ark, most affirm they were forty men and forty women.

The angels brought to Noah Adam's shrine which was in the country of Tehama, which is the septentrional territory of Mecca."

H. C.

EPIGRAM ON THE LATE REV. D. C., who preached on the question—"What would St. Paul have lost by preaching to the Jews?"—

"What Paul had lost, I do not know,
In so perverse a nation;
But had he preached as ill as thou,
He'd lost—his congregation."

I am not aware that the above exists in print.
J. T. F.

THE FIRST COTTON MILL IN AMERICA.—

"We have heretofore given some account of the cotton mill erected in Beverly in 1788, which, it is claimed, was two years before a movement of the kind was made at Pawtucket, R. I.

"On this subject it is stated that, 'while on his tour through the country in 1789, Washington thought this mill of so much importance that he turned aside to visit it. The spinning jenny spun sixty threads at a time, and forty pounds of cotton were carded in a day! This was set down by a periodical of those times as a marvellous day's work. All the machinery was carried by man power, there being no water power there, and steam had not been introduced. The mill was afterwards converted into a Baptist church.'"

W. W.

Malta.

EASTERLY WINDS. — It has for some time been a matter of surprise to me, that so little notice has been taken of the very remarkable change which of late years has occurred in our prevalent winds, especially on the coast of Devon, Cornwall, &c. Within the last thirty or forty years easterly winds have prevailed where southwest was notoriously prevalent. The pilots at Dover, in 1846, told me that this was also the case in that locality, as might be seen by the register kept in the Harbour Master's Office. A striking and incontrovertible proof of the former prevalence of southwesterly winds along the coast of Devon and Cornwall, and perhaps further eastward is, that whoever will take the trouble to inspect the trees of a certain age growing near the shore, especially upon the more elevated and exposed situations, will find them all inclining to the northeast, and on many of them the southwest side entirely bare of branches. I remember one rather thick plantation, the property (I believe) of the Earl of Mount Edgcumbe, which had been protected by a stone wall of some six feet high, the shrubs had grown straight and strong as high as the wall, but from that point the southwest winds had bent their tops nearly an angle of forty-five degrees, the whole presenting a most curious and unnatural appearance. This year (1865), and for some years previous, the constancy of easterly winds has been remarkable, and the wind if it has ever changed it has been to the northwest, where, after remaining sometimes only twenty-six hours, at others for two or three days, it invariably goes back to the east, generally the southeast; in the meantime the northeast trade, once so constant, is said now to become variable and uncertain. I should add, as something uncommon, that during the late gales we generally had the wind to the southwest.

A. L. M.

Exeter.

JOSEPH-MARIE QUÉRARD.—By the last number of the Bulletin du bouquiniste of M. Auguste Aubry, dated 15 Décembre, I learn the death of Joseph-Marie Quérard—a name as familiar to the lovers of literature in England as in France. With regard to the extent and utility of his biographic and bibliographic productions I can scarcely point out his compeer; and it grieves me to reflect that so devoted a prompter to writers of all classes should leave the world with no other consolation than the certainty of future fame!

In the same number of the Bulletin we have some account of Quérard, and a review of his works, by M. Gustave Brunet—an interesting specimen of the comprehensive terseeness which marks his contributions; and a funeral oration, if I may so call it, by the ever-animated Paul Lacroix. From each of those articles I shall give an extract:—

"La science des livres vient de faire une perte qu'on est en droit de regarder comme irréparable; un des bibliographes les plus actifs, les plus dévoués que l'Europe ait jamais produits. Quérard vient d'être enlevé par une mort inattendue."—GUSTAVE BRUNET.

"Messieurs,

Ne nous séparons pas sans dire un dernier adieu à notre ami, à notre émule, à notre modèle, à notre admirable bibliographe Joseph-Marie Quérard.

Il était né bibliographe, il a vécu, il est mort bibliographe, sans avoir eu jamais d'autre passion, d'autre but, d'autre avenir, dans son existence érudite et laborieuse, que de contribuer le plus et le mieux possible, pour sa part, aux progrès de la bibliographie française. Parler de ses nombreux ouvrages, les apprécier, en faire l'éloge, c'est raconter sa vie."—PAUL LACROIX.

In the years 1855-6 Quérard produced two volumes entitled Le Quérard, now out of print, and at the close of the second volume announced other works of which some portion has appeared. The rest may be complete in manuscript.

BOLTON CORNEY.

APPROPRIATE MOTTO.—The ancient Cheshire family of the Corbets bear the beautiful and appropriate motto, "Deus pascit corvos"—God feeds the crows (corbies). But this is surpassed by the motto of the Cranes, another Cheshire family, "Qui pascit corvos, non obliviscitur grana"—He who feeds the crows, will not forget the cranes.

M. D.

NICK NAMES.—We have some strange specimens of nick-names in the county of Dorset. It constantly happens that a married female retains her maiden-name, which also descends to her children and their descendants; but this is also the case with nick-names; e. g. an old fiddler's wife is called "Polly Fiddler," and her children, whether married or single, and their children also, inherit the sobriquet. I knew a family named Morris, which for some unknown cause—perhaps because so many of their neighbours are named Drake—has borne the alias of Duck, as my registers show, for at least 120 years. Another family, a branch of the wide-spread family of Strickland, is always called "Thirty," the reason popularly alleged being, that a former member of it, speaking of a certain cask, said: "It will hold forty gallons, I warrant; aye, more than that, perhaps thirty!"

C. W. BINGHAM.

POETS LAUREATE.—The following morceau from The Weekly Journal, with Fresh Advice Foreign and Domestick, August 6, 1715, deserves the space it will occupy in your columns as a note:—

"This day 7 Night died Nathaniel Tate, Esq., who succeeded Mr. Shadwell as Poet Laureat: He alter'd some Plays of Shakespear, and Beaumont and Fletcher with Success; and among many other Translations did that of Fraxatorius, on the Venereal Disease, and assisted Mr. Brady in the new Version of the Psalm, which were authorised by the late King William, to be used in lieu of those of Sternhold and Hopkins. 'Tis believ'd Nicholas Row, Esq., will succeed him."

If a query were added,—Is the above serious or ironical? I should reply in words of nearly the same date, "Much might be said on both sides."

W. LEE.

Queries.

THE ALGUM-TREE AND PEACOCKS.—Will any of your correspondents (many of whom are, no doubt, acquainted with Sanscrit) kindly inform me if the words algum and peacock—which are mentioned amongst the various articles brought to Jerusalem, in the vessels of Solomon, from Ophir, see Third Book of Kings, chap. x. Douay V.; and Second of Chronicles, chap. ix., A. V.)—are of India or Sanscrit origin? I mean the Hebrew words translated in the Authorised Version by peacocks and algum-trees, or as the Douay Version translates the latter word, thyine-tree. Max Müller, in one of his Lectures on the Science of Language, observes, "that the inventory of the articles, brought in the vessels of Solomon, gives us the first definite knowledge of the venerable Sanscrit tongue, the parent language of modern civilisation." From this observation I conclude that some of the Hebrew words, descriptive of those articles, must be derived from the Sanscrit.

J. DALTON.

Norwich.

BASKERVILLE QUERY.—In Bohn's Lowndes's Bibliographer's Manual, the title of the following work is given, with the words "[by Baskerville]" in brackets. Is there any authority for this statement? The type looks like Baskerville's, but the paper and printing are very poor. Various works were printed "with Mr. Baskerville's types" during his life, but I do not know any authority for assigning this to his press:—

"The Life and Political Writings of John Wilkes Esq., Four Times elected Knight of the Shire for the County of Middlesex, and Alderman Elect of the Ward of Farringdon Without. Birmingham: Printed for J. Skelton & Co. MDCCCLXIX."

On p. 522 are the words, "End of the First Volume." What is the history of this work?

ESTR.

A COMMENTARY ON SERVIUS ON TERENCE.—Can any of your readers throw any light on the following passage, supposed to be an extract from a letter of Muretus; but which I cannot find in any of those published by Frotscher, in his edition of the Works of Muretus (Leipzig, 1834):—

"... non ille quidem ementitus Servius, cujus valde ineptie quedam in Terentium circumferuntur, sed vetus ille Servius, cujus in Terentium Commentarios nunquam adhuc excusos, magno studiosorum bono propediem editurus est Manutius."

That Manutius never did publish this work seems tolerably certain; but if it really existed in his days, may it not be lying buried in some library at Florence or elsewhere?

The only reference I have been able to discover to Servius, in connection with Terence, is the following, in Haenel's "Catalogi Librorum Manuscriptorum qui in Bibliothecis Gallie, Helvetie, Belgii, Brittanie M., Hispanie, Lusitanie asservantur" (Leipzig, 1830); at Basle, —

"Ex Servii Comm. in opera Terentii et Virgillii collectanea juxta Alphabeti seriem instituta, a Jac. N."

F. NOBISSE.

THE "DECAMERON" AND THE "BAHAR-DANUSH."—Reading lately the Decameron again, I was surprised to discover that several of the stories in it were the same as some in the Bahar-Danush, or, Garden of Knowledge, a Persian work, by a native of Delhi. The stories I particularly allude to are of so uncommon a character, that I cannot imagine they were invented by the two authors. I wish to ask, whether it is known in what year the Bahar-Danush was written? As that date will decide the question, whether Boccaccio was indebted to the Persian work for the plots of some of his novels, or whether his famous stories found their way to the East by verbal relation or otherwise? The following are English translations of the Persian work:—

"Bahar-Danush, translated from the Persian of Einaut Oallah by Scott, 1799."—Quaritch's Catalogue, 1851.

"Tales translated from the Persian of Inatulla of Delhi, 1768."

H. C.

DERIVATION OF "CONRAD."—What is the signification of the name Conrad? On the great-seals of Conrad I. and Conrad III. of Germany it is spelt "CHVONRADVS" and "CVONRADVS" respectively. M. D.

ESCALOP SHELLS WORN BY ROMAN SENATORS. In the proemium to his commentary on Littleton's Tenures, Lord Coke says, "the senators of Rome did wear escalop shells about their arms." I have looked into most of the reference books, and also into Juvenal, Varro, Macrobius, Pliny, Festus, &c., and into the early heraldic books, Gerard Legh, Bosville, Bolton, Gwillim, &c., but can find no authority to support such a statement. On the contrary, Suetonius (Cal. 52, Nero 30,) seems to consider the wearing a bracelet a token of effeminacy in men; except in the instances where they were given to soldiers as marks of honour. See particularly Pliny, Hist. Nat., xxxiii. 2, where he describes the gifts of torques, armillæ, and crowns; also Festus, sub voce.

Could any of your readers refer me to any passage relating such a custom? Coke is not likely to have made the statement without some foundation. I am the more anxious to know, as some Roman remains lately brought to light were ornamented with escalops. The shell itself, as its name (pecten Veneris) imports, was sacred to that deity. A. A.

Poets' Corner.

ADAM FRIER, Doctor of Medicine in Edinburgh and Francesse Cleland, eldest daughter of Captain, William Cleland, Usher to the Exchequer and Thesaurer, were married at Edinburgh, 1691 (Edinburgh Registers). Captain Cleland was, I believe, a brother of Cleland of that ilk; if not, he was certainly a near relation. Any information as to either of the above will confer a favour on me. I am more particularly anxious to know the date of the husband's death; and if there was any issue of the marriage. The former might possibly be ascertained from the Registers of the College of Physicians or Surgeons in Edinburgh, if extant at the date mentioned. F. M. S.

229, Clarendon Villas, Plumstead.

JOHN GAULE.—He was the author of Præctique Theories, or Votive Speculations, and several other curious works. The title-page of his Distractions, or the Holy Madnesse, says, "By John Gavle, Vtriusque olim Academiæ," London, 1620; but there is no mention of him in Wood's Athenæ Oxon. or Fasti. I shall be glad of any particulars relating to him. Perhaps your learned and obliging correspondents, the MESSRS. COOPER, can supply some information. CPL.

HYMN BY ARCHBISHOP WHATELY?—In the Memoirs of Archbishop Whately (vol. ii. p. 173), Fitzpatrick writes:—

"We know of but one attempt at versification on the part of Dr. Whately—an Epigram, stinging as well as ringing," &c.

But the Penny Post, 1865 (p. 79), attributes to the Archbishop the translation of the second verse of the hymn by Heinrich Albert, of which the first verse ("God, who madest earth and heaven," &c.) was done by Bishop Heber. What is the authority for this? GEO. E. FRERE.

HYMNS.—In Hymns and Sacred Poems, published by John and Charles Wesley (2nd edition, 1739, p. 79), is a hymn, "from the French," entitled "Renouncing all for Christ." The commencing line is:—

"Come Saviour Jesus from above."

It consists of ten verses, eight of which appear as Hymn 285 of the Hymn Book now in use among the Wesleys. The English version is ascribed to Dr. Byrom of Manchester, a well-known poet of the last century. Can you, or any of your readers, inform me who is the author of the original French, and where it is to be found?

Another hymn, in the publication of 1739, at p. 141, entitled "God our Portion," is "from the Spanish," and was probably translated by John Wesley himself. Its commencing line is—

"O God, my God, my all thou art."

It consists of ten stanzas, nine of which appear as Hymn 437 of the Wesleyan Hymn Book. I should be glad if any reader of "N. & Q." can say who is its author, and where the original Spanish hymn is to be found? I may add that both hymns, as they appear in the translation, are of great beauty. JOHN W. THOMAS.

Heywood.

OLD PAINTINGS.—1. A portrait on panel of a lady, without shade on the face (as Queen Elizabeth was painted). In the corner: "Ætatis sue 20, 26 Augusti, A° 1575." Can any one say who this date may possibly apply to?

2. An oil painting of a ship, with tricoloured Dutch colours. One of these with "vroom," apparently the name of the ship; another at the main, with a peacock; another at the mizen, with German arms on a flag-staff, and with serpent and dagger in bend. Date on the stern of the vessel, "MDCXVI." Some important people appear on board, and cliffs are shown in the distance. W. D.

"THE POOR MAN'S GRAVE."—Wanted to know where the verses on The Poor Man's Grave can be found in English and Welsh, and the tune.

GLWYNG.

PORTRAIT SAID TO BE OF RUBENS.—There is a portrait by Vandyke, a full-length, in a black Spanish suit, with gold chain, key, and Order of the Golden Fleece. The catalogue calls it Rubens; and it is very like his face, but he never had the Order of the Golden Fleece. Whose portrait is it? P. R.

STEWART, NAPOLEON'S SERVANT. — Can any of the readers of "N. & Q." give me any particulars of one Stewart, servant to Napoleon I.? The man was with the Emperor during his exile at St. Helena, and I shall be glad to know if any reference has been made to him anywhere in print, and where. S. R. T. MAYER.

Gloucester.

WEST. — Can any of your correspondents inform me whether the Rev. George West, who was rector of Stoke, co. Surrey, A.D. 1795, bore a coat of arms, and if so, what was it? W. D. H.

WESTMORELAND DIALECT. — Having recently purchased a small pamphlet of 44 pages, written in the "provincial Dialect of the Barony of Kendal," which I do not find noticed in Westmoreland and Cumberland Dialects, 8vo, J. R. Smith, 1830, I send a short notice of it, and shall be glad of any information respecting it. The title is —

"A Bran New Work by William de Worfat, containing a true Calendar of his Thoughts concerning good Neighbourhood. Now first printed from his MS. for the use of the Hamlet of Woodland. 12mo. London: Printed and sold by all the Booksellers in Great Britain." N. d.

The Prologue by William de Worfat Clerk (alias Orfat, alias Overthwaite), is dated Yule Tide, 1784,

"Showing his own Estate, and then addressed to sic North-country Folks as may be flown into the Autlands, or sped thro' these realms in divers occupations, and wahn length of time and wi' good leving may hev ameast forgotten their mother tongue."

The work consists of an address in two parts tending to enforce the social duties, and to expose unneighbourly actions. In Part 2 the author denounces severely habits of unchastity, an offence which has recently been charged against the lower orders residing in Westmoreland.

The Epilogue gives some singular cautions, one of which is —

"I beg of ye nivver carry aut a Nebbour to the Grave before he be stark dead; a body may be in bad fettle, in a fit or trance, and yet whick at heart."

Is anything known of the author? GLEPPIS.

Queries with Answers.

GEDDES' TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE. — Are the MSS. belonging to the Rev. Alexander Geddes, LL.D., in existence? His Prospectus was dated "Edinburgh," 1786; and his Proposals were issued in London in 1788. These Proposals were in sixteen pages 4to, and are said to be printed by J. Davis, Chancery Lane; and sold by R. Faulder, New Bond Street, and J. Johnson, St. Paul's Churchyard. The work was to be comprised in six volumes 4to: the publication of each volume not later than eighteen months after the preceding. This gives sufficient time for printing the work, but not for composing the matter as well. I conclude, therefore, that the whole was in manuscript. NEWINGTONIAN.

[From the following statement in the Advertisement prefixed to Dr. Geddes' New Translation of the Book of Psalms, 8vo, 1807, p. 8, it appears that the Doctor committed all his manuscripts to the flames. The editors of this posthumous work (John Disney and Charles Bale) inform us, that "immediately after his decease, Lord Petre desired us to examine the Doctor's papers. We did it as far as our avocations allowed; but, to our great surprise, we did not find a single manuscript line which related to his biblical pursuits. We signified this to his lordship, and recommended a further search might be made by some person who could bestow more time upon it: this was done, but was equally unsuccessful. From the Doctor's own declarations, and other circumstances, there is every reason to suppose he had made great progress in his work. It seems therefore probable, that in the view of his approaching dissolution, of which he had long been sensible, he had committed all his manuscripts to the flames."]

SURENHUSIUS, ETC. — Can any of your subscribers give me the real names of the following authors? — 1. Surenhusius; 2. Pricus, quoted very frequently by Bengel in his Gnomon; 3. Who again is Numenius, a Pythagorean philosopher, quoted by Eusebius in the Prep. Evang.? OXONIENSIS (2).

[1. William Surenhusius was a celebrated Hebrew and Greek professor in the university of Amsterdam, and is best known for his edition of the Mischna of the Jews, with notes, and a Latin version, A.D. 1698—1703, 3 vols. folio. It contains also the Commentaries of the Rabbins, Maimonides, and Bartonora. In 1713 he published a learned work in Latin, in which the passages of the Old Testament quoted in the New are vindicated and reconciled, according to the forms of quotation, and the several ways of interpreting the Scripture, used by the ancient Hebrew Theologians, Amst. 4to. The dates of his birth and death are not known.

2. Pricus, we take to be John Price, born of Welsh parents in London, A.D. 1600. He was educated at Westminster School, and Christ Church, Oxford, and retired to Florence, where he joined the Roman Church, and was there admitted Doctor of Civil Law. He held the appointment of keeper of the ducal cabinet of medals and antiquities, and subsequently became professor of Greek at Pisa. He was a learned critic, as is testified by his Commentaries on the New Testament, Paris, 1635, 4to, and Notes on Apulvius, Tergau, 1636, 8vo. He died in a convent at Rome in 1676.

3. Numenius, born at Apameia in Syria, was a Pythagorean-Platonic philosopher, highly esteemed by Plotinus and his school, as well as by Origen. Numenius is almost invariably designated as a Pythagorean, but his object was to trace the doctrines of Plato up to Pythagoras, and at the same time to show they were not at variance with the dogmas and mysteries of the Brahmins, Jews, Magi, and Egyptians. Vide Smith's Dict. of Greek and Roman Biography and Mythology, ii. 1213.]

"DON NIPPERY SEPTO."—I request an explanation of the following lines (whether intended for poetry or for prose, I know not) which a much-esteemed elderly gentlewoman was in the frequent habit of repeating to the young for their amusement, if not for their edification:—

"Rise up, Don Nippery Septo,
Out of your easy degree!
Put on your sounding crackers
And your down-treaders,
And come and see!
White-faced Simile

Has run up highcockalorum with igniferum on her back,
And without absolution we shall be all undone!"

INQUISITOR.

[The following explanation has been offered by a friend:—

"Rise up, Don Nippery Septo," (Rise up, Domine Præceptor),

"Out of your easy degree" (your bed).

"Put on your sounding crackers" (your breeches),

"And your down-treaders" (your slippers),

"And come and see!"

"White-faced Simile" (white-faced Semele, the house-cat),

"Has run up highcockalorum (upstairs, probably a spiral staircase is intended,) with igniferum (with a live coal) on her back,

"And without absolution (without water) we shall be all undone."]

SOLOMON AND ARISTOTLE.—The following curious passage occurs in Dean Stanley's Lectures on the Jewish Church (2nd Series, Lect. xxviii. p. 228. London, 1865):—

"When Alexander took Jerusalem, he captured the works of Solomon, and sent them to Aristotle, who thence derived all that was good in his philosophy," &c.

The Dean gives this statement as a Rabbinical tradition, and quotes for his authority Fabricius, Cod. Pseud. ii. 1019.

Query I. In what Rabbinical work is this tradition mentioned? 2nd. What is the title, in full, of the work of Fabricius, referred to as Cod. Pseud.? J. DALTON.

Norwich.

[1. The tradition is mentioned by Rabbi Abraham Zacuth, in his work entitled Juchasin, i. e. Liber Genealogicum: est Chronologia ab orbe condito usque ad A.D. 1500. Constantinæ, 4to, 1566, et Cracov. 4to, 1581. Conf. Tentzelii, Dialogus, A.D. 1689, p. 1216, et Jac. Thomasium, de Plagis, sect. 364; Theod. Hackspan, ad Lipmanni liber Nitsachon, p. 284, Norib. 4to, 1644. (2.) Fabricius's work is entitled Codex Pseudepigraphus Vete- ris Testamenti, collectus, castigatus, testimoniisque, censuris et animadversionibus illustratus; Accedit Josephi, veteris Christiani Scriptoris, Hypomnesticon, nunc primum in lucem editum; Gr. et Lat., cum notis. Editio secunda. 2 vols. 8vo, Hamburgi, 1728.]

EIKON BASILIKÆ.—The following lines were attributed to Sidney Walker:—

"Who wrote 'Who wrote Εἰκὼν Βασιλική?'"

I, said the Master of Trinity,

With my metaphysics and divinity,

I wrote 'Who wrote Εἰκὼν Βασιλική.'"

Was there any more of this?

J. H. L.

[We hope not. This epigram has been also ascribed to Abp. Whately; but we believe it was from the pen of Benjamin Hall Kennedy, the Head Master of the Shrewsbury School, who being, at the time Dr. Wordsworth's book appeared, a Fellow of St. John's, wrote it, and placed it on the screen at Trinity. Vide "N. & Q." 2nd S. iii. 301, 389, 417, where there is a different reading in the third line.]

"SHOULD HE UPBRAID."—Who is the author of the lines beginning "Should he upbraid," set to music, I think, by Bishop?

ALFRED AINGER.

[The music of this song is by Sir Henry Rowley Bishop. The words are slightly altered from a passage in Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew, Act II. Sc. 1, as follows:—

"Should he upbraid, I'll own that he prevail,
And sing as sweetly as a nightingale.
Say that he frown, I'll say his looks I view
As morning roses, newly dipt with dew.
Say he be mute, I'll answer with a smile,
And dance, and play, and wrinkled care beguile."]

GENRE.—What is the derivation, and what the precise meaning of the French word genre, as applied to pictures? O. W. BINGHAM.

[The French word genre is from the Latin genus, the ablative of genus, kind or race. In connection with painting, the term genre was formerly employed with reference to any particular style or school of art. More recently it has been applied to the painting of interiors, and also to the representation of the familiar scenery, animals, flowers, actions, &c. of ordinary life. The last meaning appears to be the most modern.]

Replied.

NOTES ON FLY-LEAVES.

(3rd S. viii. 328.)

The old poetical jotting supplied by HANNUSTRUDE will be found in a popular Scottish chap-book, entitled—

"The Whole Prophecies of Scotland, England, France, Ireland, and Denmark: prophesied by Thomas the Rhymer, Marvellous Merling, Bald, Berrington, Waldfere, Eltraine, Banester, and Sybilla. All agreeing in one; both in Latin Verse and in Scottish Meeter. Containing many Strange and Marvellous Matters not of before read or heard of."

The copy of this I quote is that in black-letter, 12mo, Edinburgh, J. Watson, 1718; but it is a book that dates as far back as 1606, being then "Printed at Edinburgh by Rob. Waldegrave;" which last was reprinted by the Bannatyne Club, in 1833, to furnish their members with a copy of a rare book, and at the same time exhibit a specimen of a successful imposture of a former day: which, until the Jacobite embers were entirely trodden out, maintained a kind of Gospel sanctity among the adherents to the Stuart dynasty—The Prophecies, in their opinion, being a perpetual well-spring of hope to their cause.

In the Grenville library, British Museum, there is a very coarse little edition (Edinburgh, 1714.) upon which the aristocratic proprietor has noted:—

"This copy belongs to an edition reprinted and industriously circulated among the partizans of the House of Stuart, previous to the Rebellion in 1715."

But we all know that The Prophecies did not successfully apply to restoration at that period. As the next "attempt" drew on, we find these vaticinations again coming abroad. I have The Prophecies, Edinburgh, 1742; they were again reprinted in the eventful year '45 at the same place, after which the people must have lost faith in them; and to give the "marvellous chronicle" its coup de grace, Sir David Dalrymple denounced the book, and castigated the credulous believers in those unmeaning distichs ascribed to Thomas the Rhymer. I have not Lord Hailes's book to turn to, but the reference is to his Remarks on the History of Scotland, Edinburgh, 1773; where the curious will, no doubt, find all they would desire regarding the work—its occult meanings, and its political influence: not, it would seem, always confined to the ignorant and superstitious of the population. The last time I know of the book being published in its entirety for "the million" (at least, the latest in my possession) is an edition, Falkirk, by Dan. Reid, 12mo, 1782: the title to which I partly quote to show how the people had been disappointed from time to time in their expectations founded on the drivellings of their favourite soothsayers:—

"The Prophecies, &c.: containing many Strange and Marvellous Matters which have happened, and will be known for time to come from the Year of our Lord 1622 to 1822. From 1622 to 1745, Good was expected. But from '45 to 1822, Ill was done, and Good neglected. To the four Corners of the World—

Asia, Africa, Ignorant and Leal,
Europe and America with broils will prevail."

My note, however, is but a bibliographical one: perhaps some other correspondent may tell us something of the contents. The Prophecies were undoubtedly highly popular with the people of Scotland. In this locality, in my juvenile days it was not unusual to hear the pithy sayings "Tammas the Rhymer," gathered out of a book; and I have a distinct recollection of a part of HERMENTRUDE's Fly-leaf,

"Betwyxt y^e Seton and y^e sey, sorow shall be wrought being applied by us to a strip of territory betwix the estates of Seaton and the sea in this neighbourhood; which we firmly believed had been hereafter would become, the scene of dool to Scotland."

Arbroath.

On a blank page in a copy of Byron's Cora was written the following:—

"On Wordsworth's Poems; (said to be written by Byron) Here lie the poems of W. W.,

There let them lie and ne'er trouble you, trouble you
J. E.

ENTRIES ON A FLY-LEAF: "DAFTER"—I have a copy of the "Book of Common Prayer," printed in 1602, on a blank leaf in which are the following entries, written in a remarkably good bold hand:

"Decem. y^e 27. 1705. Married Marey Hase."

"Sept. ye 23, 1706. My Dafter Marey Belder v borne."

"June y^e 9, 1708. My Dafter Elizabeth Belder v borne."

There are two other entries recording the birth of sons. I have carefully copied the orthography throughout.

These entries appear to furnish additional evidence that "dafter" was, until very recent times, the common pronunciation of the word daughter.
J. S.

"TWO PAIR" OR "TWO PAIRS."

(3rd S. viii. 230.)

Your answer to I. I. R. illustrates one among many curious points in English philology. So as I have seen, the philological relations of English language have been very inadequately investigated. The old practice of framing English and other grammars on what was called a classical model has had a very bad effect, the more particularly as the Latin forms, belonging to a comparatively poor language, do not meet the requirements of English. The difference of idiom in other Germanic languages has been an obstacle to our receiving much help from continental sources, and the close addiction to Sanscrit as a type canon, has very much narrowed the scope of philological appreciation.

You drew a practical distinction between "grammar" and idiom, for there is unfortunately a great distinction in English grammar, being a deduction to a great extent from foreign principles instead of being an illustration of our own idiom.

Your observation that a singular noun is formed with a plural number in the Semitic languages is not irrelevant. If for scientific purposes we have abandoned the practice of deriving English and Welsh roots from Hebrew words, there is no reason why we should refuse to avail ourselves of the analogies which are presented to us in the grammars of other languages however alien or remote.

As there are roots to be found which are of the greatest antiquity, and may almost be called permanent, so there are grammatical forms of the like character. On the other hand, as there are roots which are communicated to alien languages, and adopted by them, so there are grammatical forms which are so transmitted. These are the explanations of some phenomena, but there are cases apparently of simple analogy of grammatical form, and where these occur, the explanation of one will best be sought in the other analogue.

As an example of the way in which alien grammatical forms may influence another language, the vulgar Armenian may be taken. This consists largely of Turkish roots worked with Armenian grammar, but having many Turkish grammatical forms, of which one example is of the class cited by you. The Romic idiom is largely communicated to all the languages spoken in the Levant, constituting the Levantine dialects.

This hybridism in philology has as yet been very little studied, nor shall we reap much fruit till our studies become more catholic. It is, however, a branch of investigation which promises much. It is thus very probably that we shall in the end determine the strata constituting the Armenian, the Ossetiman, the Albanian, &c. With regard to the two former, I believe the Caucasus-Tibetan languages will be found to have played a great part. The relations of the Armenian and Georgian have seemingly been quite misunderstood.

Just in the same way as in Mr. Vamberg's hands the Jaghatai is made to illustrate the relations of the Magyar, so will the great families of languages be found to illustrate their political history. Thus the Mongol, the Manchoo, and the Turkish show evidences of a close connexion. While the most familiar roots remain permanent in each language, many others are interchanged, and for sufficient causes. Thus, in the Persian, Turkish, and Hindostanee, we naturally find a community of war terms; but in Turkish and in Magyar, as we should have learned had Mr. Vamberg expanded his researches, the community is more particularly of pastoral and agricultural terms, of which he has only given a few examples, but of which I have seen many in words to be found only among the peasantry.

Coming to cases of analogy, and their application to the example cited by you, I have found a great analogy between Turkish grammar and English idiomatic grammar. I use the term analogy because it does not seem desirable to suggest any closer relationship. The two languages agree not only in many common practices of avoiding artificial genders, of putting adjectives before nouns and others, but in many more intimate practices, and particularly in that distinction of the verb between "I write" and "I am writing," which, in Turkish as with us, is preserved throughout the conjugation.

One idiom in Turkish is that in question of using a plural number with a singular noun, and likewise it extends to another practice applying to the case in point, but not distinguished by you. There is a practice of using some word after a number expressive of bit, piece, head, person. A Turk says not only give me "a bit of bread," or "a piece of bread," but two, three, and so on; but he always says "two bit of bread," "two piece of bread," as we say twelve head of cattle, twelve sail of the line. The Turk is as choice in these determinatives as we are, but more precise in their application; and he would decidedly say two pair of trousers, as he says just five foot, six foot six.

The practice of saying two hundred, three hundred, three thousand, four thousand, and not hundreds and thousands, is another evidence of the idiomatic law in English.

On another disputed point, "John Smith his book," the Turkish practice may be worth noting. Turkish has its genitive termination corresponding to our s, but in certain cases his, or rather a common termination, which we will call its, is used, as there is no distinction of gender. Thus the form runs, "the horse its colt," "house its door," "cotton its seed," "iron its way," where we now commonly use a compound word for house-door, cotton-seed, railway. In Turkish you can, however, say "the book of John Smith," or "John Smith its book," and speaking of the book belonging to him, you say his book. The form its book is perfectly distinct from his or their book.

It is to be observed that the plural is used in Turkish as in other languages with nouns, except when numbers are used, when the noun is always singular. There is, however, considerable latitude in the concord between the noun and verb.

Captain Grose in the last century published some observations on the cockney dialect, which are worthy of more attention than they have received in illustration of the idiom of the English language.

HYDE CLARK.

Smyrna, Asia Minor.

HUMAN SKIN TANNED.

(2nd S. ii. 68, &c.; 3rd S. viii. 463.)

On referring to the notices of this subject, in 2nd S. ii. 68, &c., I was surprised to find no mention of the curious instance of "human leather" preserved in the remains of a number of bodies at Bordeaux. Happening to be there on the 22nd of September last, I was attracted to the church of St. Michael by the following paragraph in Murray's Guide-Book:—

"Near the west end stands the elegant detached hexagonal belfry. In the vault beneath it are shown from forty to fifty human bodies. They were formerly buried in the churchyard which surrounded the belfry; but shortly before the Revolution the churchyard was closed, and the bodies dug up. The bones and decayed bodies are in a vault beneath; but those shown were preserved by the dry and antiseptic qualities of the earth, until they are now like leather or salt fish—a disgusting sight."—Handbook for France, p. 263, edit. 1861.

The room in which these bodies are kept is a dry airy chamber on the ground floor of the tower, and is entered through the shop of a shoemaker, who exhibits them by the aid of a candle fastened to the end of a long stick. He states that they are sixty-three in number. They are ranged upright, round the sides of the room. The skins are like tough leather, which the guide evidences by poking them goodnaturedly in the ribs with the end of the candlestick. One unfortunate died with his tongue protruding, and this is duly wagged by the aid of the stick. So remarkably well are they preserved, that the expression of face at the time of death is still easily discernible. Some have a quiet peaceful look, and others all the distortions which mark a violent death. On several, the clothes in which they were buried are still perfect: the most remarkable of these is a priest, buried in his ecclesiastical vestments, which are easily distinguished the one from the other. On one the lace of the shroud is still entire. A family of five, who died from eating mushrooms (at least so says the shoemaker), exhibit traces of having died in great agony, the faces being horribly distorted. The body of a boy, said to have been buried alive, bears evident testimony to the truth of the story. The cut of a rapier is seen in the body of a man said to have been killed in a duel. The last, and most noteworthy case I shall mention, is that of a woman who died of cancer in the left breast, which has left a large hole. If I remember rightly, I was told that the entrails were as much like leather as the exterior skin. All the bodies are dry and stiff, and I should think that the skin would do very well to bind a book, or for any purpose for which leather of the softer kinds is required. There is no unpleasant or earthy smell, the room being dry and airy.

GEORGE W. MARSHALL.

In the possession of the well-known Edinburgh physician, Dr. Littlejohn, I have seen a portion of the skin, dried, of the celebrated political economist Jeremy Bentham, who, I have been informed, had his body for the purposes of dissection. It would be of interest if some of your correspondents could authenticate this report, or cite instances of similar unusual willing of the body after death.

W. C. J.

SEALS OF THE EMPERORS OF GERMANY.

(3rd S. viii. 381, 443.)

I hope that MR. WOODWARD will oblige the heraldic readers of "N. & Q." with any information disclosed by the imperial seals, which he may think of sufficient importance to deserve printing. Probably these seals may furnish answers to a good many questions.

Petrassancta (Tessera Gentilitia, pp. 400, 401), says:—

"Aquila, et biceps, et furva, ostro diademata rostrata et crurita, in parmula auro conspersa, tessera est semper augusta Imperii Romani. Diadema illi ex vittâ, seu leiola coloris punicea circumponitur singulariter; aquilæ alie coronâ ordinariâ solent redimiri Marcus Gilbertus Devarennius arbitratur etiam Othone aquilam cum hoc schenmate extulisse princeps, quando translatus ad eos Imperium est, et in Germaniam ex Galliâ immigravit. Nam antea actis temporibus sit (Parte 2, de Aquilâ) Cæsares omnes, Caroli Magni successores, nos esse aquilâ aureâ bicipite, cum rostris cruribus a diademate coloris punicea, in cyaneâ parmula: quæ tamen aquila à pectore gestaret scutulum GALLICUM: sicut jam in pectore item gestare solet scutulum AUSTRIACUM."

The best summings up of the state of the case to which I have access are given by Moreri, as by Ginanni in his L'arte del blasone, Venice, 1766 under the word "Aquila." I can only ask for space to give part of the passage of Ginanni. He refers to the two-headed eagle on the shield of a soldier on the Column of Trajan. Petrassancta figures this shield. But, for reasons which I need not enter upon now, this eagle seems to prove nothing to our present purpose. After quoting the opinion that Constantine the Great gave the double-headed eagle after founding Constantinople, he says;—

"Ciò conferma Oronce Fine di Brianville, nel Giornale d'arme, soggiungendo che Costantino moltiplicò il casco all'aquila Romana, per additare in lui solo gl'Imperi oriente e d'occidente; e che poscia i di lui figliuoli e gli altri Imperadori che in Costantinopoli dominarono, ebbero similmente l'aquila bicipite d'oro in campo rosso."

Moreri, quoting Menestrier's Origine des Armoiries, which I have not at hand, says:—

"Le P. Menestrier dit que les Empereurs d'Orient ont été les premiers qui ont porté l'aigle à deux têtes, et que l'origine en est la même que celle des croix doubles que l'on voit dans leurs Monnoyes Il y a apparence qu'ils firent la même chose à l'égard de l'aigle de leurs armoiries, et qu'ils en joignirent deux en une, ou lui donnèrent deux têtes: ce que les Empereurs d'Occident ont imité."

tèrent quelque tems après. Cuspinien dit que ce n'est pas une aigle seule a deux têtes, mais deux aigles dont l'un couvre l'autre de ses ailes étendues."

Nisbet, in the second volume of his System of Heraldry, part 3, says:—

"There are many ancient families in Germany who marshal with their own bearings the imperial eagle by special concession from the Emperor. But, it is to be observed, that these eagles granted by the Emperor have but one head; and lawyers tell us that the Emperor and other sovereign princes cannot grant their entire Imperial ensigns to any person; as John Limneus, 'Licet ab Imperatore sit insignia concedendi potestas, illa tamen limitata, ne alicui integram aquilam maxime vero Imperialem, concedant.'"

These passages seem worth attention. D. P.
Stuarts Lodge, Malvern Wells.

The eagle granted to the members of the Italian Princely House of Giustiniani by Sigismund, Emperor of Germany, as an imperial augmentation to their coat of arms, was single-headed, as it can be clearly seen represented on the coins which they issued during their reign in the Isle of Chio.

RHODOCANAKIS.

Higher Broughton.

WILLS OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (3rd S. viii. 465.)—Many thanks to H. T. E. for his hint. The testator's name is Baldwin Turner of Halburton, Tiverton, or the neighbourhood. Date about 1600. Wanted to know his son's name, the parish register being destroyed. DEVONIENSIS.

CROSS WRITING (3rd S. viii. 453.)—Cross writing, so annoying to a recipient of letters, arose, we may safely conclude, from three causes. First, from the high rates of postage; secondly, from a desire to economise paper, when it was much dearer than it is at present. Thirdly, and principally, from a wish to add just a few lines, but without any intention of going further. Thus correspondents are often led on to cross a page or two, or the whole of their paper. I have even seen letters from abroad, which, to save postage, were not only crossed throughout, but again written over from corner to corner. Others are crossed with red or blue ink, to show some compassion for the luckless reader. But whatever justification might have been attempted for crossing letters some years ago, the practice in these days of cheap paper and postage, is clearly inexcusable. I should certainly have joined Cobbett in beseeching any correspondent not to write "across his writing," but to take at once a fresh sheet.

F. C. H.

The practice of "crossing a letter" was doubtless caused by the high rates of postage forty or fifty years ago, when an additional sheet produced a double rate of the very heavy charges for transmission, and writers were naturally anxious to get as much as possible on a single sheet. My own experience is, that ladies were the chief sinners in this "crossing of letters"—doubtless on account of their elaborate letters—for, as Byron says,—

"The earth has nothing like a she-epistle,
And hardly heaven, because it never ends."

ESTE.

PERPLEXED RELATIONSHIP (3rd S. viii. 190.)—Two widow ladies, not related, have each a son. When grown up, each marries the other's son, and has a family of sons and daughters. How many degrees of relationship will there be among them all?

A. A.

Posts' Corner.

WINTHROP PEDIGREE (3rd S. viii. 455.)—A. O. V. P. will find many pedigrees relating to the Winthrop family in the pedigrees annexed to "the Sutton Dudleys of England, and the Dudleys of Massachusetts, in New England," into which family they intermarried.

SAMUEL SHAW.

Andover.

Your correspondent, A. O. V. P., will find a pedigree of the family of Winthrop in Drake's History of Boston, U.S.A. Boston, 1856, p. 72. Consult also, Epitaphs from Copp's Hill Burying Ground, Boston, 1851, 12mo; and Memorials of the Dead in Boston, 1853, 8vo.

W. P.

SEE OF EVREUX (3rd S. viii. 453.)—Roger de Hoveden and Carte were correct in speaking of Evreux as an episcopal see. It was subject to the archbishop of Rouen. See list of French Archbishops, with the Bishopricks classed in Provinces, in Beyerlinck (Laur.) Magnum Theatrum Vite Humane, edit. 1678, t. iii. pp. 118, 119.

EDWARD PEAOCK.

"EVREUX, Ville de France, dans la Haute Normandie, avec Evêché suffragant de l'Archevêché de Rouen."—Dict. Geogr. par Bruzen La Martinière.

'Alaric.

Dublin.

Evreux is not an archbishopric, but the see of a bishop, suffragan of the archbishop of Rouen.

F. C. H.

ORIGIN OF THE TERMS WHIG AND TORY (3rd S. viii. 460.)—

"Whoever has a true value for Church and State, should avoid the extremes of Whig for the sake of the former; and the extremes of Tory on account of the latter."—SWIFT.

A very wise saying, Mr. Editor. N. H. H.
Netherton Hall, Hamilton.

PENANCE FOR INCONTINENCE (3rd S. viii. 474.)—The High Commission assumed all the powers of the ecclesiastical courts, and a great deal more; "they punished incest, adultery, fornication, with all misbehaviours and disorders in marriage." We do not find any account of enjoined penance in the very few records of the High Commission, temp. Elizabeth and James; but in the time of Charles I. there are the cases of Sir Ralph Ashton at Whalley, the Viscountess Purbeck, &c. Lake mentions that in 1640 one of the blessings conferred by the Parliament, was said to be, the taking away of the High Commission, "for that a man could not meddle with a wench but he must be questioned." In the proceedings, therefore, of the High Commission in the Parish Register and in the Bishop's Registry, must P. F. look for any Shropshire penance.

JOHN S. BURN.

The Grove, Henley.

P. F. will find ample illustrations of this in the following work:—

"Precedents and Proceedings in Criminal Causes from 1475 to 1640, from the Act-books of Ecclesiastical Courts in the Diocese of London, illustrative of the Discipline of the Church of England; with an Introductory Essay. By Archdeacon Hale. Royal 8vo. London, 1847."

Evidences of such sentences having been carried out in Shropshire must be sought for in the Act-books of the Chancellor of the Diocese in the Bishop's Registry.

E. V.

"TATTERING A KIP" (3rd S. viii. 415, 483.)—M.'s explanation, though correct, is not satisfactory. It was an Irish, or rather a Dublin, phrase (I would hardly call it slang) for smashing the windows of a brothel, of which the popular name in Dublin was kip (keep?). The smashers were the collegians, as the 'prentices used to be in London. This is one proof among many of how completely Irish is that delightful mass of absurdities, The Vicar of Wakefield, and an amusing essay might be written on the subject, including The Deserted Village, which is also quite Irish. Like Lord Macaulay, I think Goldsmith has been greatly overrated. We have, by the way, more than one elaborate biography of him, while the far greater Henry Fielding's name is still left to suffer under the aspersions of his friend Murphy. I am happy to be able to announce that that reproach of our literature is now likely to be removed, as the materials requisite for his vindication—and there are such—are in the hands of one of our most distinguished biographers.

X.

MORISON'S "SCOTTISH POETS" (3rd S. viii. 392.)—Some years ago I made inquiry at Perth if there had been any successor to Morison in his projected publication, but without success. Attempts have been made by other publishers to carry out the same project as that of Morison. In 1851 a pretty edition of The Gentle Shepherd was issued by Messrs. Black of Edinburgh, with an announcement that it was proposed to be the commencement of a series of republications of other works in the Scottish language, to correspond with

The Gentle Shepherd in shape and size. I was aware that such a series has appeared, and I understand that the taste of the day for Scottish works is being revived, and it is probable that if a list of them were as complete as subscribers could be obtained for the whole or for separate volumes at least. As to The Bruidies of the Scottish Poets, in 1823, published in Glasgow in 1823, by Richard and Co., a neat work in one volume with a vignette by Lizars, representing a harp and a portrait in the frame of Walter Scott, to which it was dedicated. In the advertisement this was stated to be a specimen of a series of poets from the era of Thomas the Rhymer to the present time. I was for many years out of the way of obtaining any more of Griffin's work, and I do not know if it ever met with the encouragement that it deserved. The old Scottish language is little known in modern times, that every one should have its separate glossary, unless it is in their possession at least a copy of the octavo edition of Jamieson's Scottish Dictionary.

"DURANCE VILE" (3rd S. viii. 456.)—On a time, when I was more poetic or romantically occupied than I am now, or less mindful of the value of time, I read Spenser's Faerie Queene through, from beginning to end. I imagine that very few readers who can say this. Even to the best of my recollection, the expression "durance vile" occurs in that poem perhaps more than once. I have an impression that it is sometimes written vild or ryld. I am sorry I cannot now give W. S. J. chapter and verse. But as he appears to be as poetic as I once, perhaps he will amuse himself with it out, now that I have put him on the track.

P. HURDIS.

This phrase occurs in a jeu d'esprit, which I quote from memory, and which dates at least in the last quarter of the last century:—

"As late a member, drunk with wine,
And swelling wondrous big,
Thinking with eloquence to shine,
He cursed the Speaker's wig.
"But soon he found the little man
Must not be held in scorn;
In durance vile and heavy ban
He lay from night to morn.
"When emptier of punch and wine,
And fuller of good sense,
He owned the greatness of his crime,
And asked pardon for the offence."

THE FIRST DUKE OF GLOUCESTER AND ST. PERRY (3rd S. viii. 415.)—In 1832 King IV. called out of abeyance the barony of St. PERRY in favour of Robert Wilson, Esq., of Didlington, and Ashwellthorpe, co. Norfolk, as eldest — Stephen Penny being the youngest. It was necessary to prove the pedigree, and the family root was traced to Thomas of Woodstock, son of Edward III. A paper detailing the pedigree was printed in 1832 or 1833 by Eyre and Spottiswoode, or the king's printers for the time being, and this would doubtless give G. P. all the information he requires.

Stephen Penny is noticed in the introduction to Burke's Vicissitudes of Families (First Series.) Although called sexton, he was not a gravedigger, but officiated as assistant clerk. He died in January, 1837, and was interred in St. George's burying-ground, Bayswater Road, leaving a son and two daughters.

ROBERT FIELD.

33, Lyme Street, Camden Road, N. W.

STRANGE SHIP, ETC. (3rd S. viii. 437.)—

"Strange ship! upon a marvellous sea,
Without a helm or compass driven,
Fraught with a wondrous company,
And lonely as the moon in heaven."

The above lines were written by Mrs. Alexander in the first part of her Poems on Subjects in the Old Testament, published by Joseph Masters, Aldersgate Street and New Bond Street. The verse quoted is in the sixth poem, entitled "The Ark." M. A. B.

CHARADE (2nd S. xi. 449; xii. 35.)—Turning over the leaves of Borrow's Bible in Spain, the other day, I was much surprised to find that the mysterious lines, which form the subject of C. T.'s query, were sung in hearing of the author by his acquaintance Martin of Rivadeo. The version given by Mr. Borrow (c. xxxii. p. 195) differs, but not materially, from that furnished by your correspondent:—

"A handless man a letter did write,
The dumb dictated it word for word.
The person who read it had lost his sight,
And deaf was he who listened and heard."

The statement that the lines are "by the principal of a Cambridge College," can scarcely be correct. The quasi solution of DAVUS must be placed out of court, and we must wait patiently until some one can supply us with the Spanish original: and, as I suspect, show us that the charade has lost its point in the process of translation.

ST. SWITHIN.

"AMICUS PLATO," ETC. (3rd S. viii. 441.)—In my contribution under the above heading I inadvertently omitted the following:—The little master was wont himself to tell with great glee the tale of the mistake made by the footman at an evening party he and Mrs. — went to during their absence from Oxford, in the long vacation. It should be mentioned that Mrs. — was a Phya in height if not in beauty, and that she boasted corresponding breadth of person. The dignitary directed the footman to announce "the Master of Baliol and Mrs. —;" but so completely was the little man overshadowed by his wife, that "Jeames," not acquainted with the term "Master" in that sense, accommodated what he heard to what he saw, and bawled out with a stentorian voice, "Mrs. — and Master Bailey!" "And, Mr. —," the little Master invariably added, "the domestic acted not without high authority. He followed the example set by him of 'the olive-grove of Academe,' in couching his lance against 'blind Mæonides.' (He never failed to draw attention to the obscure pun.) Indeed, the Mercurius of the drawing-room seemed to me to have attempted, and that successfully, to 'unsphere the spirit of Plato' in his own person. For the great disciple of him who called down Philosophy from heaven observes, in the valuable treatise 'De Republica,' ὅτι πρό γε τῆς ἀληθείας τιμητέος ἄνθρωπος—a man should not be preferred in honour to Truth." (De Rep. lib. x. cap. i. p. 595 b.) ἰερωνόμου βίβλος.

POYLE ARMS (3rd S. viii. 426, 462.)—MR. H. M. VANE states that the coat of John De la Poyle of Hampton Poyle, Esq., was Gules, a saltire argent within a bordure of the second charged with eight hurts, on the authority of Harl. MS. 2067, fo. 82. Assuming that the coats of arms tricked in the margins of this volume were done by Robert Glover, Somerset Herald, the compiler of the book, the attribution may be accepted as sufficiently proved. There is, however, equally strong evidence that the family of De la Poyle bore Argent, a saltire gules within a bordure sable bezantée:—1. These arms were to be seen in stained glass in the north window of the chancel of the church of Hampton Poyle soon after the Reformation. Wood MSS. Mus. Ashmol. E. i. f. 214, as quoted by Sir Henry Ellis in his excellent account of Hampton Poyle, in Gent. Mag. for 1806, p. 525. 2. These arms fill the second of the four quarters in the shield of John Gaynesford of Idbury, as recorded by Richard Lee, Portcullis, in the Visitation of Oxfordshire, 1574. (See the original in Lansd. MS. 880, f. 18.) 3. In Harl. MS. 1171, f. 80, in the shield of six coats which accompanies the descent of Burbage from Grene and Warner, the arms of De la Poyle, thus tinctured, appear in the fourth quarter; those of Grene and Warner being in the second and third.

B. W. GREENFIELD.

Southampton.

BIOCHIMO ON CHESS (3rd S. viii. 436.)—The old book on chess which your correspondent has acquired, is Francis Beale's translation and first edition of the famous chess worthy, Greco, with whose name and repute R. H. M. is doubtless familiar. This work of Greco's was originally written in Italian, and was entitled Trattato del nobilissimo e militare esercizio del Scacchi. It seems, however, according to the Catalogue of Chess Books in Walker's Art of Chess Play, London, 1846, p. 354, never to have been published in that language, but to have appeared first in an English dress, a fact which may also be gathered from the preface of the book itself.

Greco's Christian name was Gioachino, which, either from some obscurity in the MS. or blunder on the part of the translator, was transmuted on the title-page into Biochino; but the reason of the total omission of the author's surname, Greco, from his own book, is not so evident. This work was first published in England by Henry Herringman, in 1654. The first French edition appeared in 1669, and in it the author is correctly designated. It is intitled, Le jeu des Echecs, traduit de l'Italien de Gioachino Greco, Calabrois. Paris, Nic. Pempigne, 1669 and 1726. The volume passed through three subsequent French editions. Twiss, in his Chess Anecdotes, London, 1787, p. 75, endorses Beale's mistake regarding the title of this book.

H. A. KENNEDY.

Gay Street, Bath.

BURIAL OF SIR WILLIAM STANLEY (3rd S. viii. 264, 445.)—If D. P. will turn to the excellent Memoir prefixed by Mr. Heywood to Cardinal Allen's Defence of the Surrender of Deventer, published by the Chetham Society, p. lviii, he will find an account of the burial of Sir W. Stanley in "Our Lady's Church" at Mechlin, and the ceremonies attending it. It will be found in Harl. MSS. 2119 and 2120. The inscription on Lady Stanley's grave-stone (as given in p. 445 by D. P.) varies only in three literal minutiae from the writer's transcript, taken in 1840. Perhaps the name Roland Garett (p. 445) is an error for Roland York. In Metran's Belgii Historia Universalis, pp. 429, 430, are passages marginally entitled "Willielmi Stanleii Vita et Mores," followed by Rolandi Yorkii Vita et Mores, mentioning his betrayal at Zutphen, and adding, "aliquamdiu infamis ac contemptus habet, post vero, vitam misere finivit." This fixes the date of York's decease as being before 1597. The date "Ubiis, 1597, Calend. 7," being affixed to the Preface. No date appears in the title-page. Three editions are mentioned in the Catalogue of the British Museum, and the first, without date, is probably the same as that in the writer's library.

LANCASTRIENSIS.

RHYMING ALPHABET (3rd S. viii. 437.)—I think A. J. A. will find a rhyming alphabet very similar to the one he is in search of, if not the one, in the Medical Student, by Arthur, the brother of the late Albert Smith. I have not the book at hand.

K. R. C.

TILSON'S LINCOLNSHIRE AND WARWICKSHIRE PEDIGREES (3rd S. viii. 437.)—This manuscript volume, in folio, 1671, formerly belonging to Walton the Herald, and afterwards to Horace Walpole, is in Lord Derby's library. Knowles. I compiler's name is spelt Tylston. F. R. I.

BASIL (3rd S. viii. 420.)—Basil, or Basil, is a term for that part of a ring which embraces a stone or jewel—the setting, in fact.

W. J. BERNHARD SMITH

Temple.

"MEMOIRS OF SCOTLAND," 1714 (3rd S. viii. 112, 175)—String on to the numerous proofs the authorship of this work, the following paragraph from the Weekly Journal of August 1715. It has several recommendations: it is sh contemporaneous, and of northern origin:—

"Letters from Scotland bring advice, that the Es Marr is in that kingdom; and that three Scotch k and one commoner, viz., Mr. L—khart, author of the moirs of Scotland, are confined in the Castle of Edinbu on suspicion of being in the interest of the Pretender.

W. L.

ZLAD (3rd S. viii. 452.)—It was refreshing Gloucestershire man to read so amusing and a rate a sentence of his own vernacular tongue. may be, I think, very safely concluded that word zlad is intended for slade, a long flat sh ground. It follows the analogy of slade, whi Gloucestershire man would call a zlat. F. C.

I should be inclined to think that this was c another and not very distinct form of slade, slait. These words are often interpreted by glossarists as meaning a valley. In Somersetsh however, I have frequently heard them applie a bare flat space on the tops of the hills: so they may probably describe a sheep-run, whi situated on the hills of in the dales.

C. W. BIXEN

The term slad, or slade, from a Saxon word nifying a land-slip, is applied to several plac (Gloucestershire situated on the slopes of the. At the present moment, however, I can ca mind only two instances, one north-west o village of Miserdine, the other between Pains and Stroud. In conclusion I may add, that is but the mode of pronunciation one would e: to meet with amongst the "unletter'd hind id genus omne, throughout the county. J. W Painswick.

PEACOCKS' FEATHERS (3rd S. viii. 332.) answer to IGNORAMUS, who asks—"Can an inform me the origin of the theory, that the session of peacocks' feathers brings ill luck t owner?" I would reply that, possibly, he find a solution to his difficulty in Mr. Palgr recent work on Central and Eastern Arabia (v p. 286); where the learned traveller inform that, according to Mahometan tradition, the cock opened the wicket of Paradise to admi Devil, and received a very ample share of Devil's own punishment. May not the Evil Eye have something to do with it? JAMES TOD.

Edinburgh.

THE HIGHWAYMEN OF STANGATE HOLE (3rd S. viii. 421.)—I think I need scarcely remind CUTHBERT BEDE, who mentions a gibbet near Alconbury as the last in Huntingdonshire, on the authority of an old man with whom he has been conversing, that the culprit "Gervase Matcham," is quite a notorious character.

Sir Walter Scott, in the first instance, tells the singular story of the discovery of a murder which, by his own confession, Matcham had committed years before, in his Letters on Demonology and Witchcraft. And, again, it forms the subject of one of the most striking of the Ingoldsby Legends; namely, the "Dead Drummer of Salisbury Plain."

Can CUTHBERT BEDE inform me whether the beautiful epitaph is still in existence in the churchyard of Alconbury?—

"Why should this earth delight us so?

Why should we fix our eyes

On these low grounds where sorrows grow,

And every pleasure dies?"

It is said to have been there on the authority of the Arundines Cami, in which there is a Latin rendering of it. OXONIENSIS.

"THE GENIUS OF IRELAND" (3rd S. viii. 371.) ABHBA may be glad to be informed, if not aware of it, that John M'Aulay, M.R.I.A., one of Henry Grattan's early friends, and author of a Monody on the Death of Lady Arabella Denny, was the author of The Genius of Ireland, a Poem, 8vo, London, 1785. This perhaps is the publication about which he inquired. T. C.

"TRACTATUS TRES," ETC. (3rd S. viii. 303.)—I wish to mention in reply to ABHBA, that Archdeacon Cotton, in his Fasti Ecclesie Hibernice, vol. v. p. 88, includes this pamphlet (12mo, Stuttgart, 1849), amongst the "works partly written" by the late Archbishop Whately; and I am sure he had good reason for doing so. T. C.

SIR JOHN DAVIES (3rd S. viii. 250.)—There is a slight misprint in my communication in "N. & Q." of the 25th November. The motto of the family of Davies of Clonshanville, co. Mayo, is "Sustenta la Drechura," not Duchura. It means, I believe, "Maintain the Right."

I have a collection of more than 100 distinct coats of arms of the families of Davies, Davys, and Davis in trick, with some account, more or less, of the different families. If any member of these families will send me the heraldic description of his arms for my collection, I will feel much obliged. I need hardly say that I have already all those given in Guillim, Edmonton [Edmondson?], Berry, and Burke. FRANCIS ROBERT DAVIES.

Hawthorn, Black Rock, Dublin.

"MICHAEL'S DINNER" (3rd S. viii. 412.)—I send you the following extract from "Vivian Grey," which may possibly throw some light on the authorship of the song that has been ascribed to Lord Palmerston. Cynthia Constower, in her letter to Vivian Grey, writes as follows:—

"Stanislaus (Theodore Hook) told me all circumstantially after dinner—I do not doubt that it is quite true. What would you give for the secret history of the 'rather yellow, rather yellow, chanson?' I dare not tell it you. It came from a quarter that will quite astound you, and in a very elegant small female hand. You remember Lambton did stir very awkwardly in the Lisbon business. Stanislaus wrote all the songs that appeared in the first number except that: but he never wrote a single line of prose for the first three months—it all came from Vivian's pen."

✱.

Perhaps the following anecdote may amuse some of your readers:—In December, 1818, when a hobbety-hoy, I spent Christmas week with the Rev. W. R. Hay, the active anti-Luddite magistrate at his living at Ackworth; and one day talking about Michael Angelo Taylor—a little pompous good-looking gentleman, who was an old fellow-barrister and friend of my father—Mr. Hay related to me that an old acquaintance of his, who well knew Mr. Taylor, was shown into a pew on a Sunday in one of the London churches—I think St. James's—where Michael Angelo happened to be sitting. Matters proceeded quietly till the commencement of the reading of the "Prayer for the Royal Family," when Mr. Taylor, in a dignified manner, stood up in the pew, and on the clergyman repeating the words, "George Prince of Wales," Michael said to his friend, "dines with me on Wednesday;" and, standing till the end of the prayer, he responded "Amen" in a solemn and audible voice, then he sat down again. In fact, this was to inform Mr. Hay's friend that the prince was going to partake of "Michael's dinner" on the Wednesday. Mr. Hay naturally asked his friend if Michael had invited him to meet the prince? but it seemed that this important question had been forgotten. J. H.

AMERICAN EDITION OF TENNYSON'S POEMS (3rd S. viii. 390, 446.)—I observe some remarks by MESSRS. MOXON on my note respecting the above. They of course write under a feeling of pique that any one should be so undiscerning as to think of an American publication, and that too "blamished by more than one misreading," while their editions are so numerous and so correct. What, however, I wish particularly to allude to is their expression of indignation at what they consider "a most dishonest proceeding," respecting which point they seem to have misconceived the purport of my little note. I said "Is there no legitimate way of obtaining" the complete edition I wished for?—of course keeping Mr. Tennyson's rights in view, for he is the last man in the world I should wish to injure, as having afforded me many, many a happy hour.

Many a time has the "Lotos Eaters" soothed my nerves better than any lotos could have done; and many a time have I shared the "angry fancy" of the hero of "Locksley Hall"; shall I not then be pardoned for expressing a wish to have these and all the other blossoms gathered into one laurel crown, or for desiring to have one goodly volume rather than be—

"With blinded eyesight poring over miserable books"?

MESSRS. MOXON reply that—

"K. R. C. is evidently a novice in matters relative to literary property, or he would be aware that the introduction of any editions into the market save those in which the author is interested would be a most dishonest proceeding, and one which, in the present case, would not only be pernicious but supererogative."

I suppose I am a novice in such matters, for I am not in the publishing trade; and must, in this age, crave for pardon for looking upon Mr. Tennyson's Poems rather in the light of a literary blessing than a literary property, and for caring more for the inspired ideality, which is their spirit, than the "typographical excellence" of the letter.

I repeat my query—(an no legitimate means be devised of obtaining such a publication as the one in question?

I see MESSRS. MOXON mention "an edition of the complete works published here." I can only say that I have never been able to find it. I have at least four volumes of their editions, and do not think I have all the poems; in fact, I do not know how to ascertain the number without a great deal of trouble, save by obtaining this much vituperated American edition. So—

"Fly happy, happy sails and bear the press," from the other side of the Atlantic even though it be!

K. R. C.

THE WORD "BEING" (3rd S. viii. 426.)—Your valuable correspondent, F. C. H., seems to be confident that the word "being," used in the sense of whereas, since, or because is unquestionably of Norman-French origin, being a mere translation of the French word étant.

But R. Nares, in his Glossary, sub voce "Being" (ed. London, 1822), expressly says that the word is an adverb, meaning since; and is an abbreviated form used instead of "it being so," or "this being so," equivalent to since this is so.

I prefer this etymology to that given by F. C. H.

J. DALTON.

Norwich.

WATER HIS PLANTS (3rd S. viii. 495.)—The figurative or slang expression here quoted from T. North's Diall of Princes, 1557, is used within a very few years of the same date by Thomas Mountayne, Rector of St. Michael Tower Royal, in his autobiographical Narrative edited by me: Narratives of the Days of the Reformation (Cambridge Society, 1859) p. 213. He applies it to one who was acting the hypocrite, and endeavouring to show a fictitious regret.

I may take the opportunity to remark that the "little lysers" in the same quotation, suggested mean livers, were clearly lizards. J. G. N.

HERALDIC PUZZLE (3rd S. viii. 207, 444, &c.) P. P. has correctly stated my difficulty, and I am obliged by his suggestion. The mode recommended by modern works of placing the paternal arms in a canton, or on a chief, in the maternal arms, appears to me to be as deficient in authority as it is practically impossible for ordinary purposes. But such cases as I have described may often have occurred in olden times; can no correspondent then tell us how the old heralds would have solved the difficulty, and give us examples from seals, &c.?

JOHN WOODWARD

BARKER'S "ANGLER'S DELIGHT" (3rd S. ii. 106) Lowndes was right in describing the above as the "Second Edition." It figures as such in the title page both of 1657 and 1659. The latter is not a reprint, but merely a re-issue, with a new title page. The edition of 1653 had, to the best of my belief, no separate entity, though it is often met with bound up separately. It was annexed to the Countryman's Recreation, 1654.

T. WESTWOOD.

RHYME FOR "SILVER" (3rd S. viii. 368.)—We are told by J. H. that "the only really usable English word has been said to be silver." It is thus confessedly hard to rhyme to, I hope the following attempts may, under the circumstances, be held to be tolerable. We may rhyme to somewhat nearly, thus:—

Bid your thoughts, ye men of skill, veer
Tow'rd the search of rhymes for silver.

We may get yet closer by dividing a word, thus:—

Just try—you will find it a test for your skill, very much so, to find out a "double" for silver.

But, after all, Hodge, the ploughman, might dance these attempts easily. For I think I hear him exclaim, very naturally—

Wot neel 'ee vur to talk o' skil, vur
Any vool can roime to silvur.

WALTER W. SKEA

Will you grant a corner to the following ditty, as containing (I think) the first attempt that has been made, in your pages, to produce a rhyme to silver?—

"The boy whom they had left to count
The money in the till, veraciously stated the amount
In copper, gold, and silver."

C. W. N.

AUTHORSHIP OF "VICTORIA'S TEARS" (3rd S. iii. 211.)—HERMENTRUDE will find the above in The Seraphim, and other Poems, by Mrs. Browning (then Miss Barrett), published by Saunders & Otley, in 1838.

Our greatest female poet, in the exercise of a too severe self-judgment, suppressed much of her earlier works—her Essay on Mind, for instance, printed in 1826, and now become a rare book, and her first translation of the Prometheus Bound of Æschylus (1833). To the latter were annexed some miscellaneous poems of remarkable beauty, and that merited a benigner fate.

T. WESTWOOD.

ARTISTIC: FORGE, ETC. (3rd S. viii. 8.)—P. will find engravings of forges and workmen of the sixteenth century in L'Histoire de l'Orfèvrerie-Joaillerie, par MM. Lacroix et Seré, Paris, 1860. The same work contains engravings of the embossed silver chain or collar of the "Doyen des Orfèvres de Gand," a fine work of art of the fifteenth century. On three of the sixteen plates which compose it, a forge, bellows, &c., are represented. The bellows appears to have been set in motion by a water-wheel. JOHN WOODWARD.
New Shoreham.

WASPS, ETC. (3rd S. viii. 226, 424.)—Though "N. & Q." is not a Journal of Natural History, as it has admitted this subject into its pages, perhaps it will find room for the following notes:—Wasps; these have been very scarce this year, but I saw a good many last October, in Berkshire, at Radley Park, particularly one day, about the stem of a young elm, the bark of which was cracking and bleeding in all directions. Some twenty wasps were imbibing the flowing sap, and at least seven beautiful specimens of the Red Admiral butterfly, Vanessa Atalanta, enjoying the same banquet, together with swarms of red ants. It was a very curious sight. The Humming Bird Sphinx, Macroglossa stellatarum, has been abundant in Surrey, Berks, and Shropshire. The last specimen I saw was on the sunny side of a garden wall at Guildford, October 27, a remarkably late appearance of this beautiful insect. Lastly, I may observe that I was surprised to see the sulphur butterfly, Gonepteryx Rhamni, on November 27, whilst shooting in Tilgate Forest.

W. J. BERNHARD SMITH.

Temple.

"KLIPPEN" (3rd S. viii. 436.)—Thin pieces of gold, called "Note Klippen," struck on one side only, were coined in Germany, in cities closely besieged; and I do not think the Klipping pieces alluded to were obsidional, like those struck at Newark and other cities during the Parliamentary or Civil War in England, coined out of plate, silver spoons, &c., by the loyal adherents of the crown. If not of silver, gold, or similar precious metal, I should suppose they were consanguineous with the numerous Soboles of Nuremberg, tokens or jettons, many of which are continually dug up in England; as also what are called abbey pieces, and were used at first at play as counters, to make up reckonings, &c., and finally as small change, from the deficiency of copper currency. I have seen many of a lozenge or square form, with texts, &c. And if not so, they may have been struck to pay the troops during the Thirty Years' War, or other Campaigns, if we suppose vell to stand for feld. The word klipperam means hardwares, small wares (klirre waaren); Quincaillerie, iron mongery. In German, klipping is a cant word for dashing, flaunting, also. In the Schlagenhauf Sammlung, Heidelberg, were several Note Klippen.

BREVIA.

BELLFOUNDERS (3rd S. viii. 436.)—James Harrison, bellfounder, of Brigg Road, Barton-upon-Humber, was, according to White's Hull Directory, living there in 1826. As far as the date is in question, this may be of use to J. T. F.

W. C. B.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

Shadows of the Old Booksellers. By Charles Knight. (Bell & Daldy.)

It would be difficult to conceive a better subject than the present. It would assuredly be impossible to find a writer who would treat such a subject in a more genial or more pleasant spirit than Mr. Charles Knight, who will always be remembered as a bookseller for his desire to make knowledge a common possession, and not an exclusive property; and no less as an author, for the many good, useful, and amusing books which bear his name. None of those many volumes will be found more pleasant, few more instructive than the present, in which, while he shadows forth the old booksellers, and what a glorious roll does he unfold of them—Guy, Dunton, Tonson, Gent, Lintot, Curll, Richardson, Hutton, Cave, Dodale, &c.—he brings before his readers the shadows of many immortals of literature. Pope figures beside Tonson and Lintot, Johnson beside Cave, so that the book furnishes not only an instructive glimpse of the booksellers, but a sketch of the literary history in which they severally played their parts.

The Gentle Life. Essays in Aid of the Formation of Character. Second Series. (Sampson Low & Co.)

The first series of these Essays in Aid of the Formation of Character having met with the success which might fairly have been anticipated for a book written in great earnestness by a reflective well-read, and right-minded man, who obviously is not to be classed among those "Who think too little and who talk too much,"

it was but natural that he should give to the world a second series. It is sufficient for us, therefore, to note the fact of the appearance of such Second Series; unless, indeed, we add in justice to the author, that these second Essays, which bear the same evidence as to the author's earnestness and sincerity, were written for the most part simultaneously with those contained in the first part of

The Gentle Life, and have not been prepared in answer to a real or fancied demand.

The Story of Genesis and Exodus. An Early English Song, about A.D. 1250. Now first edited from a Unique MS. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, with an Introduction, Notes, and Glossary. By Richard Morris.

Morte Arthur. Edited from Robert Thornton's MS. (about A.D. 1110) in the Library of Lincoln Cathedral. By George G. Perry, M.A., &c.

Chaucer: Animadversions upon the Annotations and Corrections of some Imperfections of Impressions of Chaucer's Works [set downe before tyme and nowe], reprinted in the yere of Our Lorde, 1598. Set downe by Francis Thynne. Now newly edited from the MS. in the Bridgewater Library, by G. H. Kingsley, M.D.

Our limited space will allow us to do little more than glance at the peculiar interest which is exhibited by these three new and valuable contributions to English philology, for which we are indebted to the Early English Text Society.

The interest of the first attaches to it as being so early an English version of Old Testament History, and from the philological value of the poem; which the editor believes to have been written about A.D. 1250, probably by the author of the Bestiary, edited by Mr. Wright in the Reliquie Antique. The Morte Arthur is from the valuable MS. in the Library of Lincoln Cathedral, from which the romances of Perceval, Isumbras, Eglamour, and Degrevant were edited for the Camden Society, in 1814, by Mr. Halliwell; who also edited a limited edition of the Morte Arthur in 1847. This work, like the preceding, is very carefully edited, with notes and a full glossary. The third volume is Thynne's capital Animadversions upon Chaucer, probably well-known to many of our readers from Todd's edition of it. Dr. Kingsley's edition, besides an interesting preface, gives the side notes, and a very useful Index.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES WANTED TO PURCHASE.

EUROPEAN MAGAZINE, Vol. XXIII.

LONG LIVER, 8vo. 1722.

 Letters stating particulars and lowest price, carriage free, sent to Mr. W. G. SMITH, Publisher of "NOTES & QUERIES," 22, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

Particulars of price, &c., of the following book to be sent direct to gentlemen by whom it is required, whose name and address given for that purpose:—

WAGSTAFFE (DR. THOMAS), VINDICATION OF KING CHARLES THE FIRST. 3rd edition, 4to. London, 1711.

Wanted by William J. Thoms, Esq., 40, St. George's Square, Belgrave Road, S.W.

Notices to Correspondents.

HYMNALOGY. Those of our Correspondents interested in this also will do well to consult the recent volumes of the Penny Post, published by Parker.

F. M. S. The work referred to by Mr. Thackeray is no doubt Goss Selwyn and his Contemporaries, with Memoirs and Notes, by Mr. J. M. 4 vols. 8vo. For patriotic literature consult the Library of the Falmouth translated by Members of the English Church, 41 vols. 8vo. For its history and practice of the art of Enamelling, consult Knight's English Encyclopedia (Arts and Sciences), ill. 871.

E. F. BURTON (Carlisle). Comparing our Correspondent's note with its particulars in Wagstaffe's Vindication of King Charles the Martyr, 4to. 1711, pp. 124-5, we have no hesitation in saying that this is the second impression of the King's Book, printed and published without the Proprietors' sanction, &c. The latter, consisting of ten pages, were probably printed the following year, and have been bound into the volume.

ERRATUM.—3rd S. viii. p. 454, col. 1. line 6, for "was incumbent" read "were incumbents."

"NOTES & QUERIES" is registered for transmission abroad.

ANOTHER CURE OF LONG-STANDING ASTHMA BY DR. LECOCK'S PNEUMATIC WAFERS.—Caldicot.—I was afflicted for years with a most violent asthma, with shortness and difficulty of breathing, and at times a cough so bad as to cause me violent vomiting and dry retching. I tried nearly all the medical men about here, but from Dr. Leacock's Wafers I found relief almost immediately. J. A. GARRARD—Widow, Mr. T. I. JONES, Chemist, 5, High Street, Newport. To singers and public speakers they are invaluable for the voice. They have a pleasant taste. Price 1s. 1jd. per box. Sold by all druggists.

Just published, in crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

CONSTITUTIONALISM OF THE FUTURE;

OR,

PARLIAMENT THE MIRROR OF THE NATION.

BY JAMES LORIMER,

Regius Professor of Public Law in the University of Edinburgh.

Edinburgh: ADAM and CHARLES BLACK.

LETT'S DIARIES FOR 1866 are sold in above 101 varieties, at from 6d. to 6s. each, by every Bookseller throughout Europe and the British Colonies. Catalogues gratis.

Illustrated and Descriptive.

LETT'S FOLIO DIARY, No. 31, interleaved with blotting, is the cheapest Half-crown Diary issued.

Just published.

THOS. DE LA RUE & CO.'S INDELIBLE RED LETTER DIARIES FOR 1866, edited by JAMES GLAISHER, Esq., F.R.S. With an Engraving of Lunar Mountain, and an original Article on the Moon by PROFESSOR PHILLIPS, F.R.S. In various sizes, suitable for the Pocket or Desk, and in a great variety of bindings. May be had of all Booksellers and Stationers.

Published by J. Clements, Little Pulteney Street, price 7d., a new Work on the Teeth, entitled

PURE DENTISTRY, and WHAT IT DOES FOR US. By A. ESKELL, Grosvenor Street, W.

"We feel certain all who make themselves acquainted with the contents of the book through our instrumentality, will thank us for having directed their attention to Mr. Eskell's work, as assuredly none can read it without deriving the greatest benefit."—The Sun, Aug. 23.

Sold by SIMPKIN & MARSHALL, and may be had of all Booksellers.

TO BOOKBUYERS.—SECOND-HAND BOOKS in all Branches of Standard Literature: English History and Literature in General. A large Collection of Greek and Latin Classics, Translations, and Mathematics. A head required for postage of Catalogue.

W. HEATH, 497, Oxford Street, London.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1865.

CONTENTS.—No 209.

NOTES:—James Aitken, Bishop of Galloway, 533.—The Royal Recreation of Jovial Anglers, 534.—Selden's "Table-Talk," 535.—Dr. Johnson's Residence at Brighton.—Ardeb.—Curious Names.—Origin of the Sign of the White Hart.—A Gipsy Rhyme.—Wench, 536.

QUERIES:—Anagrams.—Autographs.—Barcelona Dollar.—Cambridge Dramatic Queries.—Thomas Campbell.—"De Homilibus Adamicis"—Genealogical Notices of the Cromwell Family.—Donne's Poems in Dutch.—Heraldic.—"History of the Huns"—Quotations.—David Rennie.—The Royal Academy and its Latinity.—Rubens and Gainsborough.—Servetus.—"Société de Spérmatique" of Paris.—St. James's Palace: Lutheran Chapel.—Taje Mahal.—Tune of Diana, 537.

QUERIES WITH ANSWERS:—"The Divine Cosmographer"—"Never a Barrel the Better Herring"—Sises of Books.—Alstedius.—"Richard the Third," 539.

REPLIES:—Construction of Library Catalogues, 540.—Jarvis Matcham, 541.—"Filius Naturalis," 542.—Dilamgerbendi, ib.—Longevity.—Junius.—The Pendrell Family.—Heathen.—Cooper.—Catullus, &c.—John Duthy, Esq.—Wroxtor Dinders.—Hundred-weight.—The Rev. John Kennedy.—Pettigrew for Pedigree.—References Wanted.—"Lete make"—"The Contrasting Magazine"—Epigram on Gibbon's Portrait.—"Out of Sight out of Mind"—Ismael Fitzadam.—Various Pronunciations of "Ough"—Merquizzotted.—Epitaph at St. Botolph's.—Lord Palmerston.—Uncommon Rhymes.—Beest.—Anointed, used in a bad Sense.—Batter.—Charles Butler.—Scrass Family.—Porcelain Manufactory at Leith or Edinburgh.—Costrel.—The Churching of Women.—Curious Custom in Ireland.—"London University Magazine"—Druidiam.—Governor Wall.—Neddrum, &c., 544.

Notes on Books, &c.

Notes.

JAMES AITKEN, BISHOP OF GALLOWAY.

In asking for information as to the connection of Bishop Aitken with the Primrose family, F. M. S. (p. 372) has touched on a question of which I should be very glad to see a solution, as it would throw light on the descent and connections of the Bishop.

I have put together some scattered notices of this prelate's history, which may be of some use to F. M. S., and not without interest for general readers of "N. & Q."; since Aitken may in some respects be considered the last pre-revolution Bishop of Galloway, as his successor John Gordon, consecrated at Glasgow in February 1688, probably never visited his diocese; for he left Scotland altogether in the end of the same year, accompanying James VII. to St. Germain's. It may not be uninteresting to relate that, when Bishop Trower was holding his first Confirmation within the old diocese of Galloway, he found, by collating old records, that there had been no episcopal visit in Galloway from the days of Bishop Aitken till his time—an interval of nearly two hundred years.

From a Literary History of Galloway, by Thos. Murray, Edinburgh, 1822, I extract the following particulars:—

Arthur Ross (properly Rose), Bishop of Argyre, was successor of Paterson, afterwards Archbishop of Glasgow, in the see of Galloway, which he did not hold much more than a month, when he obtained the Archbishopric of Glasgow.

James Aitken, or Aitken, a person of no ordinary distinction, was promoted after Rose to the see. He was son to the sheriff of Orkney (Henry Aitken), and was born in Kirkwall, 1618. Having previously attended the University of Edinburgh, he removed to Oxford in 1637, where he studied divinity under the celebrated Dr. Prideaux. Aitken was chosen chaplain to the Marquis of Hamilton, when Lord High Commissioner to the famous Assembly of 1638—a situation of which he acquitted himself so well that, on his return to England, the Marquis procured from the king Aitken's presentation to the church of Birse, in Orkney; in which office, says Keith, he procured a general esteem from all persons. On the landing of the Marquis of Montrose in Orkney, 1650, Mr. Aitken, according to Keith, was unanimously requested by the Presbytery, of which he was a member, to draw up a declaration in their and his own name, containing very great expressions of loyalty, and a constant resolution firmly to adhere to their dutiful allegiance. For this the General Assembly passed sentence of deposition against the whole Presbytery, and excommunicated Aitken because the address was drawn up by him, and because he had held a conference with Montrose. The Privy Council issued an order for Aitken's apprehension; but he, having obtained private intelligence of his danger from his relation, Sir Archibald Primrose, afterwards Lord Register, and at that time clerk to the Council, fled into Holland, where he remained till 1658; when, returning to his native country, he lived in retirement in Edinburgh. At the Restoration, he went with Bishop Sydserff, the only surviving Scottish prelate, to congratulate his Majesty. At this period Aitken obtained the rectory of Winfrith, in Dorsetshire, where he remained till 1677, when he was elected and consecrated Bishop of Moray—to the great rejoicing, says Wood, of the episcopal party; and, in three years afterwards, was translated to the see of Galloway.

On being translated to Galloway, Bishop Aitken obtained a dispensation to reside in Edinburgh, "because," says Wood (Athenæ Oxon.), "it was thought unreasonable to oblige a reverend prelate of his years to live among such a rebellious and turbulent people as those of his diocese." Bishop Aitken died in 1687, at the advanced age of seventy-four.

The literary historian of Galloway, from whom I have taken the above sketch, mentions that a pretty minute and full account of Aitken may be found in Wood and Keith, particularly the former. His administration of the diocese of Galloway is thus described by Keith:—

* He so carefully governed this diocese, partly by his letters to the Synod, Presbyteries, and Single Ministers, partly by a journey he made thither [this confirms what I above related of Bishop Trower, C. H. E. C.], that had he resided in the place, better order and discipline could scarce have been expected. He died at Edinburgh of an apoplexy, the 28th October, 1687, aged seventy-four years, and his corpse was buried in the Church of the Greyfriars there. Upon his coffin was fastened this Epitaph:—

Maximus Atkinsi pietate, et maximus annis,
Ante diem, invita Religione, cadis;
Ni caderis, nostris inferret forsitan oris
Haud impune suos Roma superba * Deos. "

Of Bishop Aitken's family I have but imperfect accounts, and should be glad of more information. A MS. pedigree makes him the son of Henry Aitken, Sheriff and Commissary of Orkney; and states that he married a Rutherford of Hunt-hill. I should very much like to know which Laird of Hunt-hill it was, whose daughter Bishop Aitken married. Was it Andrew Rutherford? I have seen a MS. account of the Hunt-hill family in the possession of the present male representative of the Rutherfords of that ilk, and of Edgerston; but I do not think it gave the daughters and their marriages.

If we knew to whom Henry Aitken, the sheriff of Orkney, married, we should probably have the clue to his son's relationship with the Primroses.

I may note that, in the Scottish Parliament of 1649, there was a James Aitken, Commissary for Culross. I know not if he was of the Bishop's family. The name is spelt in many different ways. Mr. Grub, the learned ecclesiastical historian of Scotland, throughout calls the bishop Atkins; but that is really an English, and not a Scotch name. The author of the Literary History of Galloway writes it Aiken or Aitken; while Nisbet gives the arms under the name of Aitkin or Aitkinside.

Bishop Aitken's daughter—called Mary in a MS. pedigree—married Rev. William Smyth, parson of Moneydie. I should like to ascertain whether it was a sister of hers that married Patrick Smyth, advocate, son of Andrew Smyth of Rapness, in Orkney, and brother of George Smyth of Rapness? For it is of these two, who were first-cousins to each other, that Douglas makes the erroneous statement that they married daughters and co-heiresses of Arthur, Bishop of Galloway. I have not found any evidence that Arthur Rose, who held the see of Galloway for a month (as stated in a former part of this note), was ever married: but I have evidence that one of the two Smyths, of the house of Braco, said to have married Arthur Rose's daughter, really married a daughter of James Aitken, Bishop of Moray, and afterwards of Galloway. It is possible that the other statement may eventually be corrected by proof, that there was another of Bishop Aitken's married to Patrick Sm

* Aitken had opposed the taking off of the Penal Laws.

I may perhaps be permitted to add, already lengthy note, some information of Margaret Halcro, inquired for by F and which I obtained during researches Orkney connections of the Smyths and Margaret, daughter of Hugh Halcro, in of Weir, was married to the Rev. Henry of Chirnside, at the kirk of Evie, May 2 By this marriage she was mother of R Ebenezer Erskine, the founders of the S Church.

The minister of Evie gave Margaret F certificate of her descent as "lawful dau the deceased Hugh Halcro, in the Isle of and Margaret Stewart his spouse: deces her father, of the house of Halcro, whi very ancient and honourable family in tl neys, and the noble and potent Earl of Al Lairds of Dun in Angus; and by her mo the Laird of Barscobe in Galloway." Th the New Statistical Account of Scotland, co ney," parish of Evie, in a note, p. 200. correspondent in Kirkwall refers me to Stewart's History of the Stewarts (p. 169) account of the Barscobe family as a branch Darnley Stewarts. I have no present me access to Duncan Stewart's work, but p F. M. S. can verify the reference.

C. H. E. CARMIC

4, Johnstone Street, Bath.

THE ROYAL RECREATION OF JOVI- ANGLERS.

The following ballad was discovered wri a fly-leaf of R. Nobbes's Compleat Troller, 1682, now in the British Museum. After been transcribed, I was informed that a cop is among the Roxburghe ballads, and has reprinted by Mr. J. P. Collier in his Book of burgh Ballads, 4to, 1847, p. 232. The version slightly differs from the one in th burgh collection, which has the following appended to it: "F. Coles, T. Vere, W. G son, and J. Wright." It is also reprinted to Purge Melancholy; but there set to the t "My father was born before me." (Chs Popular Music of the Olden Time, i. 284.)

It appears to be one of those merry song which Skelton, Tarleton, Elderton, and J kept the press alive at the commencement seventeenth century. It has been conje with some probability, that the fishing makers of that day published and sold the of madrigals for the old anglers to sing country hostel after a day's recreation; and were left occasionally with mine hostess placed in "a cleanly room with lavender in the window," along with "the twenty other ballads stuck against the wall."

It is not improbable that "The Royal Recreation" is one of those songs characterised by Walton as containing "the strong lines that are now in fashion in this critical age;" and of course not to be matched with "the smooth song made by Kit Marlow; or 'Chevy Chase,' 'Phillida flouts me,' 'Johnny Armstrong,' and 'The Milk Maid's Song,' which made good Queen Bess wish herself a milk maid all the month of May."

THE ROYAL RECREATION OF JOVIAL ANGLERS.

Proving that all men are Intanglers,
And all Professions are turn'd Anglers.

To the tune of "Amarillis."

Of all the recreations which
Attend to human nature,
There's nothing soars so high a pitch
Or is of such a stature,
As is the subtle Angler's life
In all men's approbation,
For Angler's tricks do daily mix
With every corporation.

When Eve and Adam liv'd in love
And had no cause for jangling,
The Devil did the waters move,
The Serpent went to angling:
He baits his hook with God-like look,
Quoth he this will entangle her,
The woman chops, and down she drops;
The Devil was the first Angler.

Physicians, Lawyers, and Divines,
Are most ingenious janglers,
And he that tries shall find, in fine,
That all of them are Anglers:
Whilst grave Divines do fish for souls,
Physicians (like curmudgeons)
Do bait with health, to fish for wealth,
As Lawyers fish for gudgeons.

A Politician, too, is one
Concern'd in Piscatory,
He writes and fights, unites and slights
To purchase wealth and glory;
His plummet sounds the kingdom's bounds
To make the fishes nibble,
His ground bait is a paste of lies
And blinds them with a quibble.

A fisherman subdued a place,
In spite of locks and staples:
The warlike Massaniello was
A fisherman of Naples;
Commanded forty thousand men,
And prov'd a royal wrangler:
You ne're shall see the like again
Of such a famous Angler.

Upon the Exchange 'twixt twelve and one
Meets many a neat intangler:
'Mongst merchant-men, not one in ten
But is a cunning Angler.
For like the fishes in the brook
Brother do swallow brother
A golden bait hangs at the hook,
And they fish for one another.

A shopkeeper I next prefer
A formal man in black, Sir,
He throws his angle everywhere,
And cries, "What is't you lack, Sir;
Fine silks and stuffs, or hoods and muffs?"
But if a Courtier prove the intangler,
My citizen must look to't then,
Or the fish will catch the Angler.

A Lover is an Angler too,
And baits his hook with kisses;
He plays, he toys, he fain would do,
But oftentimes he misses:
He gives her rings, and such fine things,
As fan, or muff, or night hood;
But if you'll cheat a City peat,
You must bait her with a knighthood.

There is no Angler like a Wench
Just rising in the water,
She'll make you leave both trout and tench,
And throw yourself in after:
Your hook and line she will confine,
Then intangled is the intangler,
And this I fear hath spoil'd the ware
Of many a jovial Angler.

But if you'll trowl for a Scriv'ner's soul,
Cast in a rich young gallant;
To take a Courtier by the powl
Throw out a golden tallent:
But yet I fear the draught will ne'er
Compound for half the charge an't;
But if you'll catch the Devil at a snatch,
You must bait him with a Serjeant.

Thus have I made my Angler's trade
To stand above defiance,
For like the mathematick art,
It runs through every science.
If with my Angling Song I can
With mirth and pleasure seize you,
I'll bait my hook with wit again,
And angle still to please you.

A HERMIT AT BARNSBURY.

SELDEN'S "TABLE TALK."

In the last edition of this admirable book there are more oversights than one would willingly see. I quote from that of 1860. The first edition of the Table Talk appeared, as it is well known, in 1689, in a coarsely printed quarto pamphlet, and abounds with corruptions. Some—many of these, the late Mr. Singer has removed, but a few remain.

To begin at the beginning, however. At p. 21, is a small mistake in a note, for which the modern editor is responsible. There was no 4to edition of Britannia's Pastorals; "sm. 4to" should be "sm. 8vo." We come pretty smoothly to p. 97, where Milward, the executor of Selden, dedicates the old quarto to "Mr. Justice Hales"—meaning Sir Matthew Hale: and for this he has been taken to task severely enough, if we recollect that Evelyn commits a precisely similar fault, if fault it be, under date of May 26, 1671.

Leaving the introductory portion now, turn to p. 111, where, in line 2 from the top, Mr. Singer alters the old reading coluit to coluerit. I incline to think that coluit ought to be restored.

At p. 124, the paragraph numbered 9 is sadly in want of something to complete the sense. A word or two dropped out at press so long ago as 1689, and has not yet been supplied.

In p. 126, the paragraph numbered 2 requires editing. Dr. Irving's suggestion, which occurs in a note, will not dispose of the whole difficulty.

P. 131, line 4 from bottom, we ought to read: "The way of coming," &c.

P. 148, line 3 from top, we must read: "And in this sense the Duke," &c.

Pp. 178-9, section headed "Laud." Here, towards the end, there is a word or two wanting. We ought to read (top line of p. 179): "may be [they will be] the first," &c.

P. 205, note †, Britanna not Britannia, which violates all sense and grammar.

P. 222. An original Magna Charta. Selden did not believe it seems, in the existence of such a thing; and it is a question whether his scepticism was not extremely well-founded. Those which we have may only be copies.

P. 248, art. "Subsidies," paragraph 2. A writer in "N. & Q." (1st S. xi. 426) very properly asks to be informed what this means, but Mr. Singer has not helped us. There is, in all appearance, a slip of the pen on Milward's part.

W. CAREW HAZLITT.

DR. JOHNSON'S RESIDENCE AT BRIGHTON.—I am sorry to have to call the attention of the readers of "N. & Q." to the demolition, now I am informed in progress, of another interesting house, the residence of the Thralls in West Street, Brighton, so often mentioned in Boswell's Johnson, Madame D'Arblay's Diary and Correspondence, Mr. Hayward's Memoirs of Mrs. (Thrale) Piozzi, the Johnson Correspondence, &c. It was, as the readers of those works are aware, often visited by Dr. Johnson, Fanny Burney, and others whose names are household words; and as the only building in Brighton having the slightest literary interest, should have been preserved. It surely reflects little credit on that wealthy town that a house hallowed by so many associations should have been thus consigned to destruction while tens of thousands of pounds have been raised there to preserve the hideous Pavilion, and to perpetuate its questionable reminiscences. However, as the destruction of the house is now, I understand, in fact accompli, nothing remains but to record the fact, and to grieve over it.

When I was at Brighton in June last, the house had not even been photographed. The Pavilion, however, the Town Hall, the Grand Hotel, and every other ugly building in Brighton, had been photographed ad nauseam. There is an engraving of the house somewhere. It was copied in an illustrated edition of Boswell, published some years since by Messrs. Ingram & Cooke. Can I be informed where the original engraving is to be found? E. J. S.

ARDEB.—In the new edition of Webster's Dictionary, this word is referred to the Arabic irdeb or urdeb, and as a measure said to be eight bushels. Lane and Sir J. G. Wilkinson both, and correctly, say the ardebb or ardeb is equal to nearly five bushels. Not only is Webster wrong as to the capacity of the ardeb, he has not followed up the word to its source. I have no doubt that ardeb is the modern form of artaba, which, according to Faber's Thesaurus, was a measure containing an Attic medimnus and three choenices (about twelve gallons). Faber refers to Fannius as his authority, and he wrote, about A.D. 312, a poem upon weights and measures. The word artaba also occurs in Cooper's Thesaurus as an Egyptian measure containing 72 sextarii (about $8\frac{1}{2}$ gallons). Cooper gives no authority. I have not hunted up any other details, but whatever the difference of value, artaba and ardeb are clearly the same words. B. H. C.

CURIOUS NAMES.—Not many years ago there were in Warrington four surgeons of the singularly appropriate names of Sharp, Kean, Steel, and Hardy. The second of these gentlemen fell a victim to his exertions in behalf of his patients during the epidemic of Asiatic cholera in 1833, but the other three are still living, in excellent health, and, although endowed with such formidable names, in full professional practice. M. D. Warrington.

ORIGIN OF THE SIGN OF THE WHITE HART.—I venture to send you an extract of an account of the ancient sign of the "White Hart." It has been the subject of discussion in the local papers for some little time. Can you or any of your correspondents say if the following account is to be relied on? To any one learned in the history of signs, it may possibly be of some slight interest:—

"Origin of the Sign of the White Hart: a Legend of the New Forest."—It is not perhaps generally known from what circumstance this sign, which is now adopted in so many towns and cities in England, derived its origin, or that the town of Ringwood was the one to give it birth; which may be gathered from the following account given by Sir Halliday Wagstaffe, who was keeper of the woods and forests in the reign of Henry the Seventh. It appears that the king accompanied by several lords of the court, Philip Archduke of Spain, Joan his wife, and many other ladies, feeling disposed for a day's hunting, repaired to the New Forest for that purpose. A celebrated white hart, which was called Albert, and which was a noble-looking animal, was selected for the day's sport. Albert showed them some fine running, and the chase continued till nearly the close of day, when at length, being hard pressed by the hounds, he crossed a river near Ringwood, and finally stood at bay in a meadow; his pursuers came up just at the time the hounds were about to make a sacrifice of their victim, when the ladies interceded for the noble animal who had shown them such an excellent day's sport; their intercession was listened to, the hounds were called off, and the animal secured. He was taken into Ringwood, and a gold collar was placed round his neck, and he was removed to Windsor, and Halliday Wagstaffe was that day knighted in Ringwood. The house of entertainment at which the king and his courtiers partook of some refreshment had its sign altered to that of the White Hart, and has retained its name to this day; the old sign was taken down and a splendid painting of a white hart, with a gold collar round its neck, supplied its place, which illustration was retained till within our own recollection."—Southampton Times.

"WADS."

A GIPSY RHYME.—On a recent visit to her Majesty Queen Esther, the gipsy sovereign, at her royal palace in the village of Kirk-Yetholm, I was treated to a piece of sound advice in the form of the following rhyme, which appears to be worthy of preservation among similar relics of nearly forgotten lore:—

"A man may care, and still be bare,
If his wife be nought;
A man may spend,
And still may mend,
If his wife be ought."

This is just as I took it down from the lips of her most gracious majesty, of whose quaint and striking phraseology it may perhaps gratify your readers to have a few specimens. Her description of the village of Yetholm, a straggling hamlet lying on the northern slopes of the Cheviots, was inimitably good. "Yetholm," she said, "is sae mingle-mangle, that one nicht think it was either built on a dark nicht or sawn on a windy ane."

Talking of the inhabitants, she said they were "maistly Irish," and none of her "seed, breed, or generation." Apropos of her demeanour before her numerous visitors, she came out with this naïve confession. "I need to ha'e fifty faces—a face for a minister, a face for a gentleman, a face for a blackguard, and a face for an honest man!" And a clerical gentleman, who appeared before her with his third wife, she apostrophised thus—"Ah! Mr. Blank, ye're an awfu' waster o' women!"

LUCEO NON URO.

Kelso.

WENCH.—As a singular instance of the opposite meanings given to a word, we may take this one, which is in use in South Lancashire and the West Riding. In South Lancashire it is more an endearing term, used by the farmers and working classes, when coaxing or praising a female. In the West Riding no word uttered to a female could convey a more insulting impression.

OWENS COLLEGE LIBRARY.

Queries.

ANAGRAMS.—Can any information be given as to early collections of anagrams, whether in Latin, French, Italian, or English? Some forty years since I picked up at a stall a small volume of Latin Anagrams, which bore on the title-page the following autograph: "Sum Benj. Jonsonij et Amicorum." It was unfortunately imperfect. The name of the author I do not remember, as the volume has disappeared from my library.

The following little book has subsequently come into my possession: "Lucus Anagrammaticus, Joh. Christophori Kerleri, Tubicensis, Scholæ Ebi-gensis Præceptoris, Impressus Tubingæ, Typis Theodorici Werlini" 1622, 12mo. Of the author Kerlinus, I should be happy to learn something.

J. M.

AUTOGRAPHS.—Will any reader be good enough to inform me of the most complete and extensive collection of autographs of the period of the French Revolution?

J. H. P.

BARCELONA DOLLAR.—Ob. "5 PESETAS," surrounded by a wreath. Leg. "EN. BARCELONA. 1808." Rev. A shield; quarterly 1 and 4, arg. a cross gules; 2 and 3, or, two pallets gules; surrounded by a wreath.

There are two peculiarities about this dollar:—

1. The shield is lozenge-shaped, which would denote the arms of a lady.
2. It consists of five pesetas.

Is not a peseta two rials, or a quarter dollar?

I should like to know if the above are the arms of Barcelona; why they are on a lozenge-shaped shield; and lastly, whether it is the dollar or the peseta that has a different value in various parts of Spain?

JOHN DAVIDSON.

CAMBRIDGE DRAMATIC QUERIES.—1. In the Cambridge University Magazine (No. 13), 1843, there is a translation of a portion of The Frogs of Aristophanes. Can any Cambridge correspondent inform me as to the authorship of the translation? Who printed this University Magazine?

2. In the Cambridge Portfolio, 1840, vol. i. pp. 111-112, I find it stated in a notice of University Plays: "It is only three years since an English play was acted in one of the halls with the sanction of the master of the college, and the Chancellor of the University." Can you tell me which College is here referred to, or give me any further account of this academic performance which must have taken place about 1836 or 1837?

3. In the library of Trinity College, Cambridge, there is a (MS.) copy of Seyres, a play acted in 1612, at Cambridge, before Prince Charles. This copy has the names of the actors. Would any of your readers who can refer to the MS. have the kindness to give me the names of the performers?

There are also copies in the University and Emmanuel College Libraries. In the same library there is another drama, Catiline Triumphant. Is there any name or initials attached to this MS., or any date, and does it seem to have been acted?

R. I.

THOMAS CAMPBELL.—I shall feel obliged by being informed as to the name of the periodical to which the poet Campbell contributed, in the year 1836. And also whether a poem, entitled "The Battle Cry of Albion," occurs in that periodical after March, 1836.

E. ST. M. M.

"DE HOMINIBUS ADAMICIS."—Paracelsus is said to be the author of this treatise. Has it been printed, and when, and where?

F.

GENEALOGICAL NOTICES OF THE CROMWELL FAMILY.—

Memoirs of the Protectorate-House of Cromwell; deduced from an early Period, and continued down to the Present Time, &c. By Mark Noble, F.S.A. 2 vols. 8vo. Birmingham, 1784.

A Review of the Memoirs of the Protectorate-House of Cromwell. By the Rev. Mark Noble, F.A.S. of L. and E., &c. Being a proper and very necessary Supplement to that Publication. By William Richards. Lynn, 1787. 8vo, pp. 82.

A Sermon preached at Habershushers' Hall, on the Death of William Cromwell, Esq., &c. With a brief Account of the Cromwell Family, from about the Year of our Lord 1000 to the Present Time; in which are inserted Anecdotes of the memorable Oliver, and his sons Richard and Henry Cromwell. By Thomas Gibbons, D.D. London, 1773. 8vo, pp. 61.

Anecdotes and Observations relating to Oliver Cromwell and his Family; serving to rectify several errors concerning him, published by Nicolaus Comnenus Papadapoli, in his Historia Gymnasii Patavini. By Sir James Burrow. London, 1763. 4to. [Appeared partially in the Gentleman's Magazine for Dec. 1767.]

A Short Genealogical View of the Family of Oliver Cromwell; to which is prefixed a copious printed Pedigree. (By R. L. Gough, F.S.A.) London, 1785. 4to, pp. 64. [This forms No. 31 of Nichols's Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica. See additions to this, Gent's Mag., vol. lvi. p. 41.]

Oliver Cromwell, his Ancestors and Descendants. See the Patrician, edited by John Burke, vol. i. pp. 121—128.

Rise and Fall of the Cromwells. See Burke's Vicissitudes of Families, 1st Series, pp. 26—39. Tabular pedigrees will be found in Prestwich's Republicans, and Visitation of Huntingdonshire, printed for the Camden Society, p. 80.

Will some of your correspondents kindly furnish me with other like references?

GEORGE W. MARSHALL.

DONNE'S POEMS IN DUTCH.—

"But Rimes are fatall, unless course,

Like Directories to doe worse:

Verse is but words in Tune, yet th' House

Wave David's Psalm, and choose Franck Rouse:

[* Bohn's edition of Lowndes's Bibliographer's Manual, pp. 558—560, will furnish numerous references of the Cromwell family.—ED.]

Thus we climbe downwards, and advance as much,
As He that turn'd Donne's Poems into Dutch.

"J. B. to my Ingenious Friend Captaine LL."

(M. Llewellyn's Memoirs, printed in the year 1646.)

I should think this must have been the height of translation. Can any of your readers tell me the name of the ingenious Dutchman? CR.

HERALDIC.—I should feel much obliged if any of your correspondents could inform me by whom the undermentioned arms were borne, and the correct blazon of the 3rd quarter. I would not trouble you, but that there are no means of finding out here, as we are very deficient in heraldic genealogical literature. Quarterly:—

1st. Scotland.

2nd. Erm. on a chev. gu. three antique crowns or (? Grant).

3rd. Arg. a fess az., between three cocks gu., one in chief holding a thistle (?), and two in base.

4th. Per pale, dex. or, a fess chequy of the first, and az., over all a bend gu. Sinister, England.

Over all an escutcheon gu. three antique crowns or.

S.

Singapore, Oct. 22, 1865.

"THE HISTORY OF THE HUNS."—Has the "History of the Huns" by Lennapius Rhetor ever been printed? A MS. copy was, and perhaps still is, in the Vatican Library.

F.

QUOTATIONS.—Whence are these lines?—

"Who made the heart, 'tis He alone

Decidedly can try us;

He knows each cord, its various tone,

Each spring its various bias.]

W. C. B.

Where may be found some lines on David's lament over Absalom, beginning:—

"Oh Absalom! I could have borne," &c.?

S. S. S.

"The last, the last, the last;

Oh! in that awful word,

How many thoughts are stirred,

Companions of the past."

T. W.

Where is it said "Anglico plumbo teguntur ecclesie, nudantur Romano"? F.

DAVID RENNIE.—Wanted date of death of David Rennie (otherwise Captain David Rennie), of Melville Castle, near Edinburgh, whose eldest daughter married Henry Dundas, First Viscount Melville, and whose second daughter married Archibald Cockburn, sheriff of Edinburgh, father of Lord Cockburn.

F. M. S.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY AND ITS LATINITY.—I copy the following passage from one of the pleasantest biographies in the language (as I should imagine), Leslie and Taylor's Life of Sir Joshua

Reynolds. In vol. i. p. 321, the first exhibition of the Royal Academy is described, and we are told—

"The catalogue bears the appropriate motto, 'Nova rerum nascitur ordo.'"

Is it really true that the Academy inaugurated its career with such a blunder in Latinity as the false concord here quoted? That such should have been the case even when Samuel Johnson was Professor of Ancient Literature to the newly formed society, is hardly more amusing than that the error should now be recorded without notice (as it would seem) by so accomplished a scholar as Mr. Tom Taylor. C. G. PROWETT.
Garriok Club.

RUBENS AND GAINSBOROUGH.—I understand Rubens has painted some of his best pictures various times over: for instance, I am told that the fellow picture to the Judgment of Paris, in the National Gallery, is also in the Dresden Gallery, Berlin, Antwerp, Munich, and Hamburg. Six examples by the same artist, each picture an original. I should like to know, through your various readers, whether there are any more originals of this picture acknowledged? I have also seen a painting in Danzig, 25 in. by 30 (oblong). The owner says the same is by Gainsborough. The subject is, a head size of the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Cambridge. How am I to ascertain whether Gainsborough painted the Princes upon the same canvas? ABRACH.

Berlin.

SERVETUS.—Have the letters of Servetus, mentioned by M. Patin to have been in the possession of M. Delavau of Poitiers, ever been published? F.

"SOCIÉTÉ DE SPHRAGISTIQUE" OF PARIS.—I shall be glad of any information connected with the above Society, which issued several volumes of Transactions. I presume that it is now extinct, or issues no publication, since I cannot obtain it through the French booksellers in London.

M. D.

ST. JAMES'S PALACE: LUTHERAN CHAPEL.—Can any of the readers of "N. & Q." inform me where I can meet with an historical account of the foundation, and the successive chaplains, of this building? Was its erection occasioned by the coming to England of a Danish prince? F. S. M.

TAJE MAHAL.—Can any one of your numerous contributors inform me of the origin and meaning of Taje Mahal? Q.

TUNE OF DIANA.—Can any of your correspondents help me to this tune? to which "Jerusalem, my happy home!" is to be sung? not the abbreviated and corrupted form of the modern hymn—books, but "A Song, by F. B. P.," rescued in Dr. Neale's "Joys and Glories of Paradise," from its imprisonment in the thin quarto in the British Museum. GEO. E. FRERE.

Kimberley Terrace, Yarmouth.

Queries with Answers.

"THE DIVINE COSMOGRAPHER."—Who was W. H., the author of a work entitled The Divine Cosmographer, published in 12mo or small 8vo, 1640? The engraved title-page (of which I have a book impression) represents what may be regarded as a whole-length portrait of the author, walking on the globe of the world, which is suspended from the clouds by a cord held by the Divine Hand.

"Quem te pendentis reputas insistere terræ nonne vel hinc clarè conspicias esse Deum?"

"Printed for Andrew Crooke, 1640. W. M. sculpsit,"—i. e., as I presume, William Marshall. I have been unsuccessful in endeavouring to find the work in the Bibliotheca of Watt, or the Catalogues of the British Museum and Bodleian libraries. J. G. N.

[The name of the author is William Hodson, or Hodgson, of Peter-House, Cambridge. A copy of this work turned up at Dr. Bliss's sale, Pt. I. art. 1876, where it is thus described: "H. (W.) i. e. William Hodson, The Divine Cosmographer; a Descant on the Eighth Psalm, frontispiece and explanatory plates by W. Marshall, Commendatory Verses by Tho. May, Burton, and others. Camb. 1620, 8vo." Another copy, with the date 1640, occurs in Heber's Catalogue, Pt. II. 2829, as well as in Thorpe's Catalogue of 1835, art. 1289, where the name is spelt Hodgson. Thorpe has added the following note: "A curious and scarce little volume, with poems by May, Moffet, Burton, and Bourn." Another work by this author, wanting the title-page and frontispiece, is in the British Museum, entitled Sancta Peccatrix. Its correct title, as given by Thorpe, is The Holy Sinner, a Tractate meditated on some passages of the Story of the Penitent Woman in the Pharisee's House, with frontispiece and engraved title by Marshall, 12mo, 1639. It contains commendatory verses by Wm. Moffet, vicar of Edmon-ton; Simon Jackman, M.A.; Reuben Bourn, olim Cantab., who calls him "my learned friend, W. H., Esq."; Wm. Wimper, M.A., who speaks of him as "his noble friend and worthy parishioner"; Thomas Draper, M.A.; Jo. Wimper, Cantab. Coll. Jes., M.A.; and Alexand. Gil, Sanct. Theologiae Doct. (Milton's tutor), who styles him "Guil. Hodson, Art. Mag." Heber also had a copy of this work. Lowndes mentions two other works by him, namely, Tractate on the eleventh Article of the Apostles' Creed, Lond. 1636, 12mo, and Crede Resurrectionem Carnis, 1636. We are also inclined to attribute to him the following extremely scarce piece, entitled The Plerisic of Sorrow let Blood in the Eye-veins; or, the Muses

Trares for the Death of our late Sovereign, James King of England, &c. By Will. Hodgson, Mag. in Art. Cantab. London, Printed by John Legatt, and are to be sold at the — [the remainder of the title, with date, in the Brit. Museum copy, has been cut off in binding], 4to [1625?]. This work is unnoticed by Watt and Lowndes, nor does it occur in the Catalogues of the Bodleian, Douce, or Heber. This writer has commendatory verses on Ben Jonson: see Gifford's edit. 1816, vol. i. p. cccxxxiv. For notices of Hodgson's portrait, consult Granger's Biog. Hist. of England, ed. 1775, ii. 317, and Evans's Engraved British Portraits, ii. No. 17213.]

"NEVER A BARREL THE BETTER HERRING." — What is the explanation of this saying, used by a writer (1725) in the sense of "What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander?" The rules laid down for the management of women servants should be extended also to men servants, for (says he) "daily experience teaches us that—'Never a barrel the better herring.'"

JOHN A. C. VINCENT.

[We greatly doubt whether the writer to whom our correspondent refers has correctly and appropriately applied the proverb in question; and we could wish that he had obliged us by naming the writer in question, and by giving us chapter and verse. Neither does it appear to us that the saying before us receives much light from the citation which we find of a Spanish proverb given in Bohn's Handbook as if meant to be explanatory: "Qual mas, qual menos, toda la lana es pelo." This is explained, in the Dictionary of the Spanish Academy, as signifying that little distinction should be made between things of small importance. ("More or less, all the wool is hairs.") This recondite maxim, we must confess, does not strike us as throwing any satisfactory light on the English proverb now needing explanation.

Suppose we try the effect of inserting a comma. The proverb will then stand thus: "Never a barrel, the better herring." In other words: There will be better herrings for consumption on the spot, when there are no barrels to pack them in for conveyance to distant markets. Others explain the proverb by saying, that the choicest herrings are not packed in barrels, but are set apart.]

SIZES OF BOOKS.—Can you give any plain rules how rightly to describe the various sizes of books? I often am doubtful whether to describe a book as post 8vo or 12mo; the discrimination of other sizes, too, is often no less difficult. I think many of your readers must often experience the same difficulty, and that a little explanation in your columns would be useful to many. (G. W.)

[The size of a book is named from the dimension of the paper upon which it is printed, and the number of leaves into which it is folded; as, for example, an octavo page may be printed either on imperial, royal, demy, post, or foolscap, and ought to be so described; but for the sake of abbreviation, the two latter are frequently designated in catalogues as duodecimo, or 12mo. The same rule applies to the other sizes, such as quarto, duodecimo, &c.]

ALSTEDIUS.—M. Naudé (Naudéana, p. 4^o), says:—

"Alstedius à quelque part fait mention d'une prophétie laquelle parle d'une certaine grande conjunction du soleil et de la lune, et que pour lors tout le monde deviendrait juif, et qu'elle durerait mille ans."

Who was Alstedius, and where is this prophecy to be met with? F.

[John Henry Alstedius, a German divine and a voluminous writer, was sometime professor of philosophy and divinity at his native place, Herborn in Nassau, whence he afterwards removed to Weissemburg, in Transylvania, where he died in 1638. In 1627 he published his treatise De Mille Annis, wherein he asserts that the faithful shall reign with Christ upon earth a thousand years. There is an English translation of this work, entitled The Beloved City, or the Saints' Reign on Earth a Thousand Years, Lond. 4to, 1642. Bayle says, he answered wonderfully well to the anagram of his name, Sedulitas.]

"RICHARD THE THIRD." — Who prepared Shakspeare's tragedy of Richard the Third for the stage, as it appears in Mrs. Inchbald's British Theatre, edit. 1808. It differs considerably from the tragedy in Shakspeare's works.

Did Charles Kean perform the play after Mrs. Inchbald's version? N. N.

[Mrs. Inchbald has reprinted King Richard the Third as altered from Shakspeare by Colley Cibber. For a critical notice of these alterations, consult Genet's History of the Stage, vol. ii. pp. 195—219.]

Replies.

CONSTRUCTION OF LIBRARY CATALOGUES. (3rd S. viii. 395.)

Partly from the information afforded by your notes at the end of my query, and partly from Guild's Librarian's Manual, I have been enabled to form the following list of books treating on this subject:—

Albert, J. F. M. Recherches sur les principes fondamentaux de la Classification Bibliographique. 8vo. Paris, 1847.

Ampère, A. M. Essai sur la Philosophie des Sciences, ou Exposition analytique d'une Classification Naturelle de toutes les Connaissances humaines. 2 Parts. Paris, 1843.

Athenæum, 1848, pp. 1264, 1298, 1329; 1849, pp. 92, 116, 141, 169, 196, 224, 279, 489, 761, 878.

Camus, A. G. Observation sur la Distribution et le Classement des Livres d'une Bibliothèque. 4to. Paris, 1798.

Constantin, L. A. Bibliothéconomie [one of the Manuels Roret]. 2nd edit. 18mo. Paris, 1841. (1st edit. 1849.)

Ebert, F. A. Bildung des Bibliothekars. 2nd edit. 8vo. Leipzig, 1820.

Edwards. Memoirs of Libraries. Vol. II., book iii. 2 vols. 8vo. London, 1859.

Exposé succinct d'un nouveau Système d'Organisation des Bibliothèques publiques. 8vo. Montpellier, 1845.

Foisy, F. M. Essai sur la Conservation des Bibliothèques publiques. 8vo. Paris 1833.

Fortia D'Urban (Le Marquis). Nouveau Système alphabétique de Bibliographie alphabétique. 2nd edit. 12mo. Paris, 1822.

Horne, T. H. Outlines for the Classification of a Library submitted to the Trustees of the British Museum. 4to. London, 1825.

Jewett, C. C. On the Construction of Catalogues of Libraries, and their Publication by means of separate stereotyped Titles, with Rules and Examples. 2nd edit. Washington, 1853.

Le Courayer, P. F. A Letter to M. L'Abbé Gerardin concerning a new Project of a Library Catalogue. 1712. Fol. pp. 8.

Ludewig, H. Zur Bibliotheconomie. 8vo. Leipzig, 1840.

Molbech, Ch. Ueber Bibliothekswissenschaft, oder Einrichtung und Verwaltung öffentlicher Bibliotheken. 2nd edit. 8vo. Leipzig, 1833.

Namur, M. P. Manuel du Bibliothécaire. 8vo. Brussels, 1834.

Paris, M. P. De la Necessité de commencer, achever, et publier la Catalogue des Livres imprimés. 2nd edit. 8vo. Paris.

Peignot, G. Manuel du Bibliophile, ou Traité du Choix des Livres. 2 vols. 8vo. Dijon.

Petzholdt und Reichard. Ankündigung von Beiträgen zur Bibliotheksbaukunst. 2 vols. 8vo. Dresden, 1844.

Petzholdt, J. Katechismus der Bibliothekenlehre. 8vo. Leipzig, 1856.

Quarterly Review, vol. lxxii. pp. 1—25.

Report from the Select Committee on Public Libraries. 1849.

Report from the Commissioners on the British Museum. 1835, 1836, and 1850.

Richter, B. Kurze Anleitung eine Bibliothek zu ordnen und in der Ordnung zu erhalten. 8vo. Augsburg, 1836.

Schmidt, J. A. F. Handbuch der Bibliothekswissenschaft. 8vo. Weimar, 1840.

Schrettinger, M. Versuch eines vollständigen Lehrbuchs der Bibliothekswissenschaft. 2 vols. 8vo. 2nd edit. Munich, 1829.

Schrettinger, M. Handbuch der Bibliothekswissenschaft besonders zum Gebrauche des Rechts Bibliothekar. 8vo. Wien, 1834.

Shurtleff, N. B. A Decimal System for the Arrangement and Administration of Libraries. 4to. Boston, 1856.

The Art of making Catalogues of Libraries, by a Reader at the British Museum. 8vo. London, 1856. (By A. Crestadoro.)

I find I have omitted two small works, viz. :—

Letters addressed to Lord Ellesmere, by J. P. Collier and others. 1849.

Suggestions for the simultaneous compiling and printing of a Catalogue of the Books in the Library of the British Museum (1848?), by Messrs. Clowes.

I am sorry that, being no German scholar, I have not been able to avail myself of your reference to Meyer's Lexicon; but should be glad to know if he mentions any works not in the above list.
G. W.

[Meyer's article, "Bibliothekswissenschaft," makes fifteen closely-printed columns, and contains references to many other works on Library Catalogues.—Ed.]

JARVIS MATCHAM.

(3rd S. viii. 422.)

CUTHBERT BEDE, at the above reference, has noticed the gibbet of this murderer in Huntingdonshire. The circumstances of his case have derived an additional interest from Barham's having founded upon them the Ingoldsby legend of "The Dead Drummer." Sir Walter Scott, in his Demonology and Witchcraft (p. 367), has instanced the "guilt-formed phantom" which appeared to Matcham; and gives what he considers "tolerably correct details," but confesses that he had lost the account of the trial. It was probably upon Sir Walter's details, which in some important particulars are incorrect, that Barham constructed his legend—the chief inaccuracy in which is, that he lays the scene of the murder upon Salisbury Plain, when in fact it was in Huntingdonshire. With the exception of a short account in the Political Magazine for 1786 (vol. xi. p. 155), probably the details are only to be found in stray newspapers of the period that may chance to have escaped destruction. From some numbers of the Cambridge Chronicle, of the years of the occurrence, I have transcribed the following account, which it may be well to perpetuate in "N. & Q":—

"On Friday, June 16, 1786, a sailor named Jarvis Matcham, attended by a companion, appeared before J. Easton, Esq., Mayor of Salisbury, and voluntarily confessed that he had committed a murder in Huntingdonshire about seven years previously. His story was so confused, and his conduct so strange, that the mayor was inclined to believe the man rather a lunatic than a murderer. He was detained, however, till an answer should be obtained to a letter written to the town-clerk of Huntingdon. The answer was to the effect, that a murder had been committed in that locality at the time specified, and that the most diligent search had been made to discover the perpetrator of it, but ineffectually. On Wednesday, June 23, Matcham was again taken before the mayor and justices of Salisbury, when he further confessed that he had been in various employments by sea and land, particularly in the service of Capt. O'Kelly, and Mr. Dymock of Oxford Street, London, as a jockey; that about seven years since, he enlisted into a regiment* then quartered in Huntingdonshire; that, after he had been in the regiment about three weeks, he was travelling upon the turnpike road about four miles from Huntingdon with a drummer [named William Jones], about seventeen years of age, the son of a serjeant of the regiment; when words arising, in consequence of the boy's refusing to return and drink at a public-house they had passed, he murdered the unfortunate youth by cutting his throat with a clasp-knife; that he took from his pocket about six guineas in gold, which had been entrusted to him by the commanding officer [Major Reynolds of Diddington] for his father, the serjeant [for subsistence and recruiting money]; that he left the body on the road and made the best of his way to London, where he obtained work upon the craft at Tower Wharf; that he subsequently went as a sailor to France, the West Indies, Russia, &c.; that he was last on board the Sampson man-of-war, lying off Plymouth, from which he and his companion (John Sheppard) were lately discharged.* He declared that, excepting this murder, he had at no time of his life done any injury to society; that he had no idea of committing it till provoked by the ill language of the deceased; that from that fatal hour he had been a stranger to all enjoyment of life, or peace of mind, the recollection of it perpetually haunting his imagination, and often rendering his life a burden almost insupportable. He further stated that, travelling with Sheppard, on Thursday the 15th inst., on the road to Salisbury, they were overtaken near Woodvate's Inn by a thunder-storm, in which he saw several strange and dismal spectres; particularly one in the appearance of a female, to which he went up, when it instantly sunk into the earth, and a large stone rose up in its place; that the stones rolled from the ground before him, and often came dashing against his feet. Sheppard corroborated this part of the story as far as relates to the horror of the wretched man; who, he stated, was often running about like one distracted, then falling on his knees and imploring mercy, and appeared quite insane. Upon questioning him upon the cause of this strange conduct, Matcham confessed to him this murder, and begged that he would deliver him into the hands of justice at the next place they came to. Persisting in his confession (though he declined signing it), Matcham was removed to Huntingdon, where he was committed for trial at the ensuing assizes. Accordingly, on July 31, 1786, he was arraigned for having murdered the drummer on August 19, 1780. To the surprise of the court, he pleaded not guilty. His trial lasted six hours; when the circumstances were so clear against him that the jury, without hesitation, returned a verdict of guilty. On Wednesday morning, August 2, he was conveyed to the usual place of execution; and after hanging about fifty minutes, his body was taken to the spot where the murder was committed, and there hung in chains. On the night before his execution, he made an ample confession to the clergyman who attended him."

* It appeared that Matcham, having deserted from his ship, enlisted in the 49th Regiment in the name of John Jarvis.

A letter from the Earl of Sandwich to the mayor of Salisbury stated, that the body of the drummer was found at a place called Weybridge, between Bugden and Alconbury, in the great North Road, within four miles of Huntingdon.

E. V.

"FILIIUS NATURALIS."

(3rd S. viii. 409.)

The statement of my learned brother J. M., that "the term natural son at the present date is sufficiently indicative of illegitimacy," is certainly true as far as England is concerned, but not in regard to Scotland: for there the original double meaning of the phrase still lingers in many rural districts. This is accounted for by the fact that the Roman, or, as it is often called, the Civil law, is still the common law of Scotland.

Referring to the Corpus Juris, we find a double sense most distinctly shown:—

* He was said to have narrowly escaped drowning when landing from the Sampson, by the swamping of the boat: thus verifying the truth of a trite adage.

"In potestate nostrâ sunt liberi nostri quos ex juri nuptiis procreavimus."—Inst. lib. i. t. ix.

"Aliquando autem evenit, ut liberi, qui statim ut nati sunt, in potestate parentum non sunt, postea redigantur in potestatem patris; qualis est is, qui dum natus fuerat, postea curis datus, potestati patris subijcitur."—Ibid., t. x. § 13.

"Non solum autem naturales liberi secundum ea quæ diximus, in potestate nostra sunt, verum etiam i quos adoptamus."—Ibid., t. xi.

From these passages it is quite clear that filius naturalis, although it meant in a restricted sense an illegitimate son, had also the more extended signification of a born, in contradistinction to an adopted, son.

That this double sense of the words was recognised by our Scottish jurists, is fully proved by the following passage in Lord Stair's Institution of the Law of Scotland, book iii. tit. iv. § 34:—

"In this line of succession observe:—1. That there is no place for adopted children or their issue; but only for the natural issue of the vassal, which cannot be changed by a voluntary act of adoption without consent of the superior in the investiture; neither is adoption in use with us in any case. 2. These natural heirs must also be lawful, whereby bastards are excluded."

Jamieson, in the Supplement to his Scottish Dictionary, goes too far, when he says:—

"NATURAILL, adj. Used in the sense directly the reverse of that of the term in E., signifying lawful as opposed to illegitimate."

I may add, that a "puir natural," all through Scotland, means a born idiot; and is never used for a person who has become afflicted in after life.

GEORGE VERE IRVING.

DILAMGERBENDI.

(3rd S. viii. 349, 398, 482.)

The singular appellation of Dilamgerbendi, given to a house near the town in which I reside, has often excited my curiosity. I have, till recently, considered it to be an anagram, or hieroglyphically-compounded word, concealing yet half-revealing, like the Veiled Isis, some mystery not to be lightly divulged to the uninitiated. But it now appears that it is derived from a supposed name of the Isle of Wight; and that the owner of the "Villula" is himself ignorant of its real meaning. I have, therefore, again looked into the matter; and since no one has sent any solution of the mysterious term to "N. & Q.," I venture to offer my contributions; which, if they should not settle the question, may at any rate pave the way for further examination.

The assignment of Dilamgerbendi to the Isle of Wight (from no other authority having been produced in reply to the query of J. K. C.), would seem to rest solely on a passage in the Lives of the Saints, where it is stated that St. David "retired into the Isle of Wight": in some copies "in insulâ Withland:" whence Withland is assumed to be Vectis, and Vectis to be the Isle of Wight.

That any Welsh saint of the sixth century should retire (from Wales) into the solitude (?) of the Isle of Wight, must strike every one as improbable; and the author or editor who substituted "insulâ quâdam," no doubt felt this. Now St. David is said to have retired into the Isle of Wight; and there "lived under the direction of Paulinus, a holy man, the disciple of St. Germanus." Had reference been made to the life of the latter, a more rational text would have been found: for it is there stated that "Paulinus, another disciple of St. Germanus, founded a school at Whiteland, in Caermarthenshire, where St. David and St. Thelïau studied." This is much more intelligible, and a more likely locality for our Withland, than the distant Isle of Wight.

Whiteland Abbey is well known. It lies between Caermarthen and Haverfordwest, on the banks of the Gronwy. But it is inland; therefore either this is not Withland, or else insula is an error of the text.

On searching a chart, however, I am unable to find any island, off Wales, bearing the name of Withland; and it will, therefore, not be improper to inquire a little further. The Welsh coast is studded with numerous rocky and barren islets, which in the Middle Ages were the resort of great numbers of anchorites and holy men. St. Gildas is said to have retired "into certain desert islands;" and St. Sampson, having been ordained priest, "withdrew into a neighbouring island." Their names are not specified; but if one of them was the Withland of St. David, there are two in particular, of which each has some circumstance rendering it likely to be the place of the saint's retreat.

1. Ramsey Island, near the modern St. David's, originally a retired locality, to which the see was removed from Caerleon by the saint himself; whose early recollections may very likely have influenced his choice. The bay adjoining, between St. David's and this island, bears the apposite name of Whitsand.

2. Bardsey Island (otherwise Ewley, or Ew-island), in which may perhaps be perceived the root of W-itland. Here St. Daniel died, and was buried; and here, too, St. Dubricius retired, after resigning his archbishopric to St. David. In this lonely islet, twenty thousand holy hermits and religious persons are said by Butler (quoting Camden) to have been interred. (ART. SR. DUBRICIUS).

Whichever of these it was, we may safely conclude that the Withland of the text has no connexion with the Isle of Wight. The word latinised into Ictis or Uectis, is the Celtic gyt or gyth (whence our goyt, gut, and gutter); and was applied to the channel separating any close-lying island from the main land. The Solent Sea was the true gyt; hence we say, the Isle of [the] Wight. Hence, too, the confusion between this island and St. Michael's Mount; and the wild idea of tin having ever been brought (by land!) from Cornwall, round by Southampton, into the Isle of Wight: whereas that Ictis was merely the sheltered channel, or port, where the Phœnician vessels lay—probably at Marazion, or perhaps even Falmouth.

As to the odd word Dilamgerbendi, it is, in my opinion, only the latinized name of some Welsh locality, of which the first syllable is Llan (pronounced d'lan, or dilan). There are two places connected with the known facts of St. David's life, from which this appellation may be derived. The true one will, no doubt, be ascertained by further research.

1. St. David located himself in a lonely valley, watered by a little stream called the Hondddû (pronounced Hendthey). Here he built an oratory, known as Llan-ar-Hondddû, or "the church on the Hondddû;" on the site of which, or in the immediate vicinity, rose in after times the celebrated Abbey of Llanthony, or Llandenny.

2. The very Paulinus (disciple of St. Germanus), with whom St. David is said to have gone into the Isle of Wight, "founded a school at Whiteland; and also the seminary of Llancarvan, a place afterwards renowned for the number of pious and learned men there educated and trained."

Here, I believe, we have the root of the whole matter. Dilamgerbendi (dat. and abl. -bendi) is most likely the latinised name of Llancarvan: the Di being either the Welsh ll, or the preposition de. Probably St. David withdrew, at first, "in quâdam insulâ" (Bardsey or Ewley); afterwards, "in cellâ Withland:" (Whiteland Abbey); and later, it may be, "in cellâ de Lamgerbendi," (Llancarvan); and the confusion has arisen from these three different names having been wrongly fused into the appellation of one locality.

Whatever may be the reception given to these suggestions, I hold it for certain that Dilamgerbendi and the Isle of Wight have nothing whatever to do with each other.

E. K.

Lymington, Hants.

In reference to my original communication on this subject, I would wish, at this stage of the inquiry, just to state, as possibly some assistance to any of your correspondents who may be giving their attention to it, that the authority for Dilamgerbendi being synonymous with With, Wight, Vecta, Vectis, and Ictis, as designating the Isle of Wight, is now well ascertained to be a manuscript in the church of St. Salvador at Utrecht; and you may perhaps feel pleased that your readers should be informed that I am taking steps to have the statement made in the Acta Sanctorum verified that the name Dilamgerbendi is applied in that MS. to the island, by having the MS. inspected. As soon as I receive the result of such inspection from Utrecht I will communicate it to you. I have been advised to do this by Mr. Watts of the British Museum, who, after examining the Acta Sanctorum, has kindly recommended this as the best course to be adopted. In the meanwhile I would again ask of any Celtic scholar who may be among your readers, to have the kindness to furnish us with any probable interpretation of the word Dilamgerbendi; which will be much more fairly interpreted if it be dealt with altogether irrespectively of its right geographical locality. Thanks to Q. Q. (3rd S. viii. 442) for his suggestion, "ad insulam gentis Bendi." It is ingenious; yet two objections present themselves: ger appears an unlikely abbreviation for gentis; and the statement in Acta Sanctorum is not "Profectus est ad insulam," but "Profectus est ad Paulinum qui in insulâ," &c.; and whereas the word insulâ is itself present, "insulâ nomine Dilamgerbendi," it does not seem to admit of "ila," much less of "ad ilam," being part of the name. W. S. J.

LONGEVITY (3rd S. viii. 327): MRS. MORPHY, OF CLAYDON.—The instances of longevity communicated to "N. & Q.," though most of them not satisfactorily authenticated, may lead to the obtaining of more trustworthy examples. I therefore send you the enclosed cutting from the Evening Standard of December 14th (in case no one else has done so) in the hope that some one among your East Anglian correspondents may be able to certify the readers of your most interesting paper how far the account of this old lady mentioned is true.* The fact of her being still alive makes the inquiry easier:—

"ONE HUNDRED AND FIVE YEARS OLD.—On the 28th ult. Mrs. Morley, of Claydon, completed her 105th year. The old lady is in full possession of her faculties, and on this occasion invited a few friends to spend the evening with her, during which she recited several hymns and related various tales of her life. About a fortnight since Mrs. Morley visited Ipswich to have her portrait taken. The old lady must be somewhat older than 105, as she dates her age from her baptismal register."—Bury and Norwich Post.

CROWDOWN.

JUNIUS (3rd S. viii. 439).—The value of Mr. C. Ross's criticisms on Junius may be estimated from the following fact. He states, "Junius assured Woodfall that it was impossible that he should be known in any coffee-house West of Temple Bar." Junius did nothing of the sort. He wrote (Private Letter 5), "Direct to Mr. John Tully at the same Coffee-house [i. e. the New Exchange, where it is absolutely impossible that I should be known." He also wrote (Private letter 54), "Send to the original place for once, N.E.C., and mention any new place you may think proper west of Temple Bar."

Junius did not refer to the burning of some Jesuitical books at Paris, but Bifrons did, on the 23rd April, 1708. It may be that Bifrons was a previous signature of the writer, who afterwards adopted that of Junius. Even if it were, that letter is written some months before Junius entered the arena, and Bifrons may have given a hint as to his identity which Junius would afterwards have gladly recalled.

Lord Chatham was not Junius, because Junius sent to that peer a copy of his celebrated letter to Lord Mansfield some days before it was printed by Woodfall. Vide the letter in the Chatham Correspondence.

I had better authority than some detached passages in Junius's correspondence with Woodfall for saying "that there were evidently three persons in the secret." I believe it to be acknowledged that George III. knew who was the author of these letters. In Memoirs of a Woman of Quality, edited by A. Hayward, Q. C., it is stated that the king used to say that there were more than one person concerned in these letters, or words to that effect. Secondly, common sense assures me that the author would not have sent his own handwriting, or carried the letter himself to Woodfall. It may be that the copyist and conveyancer were one, but the three sets of books seem to indicate a triplet of confederates.

JOHN WILKINS, B.C.L.

Aylesbury, Bucks.

THE PENDRELL FAMILY (3rd S. viii. 501).—The last of this family known to history, I believe, assisted young Watson, a leader of the Spafelds rioters, to escape beyond seas: the rendering this kind of service belonging apparently to the Pendrell blood. He lived in an upper floor in Newgate Street, where he sheltered the younger Watson during the last days the fugitive spent in London. When his complicity was discovered, the pension granted for a similar kindness shown by his ancestor to Charles II. was stopped. This escape was ingeniously planned and cleverly carried out. An interesting account of it was contributed to Jerrold's Magazine by Mr. Henry Holl, author of The King's Mail, and other successful novels. W. N. W.

HEATHEN (3rd S. viii. 476).—Heth, the second son of Cannan, has doubtless given the term "Heathen" to the races of Gentiles, as distinguished from the descendants of Abraham, the Hebrews, who derive their name from Eber; possibly because, in the days of Peleg, the earth was divided, and the children of Eber were to be a separate people from all nations of the earth. Abram, a descendant of Eber, is called from his kindred and father's house, gets possession, by purchase in the promised land, of Ephron, the Heth-ite (euphony, Hittite); and Heth- has given the Greek name Ἕθνος, heathen, to all the nations that were not Israelites. My French Bible has the very term, Gen. xxiii. 7: "Abraham arose, and bowed before the people of the country," that is to say, "devant les Hethiens."

[* We hope so too.—ED. "N. & Q."]]

J. S.

Stratford, Essex.

COOPER (3rd S. vii. 6.)—I have heard a different origin assigned to this name. There was formerly, on the Surrey side of the Thames, a place of entertainment and recreation called "Kuper's Gardens." Kuper (a German) had been under-gardener to Lord Pomfret, who gave him some of his mutilated statues to adorn the gardens with. It was there that the beverage was first introduced and named.

Kuper's Gardens were destroyed when the Waterloo Road was made; but a mixture of stout and porter is still called by the same appellation. The transition in spelling, from Kuper to Cooper, was easy.

The best of the "Pomfret statues" are at Oxford, presented to the University by Lady Pomfret.

W. D.

CATULLUS, ETC. (3rd S. viii. 331.)—A second edition of Catullus, Tibullus, and Propertius, was published by Seb. Gryphius in 1542. Of this there is a copy in the Bodleian Library. One in my own possession, printed at Venice, has the same device and motto on the title: "VENETIUS, JOAN GRYPHIUS EXCUDERAT, 1553." None of the three editions is mentioned either by Brunet or Ebert, and they seem to be all equally rare.

F. NOBATE.

JOHN DUTHY, Esq. (3rd S. viii. 453.)—This gentleman was born Dec. 2, 1771; and died Nov. 16, 1834. His son died March 8, 1820, aged twenty-four; buried at Ropley near Alresford, Hants.

J. W. BATCHELOR.

Odiham.

WROXETER DINDERS (3rd S. viii. 437.)—Denarii, Deniers, clearly; probably, if not actually, Roman denarii, small coins of the Lower Empire, thirty tyrants, or Constantine dynasty, such as are found in most Roman camps or stations in Great Britain. As to their being illegible at the present day, any decent antiquary can make them out. Mr. C. R. Smith, of Stroud, near Rochester, is the most conversant antiquary with reference to Uriconium, or Wroxeter.

BREVIS.

HUNDRED-WEIGHT (3rd S. viii. 415.)—I do not think that a hundred-weight was ever counted as exactly 100 lbs. The old long hundred-weight was and still is 120 lbs.; and for information respecting the use of dozens, instead of tens, I would refer W. S. T. to the Appendix of Brand's Popular Antiquities. How the cwt. came to represent only 112 lbs. is not easy to answer. Brand, quoting from Hickeys's Thesaurus, says:—

"And I am informed by merchants, &c., that in number, weight, and measure of many things, the hundred among us still consists of that greater tolfrædic hundred, which is composed of ten times twelve."

I believe the old abbreviation for this weight was Ċ, or centum, and that we moderns have invented the sign cwt., which may be said to be the short for centum-weight.

H. FISHWICK.

A few days before I saw the query of W. S. T. respecting the origin of cwt. as an abbreviation for "a hundred-weight," it occurred to me, when assisting in the National School, to tell the boys that C was the Roman numeral for 100, and w was weight shortened. Is this idea correct? I had never seen it.

P. Q.

THE REV. JOHN KENNEDY (3rd S. viii. 371.)—The following is the inscription on his tombstone in Bradley churchyard, Derbyshire:—

"To the Memory of
The Rev^d John Kennedy, A.M.
Rector of this Parish upwards of 48 years.
He died February 4th, 1782,
Aged 84 years.

Reader, if thou wouldst know more of this good and learned man, consult his book.

J. H., poni curavit."

W. I. S. HORTON.

PETTIGREW FOR PEDIGREE (3rd S. viii. 248, 466.)—I am surprised that Webster should prefer par-degrés as the origin of "pedigree," when the word is so manifestly formed from pied de grue, and the meaning is so obviously traced to the latter. The lines, or ramifications of a pedigree, bear a very fair resemblance to the crane's foot; and the words pied de grue suffer very little change in the word pedigree; while that word bears no resemblance at all to par degrés. But the word and name Pettigrew ought to suffice to settle the question. The worthy antiquary, lately deceased of that name, himself informed me that his name was the same as Pedigree, and that he considered both to be derived from the French pied de grue.

F. C. H.

REFERENCES WANTED (3rd S. viii. 475.)—The sentence—

"Pater, cur tam cito nos deserta, aut cui nos desolatos relinquis?"— is taken from the very ancient office in the Roman Breviary for the Feast of St. Martin, November 11, with some slight alterations. In the Second Lesson of the Second Nocturn of Matins, on St. Martin's Feast, we read as follows:—

"Deum oratione precabatur, ut se ex illo mortali carcere liberaret. Quem audientes discipuli, sic rogabant: Cur nos pater deseris? cui nos miseros derelinquis?"

The office for St. Martin was composed by St. Radbod, Bishop of Utrecht, who died in 918.

F. C. H.

"LETE MAKE" (3rd S. viii. 374.)—I have often seen, and as often been puzzled, by the inscription in Old English character at Wellow, near Bath; but the word which your correspondent Foxcore takes to be "lete," always appeared to be "lac;" and the whole line to be—

"Pray for them that this lac make."

The only guess at a meaning that I could ever form, is this:—Lac is an Anglo-Saxon word, signifying divine service. I have met with it in the Life of St. Guthlac, edited by C. W. Goodwin, p. 82: "So endiga wer Guthlac Gode lac onsegde and maessen sang," i. e. "the blessed man Guthlac performed service to God, and sang mass." The inscription at Wellow being within a low sepulchral arch, possibly it may mean (supposing lac to be the word), "Pray for the person buried here, who founded a service in this part of the church."

J. E. J.

"THE CONTRASTING MAGAZINE" (3rd S. viii. 414.)—Who was the author of The Contrasting Magazine? Supposed to be James Pierrepont Graves.

S. S.

EPIGRAM ON GIBBON'S PORTRAIT (3rd S. viii. 473.)—The epigram on the portrait of the infidel historian Gibbon only wants, in my opinion, a more literal translation, which I have attempted in the following lines:—

"Too happy thou, to crush proud Satan's power;
But Sophist! here small power thou dost display:
Would'st thou remove his image? Go, this hour,
And, Gibbon! take thy hideous face away."

F. C. H.

"OUT OF SIGHT OUT OF MIND" (3rd S. viii. 474.)—The passage in the Following of Christ stands thus in the original: "Cum autem sublatu fuerit ab oculis, cito etiam transit a mente" (De Imit. Christi, lib. i. cap. xxiii.) In English: "And when he is taken away from the sight, he is quickly also out of mind." Your correspondent, MARY STEWART, wishes for any instance of an earlier use of the substance of this sentence than the time of the author of the Following of Christ, whoever he may have been. For, though it is often attributed to Thomas (not Saint) à Kempis, the authorship has been almost as much contested as that of the Letters of Junius.

A sentence very similar is familiar to me, and I believe it is from one of the early Fathers of the Church, though I cannot at present verify it, which says: "Quod oculus non videt, cor non dolet,"—that is, in English: "What the eye does not see, the heart does not lament." But met with another example of the same sort so beautifully expressed in French, this serves to be inserted here, though it is new, and cannot be of any remote date:

"Les morts durent bien peu: laissons les sous!
Hélas! dans le cercueil ils tombent en poussière
Moins vite qu'en nos cœurs."

Which may be thus imitated in English

"Short time the dead will last, decay they may
But in our hearts they soonest fall to dust."

F

ISMAEL FITZADAM (3rd S. viii. 435, Having taken a great interest in this unfavourable poet at the time of his appearance before the public nearly fifty years ago, I trouble you with a few lines more concerning him. I am inclined to do this from observing that the respondent, W. LEE, supposes that nothing is to be found in print relating to Ismael Fitzadam other than what he has quoted and referred to in the Literary Gazette and Jordan's Autobiography. There is an able and very interesting article on him in the Literary Magnet for October, under the heading of "Neglected Genius." It gives, not only the particulars of his career in a very feeling manner, and extracts from his poems, but, what is far more valuable, a long letter from Fitzadam himself addressed to the writer of the article; in which he relates his own sad history in the most touching manner, with many particulars not found elsewhere. When I add that this letter was only about two months before his death, the interest must be increased tenfold. Should the Editor wish to have it for insertion in "Notes and Queries," he has only to intimate such desire, and it will be forwarded to him with pleasure.

F.

VARIOUS PRONUNCIATION OF "OUGH" (3rd S. viii. 457.)—The following lines, from the Nac of May 17, 1823, there said to be taken from the Morning Post of Nov. 14, 1821, bear on the subject, being rhymes to the eye only:—

"Husband (says Joan), 'tis plain enough
That Roger loves our daughter;
And Betty loves him too, although
She treats his suit with laughter.
"For Roger always hems and coughs,
While on the field he's ploughing;
Then strives to see between the boughs,
If Betty heeds his coughing."

Had not Hood some lines of this sort?

MERQUIZOTTED (3rd S. viii. 437.)—Pro corruption of Merkgezeichnet, merkzeichen, and probably alluding to the dying or decorating of the beard. Does it not seem to the Spanish marquesado, marquiseado, or marcassite stone?

B

Demi Kappe.—Kappe, even at the present time, is a common German word for cap, bonnet, capuchon, capuche; probably a sort of head-gear, like a scull-cap, or what the Roman Catholic priests wear over their tonsure; sometimes, perhaps, of leather.

BREVIS.

EPITAPH AT ST. BOTOLPH'S (3rd S. viii. 210.)—The Latin lines are doubtless the original of an epitaph, which I find copied in an old scrap book. It is headed, "In Buckden Churchyard;" and I suppose was transcribed, many years ago, when I was there for Ordination:—

"Below, a husband and a wife are laid,
One flesh when living, and one dust now dead:
A sisters' ashes mingle in the urn,
And thus three bodies to one dust return.
But Thou, O Three in One, Almighty Power!
From this one dust, three bodies shalt restore."

S. S. S.

LORD PALMERSTON (3rd S. viii. 389, 443.)—With all deference to Mr. Grocott's ingenious explanation of the familiar guise assigned by Punch to the late premier, I cannot think that we need go to classical mythology for an answer to J.'s question. I suspect that it will be found that Lord Palmerston was thus depicted from the time when he spoke of himself as playing the part of "bottle-holder" to the pugnacious powers of Europe. About that time it was, or had been, a common feature in a slang and prize-fighting "get-up" to carry a geranium-leaf in the corner of the mouth—a pleasanter fashion, at any rate, than the more recent one of placing a tooth-pick in the same position.

Garrick Club.

C. G. PROWETT.

UNCOMMON RHYMES (3rd S. viii. 329, 376.)—Permit me to express my thanks to your correspondents for their additional examples and suggestions. I shall deem it a favour if J. H. (p. 368) will tell me where I can find the rhyme to "porringer" in print. He wishes to find a mate for silver: none has presented itself to me. I scarcely dare hint at the idea of coupling it with the old nursery rhyme "Ducky, ducky dilver." The rhyme to Lisbon, given by F. C. H., is attributed to the Earl of Rochester in Elegant Extracts (book iv. p. 847), but is slightly varied, as follows:—

"Here's a health to Kate,
Our Sovereign's mate,
Of the Royal House of Lisbon;
But the devil take Hyde,
And the bishop beside,
That made her bone of his bone."

The fair sex, I am afraid, will not forgive me for adding the following:—A French lady, asking for a rhyme to "coiffe" (a lady's headdress), received this answer—"Madam, there is none; for what belongs to a lady's head has neither rhyme nor reason."

W. C. B.

This is an interesting subject, and one that (for reasons which shall appear hereafter) has had my attention for some time past. May I ask any correspondent to find me words to rhyme with the following: "whiskey" (I will not accept of the usual old saw of "friskey") and "polka." I have words to answer, but I want further information.

S. REDMOND.

Liverpool.

Your correspondent, JAYDEE, says "the word step can be matched with no similar sound in English." I suggest skerp as a perfect rhyme for step.
N—N.

BEEST (3rd S. vii. 458, 507.)—The milk obtained from cows the first three meals—morning, evening, and morning—after calving, is called in Craven "bull jumpings," if a male calf; and "whie fidgings," if a heifer calf. Are these terms known in districts other than the one named, and what is their origin and meaning? Also, the derivation of whie?

OWENS COLLEGE LIBRARY.

ANOINTED, USED IN A BAD SENSE (3rd S. viii. 452.)—In reply to CUTHBERT BEDE's query, I would say that this use of the word is far from uncommon in Herefordshire. I have heard of an "anoointed pickle" from my earliest days. The word is given thus in Halliwell's Dictionary of Archaic and Provincial Words:—

"Anointed. Chief: roguish. 'An anoointed scamp.'—West."

Whether Mr. Hotten's surmise as to the true explanation is right, may be doubtful. It seems rather referable to the category of euphemisms, just as, in woman's parlance, one hears the words "Bless that man!" whilst tone and gesture indicate that the speaker means the opposite to blessing. "Anointed," again, is e. g. "rubbed," and this opens the question whether the sense is not something like that of the Greek ἐπίπιντος, "rubbed": "practised" said of a "rogue in grain." Soph. Ajax, 103. (See Liddell and Scott.)

But while upon the subject, I may call attention to another vulgar use of the verb to "anoint," which may be new to some readers of "N. & Q."

"To anoint," is sometimes used for "to beat" or "thrash." There are those living who can remember a case of assault being tried at Hereford, in which a clergyman was prosecutor, and the accused person a rustic. One of the witnesses deposed that he was working a couple of fields from the road-side, when he heard sounds of repeated blows, as it seemed to him, on the road. He left his work and made for the point from which the sounds came. When he reached the hedge next to the road he looked over, and saw——. "Well, what did you see?" quoth the examining counsel. "I saw Bill Jones 'nuting' (i. e. anointing) the parson." It should be stated that the witness had left his work, because he thought the sounds betokened ill-treatment of a beast, but when he saw what was really the case, he did not deem it necessary to interfere, and went back to his work. The chief actors in this affair are long since dead, but the phrase "amointing the parson" is curious, and perhaps deserves to live.

JAMES DAVIES.

Moor Court, Kington.

BATTER (3rd S. viii. 369.)—I find I am anticipated in showing "batter" is the Celtic for a road, e.g., Stoney Batter in Dublin. There is a vulgar old song commencing—

"Hi! for Bob and Jones,
Hi! for Stoney batter!"

To batter, in builders' language, I apprehend, has nothing to do with the Celtic "road," being a corruption of buttress. Walls built leaning away from you like ancient buttresses, are said now-a-days to batter. Is not basil a leather strap? To this day there is in the cavalry two slang phrases, "shoddy" and "basil." The men of my troop have often come to me and complained that the cloth of their tunics was only "shoddy," and the strappings inside their "overalls" of trousers only "basil,"—a very inferior sort of leather—and praying these "scampings" of the tailor might be punished accordingly.

EBORACTUM.

Whitby.

This expression does not at all generally, I fear, bear the semi-respectable meaning of going "on the spree," or "on the loose." It implies not an occasional break-out, but a continuous habit. Scarcely common to both sexes, but applicable to one only, it means, with a repulsively plain significance, and too literally, "on the streets." I do not expect to see the exact sense authoritatively determined, until some apt and learned coster resolve to give "N. & Q." the benefit of his opinion. But, my object is not so much to discuss this piece of slang as to "query" MR. SALA'S:—

"In short, to a builder, anything that is askew or tottering, is 'on the batter.'"

The word "batter" is a technical term for a purposed method of building. How, then, comes it to express also the result of a mere accident, "anything that is askew or tottering"? A wall is said to "batter" when it is built sloping outward: either buttress-like, to resist the thrust of a mass of earth, as in fortifications and embankments, or forming, as in our ancient castles, the base of a building.

JOHN A. C. VINCENT.

CHARLES BUTLER (3rd S. viii. 371, 464.)—I left Cheam School twenty years later than your correspondent G. B. Mr. Butler was then a hale, cheery, old man, wearing powder, and being slightly lame of one foot. He was a great favourite with the boys, who, for some forgotten reason, called him "Old Boops." He was understood to have been a cabin-boy, and to have written the article on "Mathematics" in the Encyclopædia Britannica. I know one to whom he was very kind, although he called him his "favourite." I remember an indolent good-natured boy (a nephew of Sir Thomas Picton, who fell at Waterloo) telling Mr. Butler that the second volume in his book was a fib,—“It was not ‘an Easy Introduction to the Mathematics,’ but a pretty hard one.”

Mr. Butler lived at a small white cottage, midway between Cheam and Sutton, and his family consisted—if I remember rightly—of two daughters and a son, the latter intended for the church. The Rev. James Wilding was presented to the living of Cherbury by one of his old pupils. He died last year, rather over eighty years of age.

M. L.

SCRASE FAMILY (3rd S. viii. 310, 425.)—Mr. Mark Anthony Lower has given a full genealogical memoir of this family, with pedigrees of its several branches, in the eighth vol. of the Sussex Archaeological Collections. It would seem that the family tradition is, that the Scrases came from Denmark, and, as your correspondent H. S. G. states, that they held lands in this country before and at the time of the Conquest; Mr. Lower, however, says, that so far as he has been able to investigate the matter, he has not found any documentary evidence in support of this statement, and that the name does not occur in Domesday or other early records of the Norman period.

J. C.

Streatham.

In 1856, I communicated to the Sussex Archaeological Collections (vol. viii.) a rather copious account of this old Sussex family, with several pedigrees. It was subsequently reprinted in the form of a pamphlet, and it can still be obtained of the publisher, Mr. J. R. Smith, of Soho Square.

MARK ANTHONY LOWER.

Lewes.

I see in "N. & Q." that the arms of Tuppin Scras, granted by Segar in 1616, correspond exactly with those claimed by the family of Scarth, viz., Azure, a dolphin naiant arg. between three escallops or. I should much like to hear further on this subject, and if to the arms they add the crest of an eagle rising from the stump of a tree, environed with a serpent, head to sinister; and also what is their legend, as the arms so far belong to the Scarth family.

J. S. D.

PORCELAIN MANUFACTORY AT LEITH OR EDINBURGH (3rd S. viii. 342.)—I believe that G. is right in suggesting that an old China work at Stockbridge is the porcelain manufactory referred to by W. C. J. at p. 310; but his memory is incorrect in saying that it occupied very nearly the site of the present Malta Terrace. I lived five years, 1810-15, at that very place, and I remember well that the ground now occupied by Malta Terrace was an open haugh, used as a bleaching green, alongside of the water of Leith, without a trace of any buildings having ever been on it. But, on the opposite high bank of the river, at the head of what is now West Claremont Street, and nearly on the site of St. Bernard's Church, whose late incumbent is so well known to the public as A. K. H. B. the "Country Parson," there was a large red tiled building, called "the China Work," whose history gave me no concern in those days. I have since, however, had occasion to know that it belonged to, or was established by, Ebenezer Mason, a China merchant in Edinburgh, who was a near relative, I rather think the maternal grandfather, or grand-uncle at least, of Mr. George Wood, of the late firm of Cramer, Beale, & Wood, now Cramer & Company, Limited, who will be able to give the querist all the information he may desire about it. I never heard of any such work at Leith, but, till I saw G.'s note, it did not strike me that it was the China work at Stockbridge, which, being on the "Water of Leith," though two miles inland from the town of that name, may have occasioned the uncertainty about its being in Edinburgh or Leith. V. S. V.

COSTREL (3rd S. viii. 394.)—According to Webster this word is also to be found in Tennyson:—

"A youth, that, following with a costrel, bore
The means of goodly welcome, flesh and wine."

J. C. HAHN, Ph. D.

Heidelberg.

THE CHURCHING OF WOMEN (3rd S. viii. 327, 422, 485.)—By turning to the edition of Crabbe's Works (Murray, 1821), I find that so far from the garbled quotation being evidence "that it was usual for the mothers of illegitimate children to be churched," your correspondent, had he given the passage entire, would have proved the opposite practice, exceptio probat regulam, and here was a solitary instance of the priest admitting an unmarried woman to the rite of churching. But to the proof, p. 53, "The Parish Register"—"Baptisms:"—

"Recorded next a babe of love I trace!
Of many loves, the mother's fresh disgrace."

In the quotation first is substituted for fresh, and the mark of admiration (!) omitted. The sequel or the Register runs on, more poetico, thus—

"Again, thou harlot!" &c. &c.

for ten lines (left out by your correspondent), which plainly declare the woman to have been a lewd wench, who had had many love children by different fathers, and although constantly reproved by the parochial priest, had persevered in her shameless conduct. At last, on a "fresh disgrace," she determined to become an honest woman, and to prove her sincerity—

"For rite of churching soon she made her way,
In dread of scandal, should she miss the day:
Two matrons came! with them she humbly knelt,
Their actions copied, and their comforts felt."

How far she felt the same comforts as the matrons from meekly kneeling at God's altar with them, is not for me to judge; but as she "copied their action" we may say with certainty that she had never been churched on former occasions after the pains and perils of childbirth; and from the mark of admiration (left out by your correspondent) "Two matrons came!" it is evident that the unusual admission of a "harlot" created no small scandal in the parish of Trowbridge. The explanation is, that Crabbe's benevolence got the better of his ministerial discretion, and as the Vicar of Wakefield entertained at the vicarage Miss Carolina Wilhelmina Amelia Skeggs through sheer goodnature, so Crabbe admitted the mother of many love children to partake of the rites of the church in the society of honest matrons. That he was like the Vicar of Wakefield—

"A man to all the country dear,"—

I can vouch for from my own knowledge of the neighbourhood where he resided. Gentle or simple all loved Crabbe, the poet—an adjunct always attached to his name in conversation in the town of Trowbridge, where his poetical "Parish Register" is not considered to be an exact record of church ministrations, even in the laxity of discipline so prevalent in the eighteenth century.

QUEEN'S GARDENS.

CURIOUS CUSTOM IN IRELAND (3rd S. viii. 325, 402, 486.)—I have to offer my thanks to your learned and courteous correspondent, F. C. H., for his rejoinder to the reply given by ELIADARBOS to my original note on this custom. Since the note appeared, a gentleman who is well acquainted with the manners and customs of the people in the west and south of Ireland, informs me that the custom alluded to is somewhat deeper rooted than the mere appearance of a hat; it originated in a religious feeling, and was introduced almost contemporaneously with Christianity into the island. It has reference to the deluge, and a short mental prayer is offered up, thanking God for his merciful promise not to destroy the world again by a flood of water, and for sending the rain for the benefit of the earth. When the Iris appears, and at the appearance of a new moon, the hat is raised, but not turned, and a short prayer is also offered up. In the latter instance the practice is not confined to any religious sect, as all join in it with equal thankfulness.

S. REDMOND.

Liverpool.

"LONDON UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE" (3rd S. viii. 474.)—As far as my recollection of the talk of the College students goes, I. and III. were from the same pen, Mitchell (junior); II. by the late Dr. William Cooke Taylor. The editors were the late Dr. Alexander Thompson, the eldest son of the late Dr. Anthony Todd Thompson, one of the professors, and Mr. Lloyd Hall, of the Inner Temple, barrister, who has since taken the surname of Fitzwilliams. Dr. A. Thomson very soon resigned his joint editorship to Dr. W. Cooke Taylor. The Magazine was afterwards merged in The Monthly, if I recollect rightly. F.

DRUIDISM (3rd S. viii. 266, 299.)—Diefenbach, in his Celtica, i. 160-163, has a long and learned article on "Druidæ, Δρυΐδæ, Δρυΐδαι, Drysidæ;" he is also of opinion that Druid, Welsh, derwydd, is derived from Welsh, derwen (pl. derw), an oak, related to Sansc. dāru, Greek, δρῦς, &c., and the highest authorities in Germany are for this derivation. Among the various attempts to explain the origin of the name of Druid, Diefenbach cites Owen, sub v. Derwyz; Baxter, sub v. Druidæ; Erfurdt in Ammian. xv. 9; Hist. de l'Acad. des Inscr. xviii. 185. J. C. HAHN, Ph. D.

Heidelberg.

GOVERNOR WALL (3rd S. viii. 438.)—In addition to the reply to MR. DANBY PALMER'S inquiry, allow me to state that James Montgomery has written an interesting poem, entitled "A Tale without a Name," which was suggested by the presence at Harrogate, about 1821, of the governor's disconsolate widow, Mrs. Wall. Her affection and devotedness are touchingly depicted in this poem (J. Montgomery's Poems, vol. iii. p. 278). Southey, in his Espriella's Letters, has also given a long account of Governor Wall's execution (Letter ix. vol. i. p. 97-108); and see further James Montgomery's Life, vol. iii. p. 253.

X. A. X.

PEG TANKARDS (3rd S. viii. 455.)—These are of all ages, from Saxon times almost to the present. The latest I have seen was a Swedish one of, I think, George the First or Second's time. P. P.

Miscellaneous.

NOTES ON BOOKS, ETC.

The Temple and The Sepulchre. By S. Smith, M.A., Vicar of Lois Weedon and Rural Dean. (Longman.)

A reprint, enlarged in some points, and accompanied with illustrative outlines, of a Series of Letters published in The Reader in the early part of the present year, in support of the general truth of Mr. Fergusson's views with regard to these holy places. Mr. Smith believes that, from the original records in Greek, of Josephus, Eusebius, and Socrates, it can be proved that the so-called Mosque of Omar stands over the spot of The Sepulchre, and the Mosque El-Aksa on the site of The Temple. The book is short, concise, and clear.

Viga Glum's Saga. The Story of Viga Glum, translated from the Icelandic, with Notes and an Introduction. By the Rt. Hon. Sir Edmund Head, Bart., K.C.B. (Williams & Norgate.)

This is an interesting contribution to our knowledge of Icelandic literature—the first prose literature which exists in any modern language spoken in Europe. "Fa," Sir E. Head observes, "in what country except Scandinavia, or in what other modern living language of Europe did there exist in the eleventh century a literature embracing history and prose fiction. The value of the book is materially increased by the translator's notes and illustrations."

An Alphabetical Dictionary of Coats of Arms belonging to Families in Great Britain and Ireland, forming an extensive Ordinary of British Armorial, &c. By W. Papworth. Part XIII.

We are glad to chronicle the progress of this work. This Part XIII. is the first portion of the Dictionary for the subscription of 1862, and two more shall complete three-fifths of the work. Would that number of Subscribers were increased sufficiently to enable Mr. Papworth to bring it to a close at an early period.

EXHIBITION OF NATIONAL PORTRAITS 1866.—Galleries in which Lord Derby's great scheme, so historically suggestive, is soon to find its realisation, are now in rapid progress of completion at South Kensington. Galleries are perfectly dry. The arrangements to maintain a proper uniform temperature (excluding all fire from the premises), and for constant watch by the police, and every security that can be provided. They have a good look of fitness both in their simple arrangement and decorative colouring, and are calculated to contain about 100 pictures, about the number of British oil paintings exhibited in 1862. We understand that they will not be to be adequately filled. On all hands there has been hearty response, and many family treasures which have never before left walls where they have hung for generations, have been placed at the disposal of the Committee. It has been proposed that the first year's Exhibition, which is to open in April next, should extend to the Revolutions of 1688; but we learn that the number of fine portraits offered may perhaps compel the Committee to terminate the first year's exhibition with the portraits of the Commonwealth.

We take this opportunity of announcing that the Committee are in search of authentic portraits of the following eminent persons, and will be glad to receive any information or assistance:—Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham, Protestant martyr, 1360—1417; Cardinal Beaufort, 1364—1447; Bourchier, Archbishop of Canterbury, died 1413; Sir Reginald Bray, statesman and architect, died 1496; Perkin Warbeck, Pretender to the Crown, executed 1499; John Skelton, Poet Laureate, 1460—1529; Thomas Sturges, versifier of the Psalms, died 1549; Edmund Spenser, 1553—1599; Sir George Etherege, comic writer, 1636—1689; Sir Charles Sedley, courtier and poet, 1639—1701.

BOOKS AND ODD VOLUMES WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Particulars of Price, &c., of the following Books to be sent to the gentleman by whom they are required, whose name and address are given for that purpose:—

W. R. CHURTON ON THE INFLUENCE OF THE SEPTUAGINT. CRO. 1861.
ALDERSEY DICKSON'S REMARKS ON THE MARGINAL NOTES OF THE BIBLE. 1849.
BISHOP TUNTON, THE TEXT OF THE ENGLISH BIBLE CONSIDERED. 8vo. 1834.
DR. CUMMINGS'S BIBLE REVISION AND TRANSLATION, 8vo. 1836.
Wanted by Mr. Geo. J. Cooper, Woodhaggs, Leeds.

Notices to Correspondents.

Being desirous of including as great a number of Replies as possible in the present volume, we have postponed many Queries and interesting Notes, which are in type.

In next Saturday's "N. & Q." (the first of a New Volume), or following number, among other interesting Papers, will appear—

Original Prospectus of "The Times."

Works of Charles Cotton.

Early Scottish Charters.

Important Bibliographical Announcement, by Mr. Hazlitt.

Site of Uplin.

Shakespeare and the Bible.

Shakespeare's Silence about Smoking.

Correspondence of Marie Antoinette.

Worcester Notes and Queries.

Battle against Home's Tragedies.

The Pury Papers.

Judges returning to the Bar.

Continental Railroad Literature.

The Palladium, &c. &c.

CONTEMPORANISM AND LONGEVITY. We had intended to commence with the New Year a series of papers, which have been for some time in preparation on this subject; but the difficulty of getting at facts is so great, and entails so much labour and correspondence, that we must postpone for a few weeks the mass of curious information which we have collected.

HAY, DR. BARLOW. We must remind our Correspondent that he has not fully complied with our request by giving the number of leaves or pages of "Contents" or of the "Progress" in his copy of the Eikon Basilike. As far as the particulars enable us, we think the edition a very uncommon one. We do not find it among the fifty-seven editions described in Henshaw's Vindication of King Charles the Martyr. As to printing, however, there were at least sixteen editions in 1649, and therefore this of the following year could not be earlier than the 20th. Of the second volume, the Beliquie Sacree Caroline, printed by Sam. Brown at the Hague, we are only able to say that the respective portions are generally so made up from different editions that the collation of one volume, or copy, is frequently inapplicable to another.

G. M. will find the Symbols of the Four Evangelists very fully treated in our last S. I. 363, 471; H. 12, 45, 205, 364.

M. The origin of the metaphor is doubtless Gen. xiv. 14: "Isaacar is a strong ass, reaching down between two borders."

TEQUILA. For the history of Grog and Meag, see "N. & Q." and S. I. 251, and Fairholt's History of the Giants in Guildhall, 1860.

"Horne & Quenne" is registered for transmission abroad.

"THE LONDON REVIEW" CHURCH COMMISSION. THE ESTABLISHED CHURCH IN IRELAND.

THE Report of this Commission, commencing on Saturday, January 6, 1866, will present to the Public and the Legislature a complete and faithful picture of the Irish Church, of the various religious bodies with which it enters into competition, and the effect of their mutual relations upon the peace and prosperity of the country.

The Commission will bring to bear upon the discussion the light of FACTS, and will enquire—What was the design of the founders of that Church? What purposes was it expected to answer? Has it failed to accomplish its mission? and if so, to what causes should its failure be ascribed? By what reforms or modifications can its defects be removed, or the impediments in its way be overcome? Should the Episcopal denomination in Ireland be dis-established, and be left, in common with other churches, to support its ministrations on the voluntary principle? Religious equality being the aim of modern State policy, should this object be attained by the withdrawal of all religious endowments, or by the extension and equalization of the system of State support? Or should the Irish Establishment in its present state be maintained at all hazards, either for the sake of the particular form of Christianity it embodies, or for the sake of the political system of which it is said to form an essential part?

"THE LONDON REVIEW."

Price 6d.; Stamped 5d. Annual Subscription, 11. 1s.
P.O. Orders to be made payable to I. SEAMAN.
Office, 11, Southampton Street, Strand, W.C.

LONDON REVIEW.—With the LONDON REVIEW of Saturday, DEC. 30, 1865, and Saturday, JAN. 6, 1866, will be published (gratis) two special and highly interesting Supplements, reviewing the Progress of Literature, Science, Art, and Religion in this country and abroad during the year 1865.

Price 6d.; Stamped 6d. Annual Subscription, Post Free, including three special Supplements, 11. 1s.

Office, 11, Southampton Street, Strand.

LANCASHIRE LYRICS.—MODERN SONGS AND BALLADS OF THE COUNTY PALATINE. Price 5s.
Edited by JOHN HARLAND, F.S.A.

 A limited number printed on large paper, crown 4to, for which early application is necessary, price 21s.

London: WHITTAKER & CO.

THE ART-JOURNAL.

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW VOLUME.

Names of the principal Writers who will contribute to the ART-JOURNAL for 1866:—

JOHN RUSKIN, M.A.	FRANK GILBERT HAMERTON.
PETER CORNISHAM, F.S.A.	LEWIS WILKINSON JONES, F.S.A.
WILLIAM CHAFFERS, F.S.A.	DR. CHAS. CALVERT, F.R.S.
Mrs. BURY FALLNER.	F. W. FARNESS, F.S.A.
Mrs. S. C. HALL.	HENRY MURRAY, F.S.A.
J. BAUVINOTON ATEWSON.	W. F. GAVLEY.
REV. E. L. CUTTS, M.A.	REV. CHARLES BOUTELL, M.A.
JAMES DAVENPORT.	S. C. HALL, F.S.A.

The Line Engravings to be published in the series for the ensuing year will be from paintings and sculpture by the following celebrated artists:—

W. P. FRITH, R.A.	F. GOODALL, R.A.	R. MONTI.
T. WEBSTER, R.A.	T. S. COOPER, R.A.	J. EDWARDS.
J. R. HERBERT, R.A.	T. FAUL, R.A.	J. DURHAM.
W. E. FRITH, R.A.	S. GAVIN, R.A.	C. BARTER.
J. H. FOLEY, R.A.	J. N. PATON, R.S.A.	G. HALE.
J. PHILLIP, R.A.	J. C. MÜLLER.	H. BRIGHT.
P. F. POOLE, R.A.	W. HEMMELAY.	J. F. HERING
A. ELMORE, R.A.	J. H. S. MANN.	and others.
F. R. LEE, R.A.	W. W. STORY.

The Part for JANUARY, 1866, price 1s. 6d., will contain the following

LINE ENGRAVINGS.

- I. THE ORPHAN, by F. LEAFROOF, after T. FAUL, R.A.
- II. PHOEBE MAYFLOWER, by C. H. JESS, after R. GAVIN, F.S.A.
- III. THE SLEEP OF SORROW AND THE DREAM OF JOY, by H. W. STODART, after R. MONTI.

LITERARY CONTRIBUTIONS.

1. JOHN RUSKIN, M.A.—The Census of Aglais.
2. FRANK GILBERT HAMERTON.—Liber Memorialis. I.—On the Artistic Observation of Nature.
3. WILLIAM CHAFFERS, F.S.A.—Glass: its Manufacture and Examples. I.—Ancient Glass, with 17 Examples.
4. [Mrs. BURY FALLNER.—Historic Devices and Badges. III.—The Medal, with 17 Illustrations.
5. JAMES DAVENPORT.—Modern Painters of Belgium. I.—Nicolas de Keyser, with copies from three of his works.
6. REV. CHARLES BOUTELL, M.A.—The Albert Chapel in Windsor Castle.
7. S. C. HALL, F.S.A. AND Mrs. HALL.—The Authors of the Age. XIV. Robert Southey, with 5 Engravings.
8. A Substitute for Wood Engraving, with a specimen production.
9. Bordeaux and its Art-Exhibition of 1865.
10. Royal Scottish Academy.
11. Art in Gold.
12. The Chapter-house of Westminster Abbey.
13. Pictorial Mosaic Decorations for the South Kensington Museum.
14. Winter Exhibition of the Society of Painters in Water-Colour. &c. &c.

London: VIRTUE & CO., 25, Ivy Lane.

In a few Days. In Imperial 8vo, with 226 Illustrations (Coloured Lithographs and Woodcuts), 51s. 6d.

THE HEAVENS.

AN ILLUSTRATED HANDBOOK OF POPULAR ASTRONOMY.

[By AMEDEE GUILLEMIN.

Edited by J. NORMAN LOCKYER, F.R.S.

RICHARD BENTLEY, Publisher in Ordinary to Her Majesty.

On January 1st,

PART I. of the COMMENTARY WHOLLY BIBLICAL, price Half-a-Crown. To be completed in Sixteen Monthly Parts.

SAMUEL BAGSTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster Row, London.

THE "FAMILIAR QUOTATIONS" SERIES OF BOOKS, SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION BOOKS.

Beautifully printed on toned paper, and tastefully bound in cloth, price 6s. each.

THE BOOK OF FAMILIAR QUOTATIONS. CHOICE POEMS AND LYRICS.

CHOICE THOUGHTS FROM SHAKSPEARE. WISE SAYINGS OF THE GREAT AND GOOD.

THE BOOK OF HUMOUR, WIT AND WISDOM.

ROBIN HOOD (with Illustrations).

London: WHITTAKER & CO.

LANCASHIRE DIALECT SONGS.

Price 5s.

THE SONGS OF THE WILSONS. Edited, with Members of the Wilson Family, by JOHN HALLAND, F.R.S. Contains, in addition to the well-known songs of these Popular Ballad Writers, several which have not been printed hitherto.

 A few Copies on large paper, for Collectors, price 6s.
London: WHITTAKER & CO.

BALLADS AND SONGS OF LANCASHIRE, chiefly older than the 16th Century. Price 5s. Edited by JOHN HALLAND, F.R.S.

 A few Copies of the large paper Edition, which can never be reprinted, price 6s.

London: WHITTAKER & CO.

BAGSTER'S POLYGLOT BIBLES. In BAGSTER'S flexible bindings.

At all the principal Bookellers; and at 12, Paternoster Row, London.

Just published.

THOS. DE LA RUE & CO.'S INDELIBLE RED LETTER DIARIES FOR 1892, edited by JAMES GLAISHER, ESQ., F.R.S. With an Engraving of Lunar Mountains, and an original Article on the Moon by PROFESSOR PHILLIPS, F.R.S. In various sizes, suitable for the Pocket or Desk, and in a great variety of bindings. May be had of all Bookellers and Stationers.

Published by J. Clements, Little Pulteney Street, price 7d., a new Work on the Teeth, entitled

PURE DENTISTRY, and WHAT IT DOES FOR US. By A. ENKELL, Grosvenor Street, W.

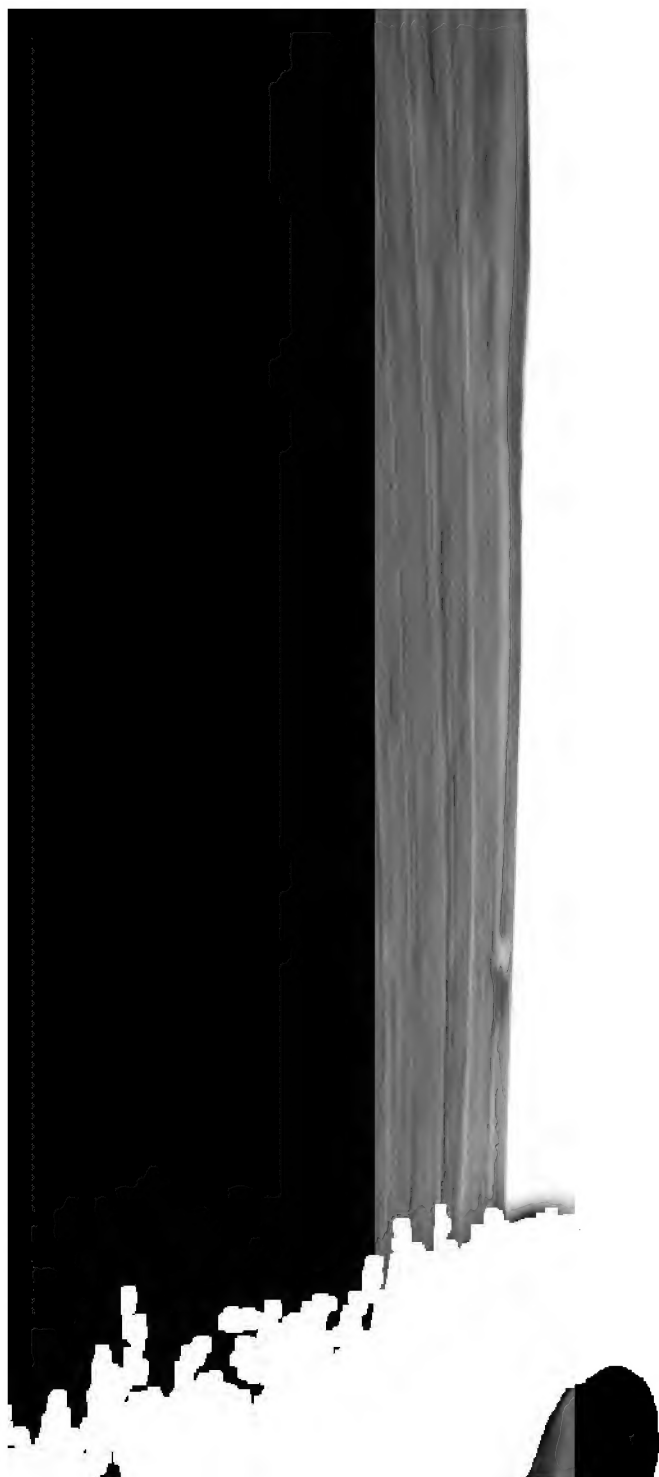

"We feel certain all who make themselves acquainted with the contents of the book through our instrumentality, will thank us for having directed their attention to Mr. Enkell's work, as assuredly none can read it without deriving the greatest benefit."—The Sun, Aug. 25.

Sold by SIMKIN & MARSHALL, and may be had of all Bookellers.

TO BOOKBUYERS.—SECOND-HAND BOOKS in all Branches of Standard Literature: English History and Literature in General. A large Collection of Greek and Latin Classics, Translations, and Mathematics. A board required for postage of Catalogues.

W. HEATH, 49, Oxford Street, London.

SCIENTIFIC PRESENTS.—Elementary Collections to illustrate the New Edition of "Lyell's Elements of Geology," and facilitate the Study of Mineralogy and Geology can be had of S. & P., 25, 27, 29, 31, 33, 35, 37, 39, 41, 43, 45, 47, 49, 51, 53, 55, 57, 59, 61, 63, 65, 67, 69, 71, 73, 75, 77, 79, 81, 83, 85, 87, 89, 91, 93, 95, 97, 99, 101, 103, 105, 107, 109, 111, 113, 115, 117, 119, 121, 123, 125, 127, 129, 131, 133, 135, 137, 139, 141, 143, 145, 147, 149, 151, 153, 155, 157, 159, 161, 163, 165, 167, 169, 171, 173, 175, 177, 179, 181, 183, 185, 187, 189, 191, 193, 195, 197, 199, 201, 203, 205, 207, 209, 211, 213, 215, 217, 219, 221, 223, 225, 227, 229, 231, 233, 235, 237, 239, 241, 243, 245, 247, 249, 251, 253, 255, 257, 259, 261, 263, 265, 267, 269, 271, 273, 275, 277, 279, 281, 283, 285, 287, 289, 291, 293, 295, 297, 299, 301, 303, 305, 307, 309, 311, 313, 315, 317, 319, 321, 323, 325, 327, 329, 331, 333, 335, 337, 339, 341, 343, 345, 347, 349, 351, 353, 355, 357, 359, 361, 363, 365, 367, 369, 371, 373, 375, 377, 379, 381, 383, 385, 387, 389, 391, 393, 395, 397, 399, 401, 403, 405, 407, 409, 411, 413, 415, 417, 419, 421, 423, 425, 427, 429, 431, 433, 435, 437, 439, 441, 443, 445, 447, 449, 451, 453, 455, 457, 459, 461, 463, 465, 467, 469, 471, 473, 475, 477, 479, 481, 483, 485, 487, 489, 491, 493, 495, 497, 499, 501, 503, 505, 507, 509, 511, 513, 515, 517, 519, 521, 523, 525, 527, 529, 531, 533, 535, 537, 539, 541, 543, 545, 547, 549, 551, 553, 555, 557, 559, 561, 563, 565, 567, 569, 571, 573, 575, 577, 579, 581, 583, 585, 587, 589, 591, 593, 595, 597, 599, 601, 603, 605, 607, 609, 611, 613, 615, 617, 619, 621, 623, 625, 627, 629, 631, 633, 635, 637, 639, 641, 643, 645, 647, 649, 651, 653, 655, 657, 659, 661, 663, 665, 667, 669, 671, 673, 675, 677, 679, 681, 683, 685, 687, 689, 691, 693, 695, 697, 699, 701, 703, 705, 707, 709, 711, 713, 715, 717, 719, 721, 723, 725, 727, 729, 731, 733, 735, 737, 739, 741, 743, 745, 747, 749, 751, 753, 755, 757, 759, 761, 763, 765, 767, 769, 771, 773, 775, 777, 779, 781, 783, 785, 787, 789, 791, 793, 795, 797, 799, 801, 803, 805, 807, 809, 811, 813, 815, 817, 819, 821, 823, 825, 827, 829, 831, 833, 835, 837, 839, 841, 843, 845, 847, 849, 851, 853, 855, 857, 859, 861, 863, 865, 867, 869, 871, 873, 875, 877, 879, 881, 883, 885, 887, 889, 891, 893, 895, 897, 899, 901, 903, 905, 907, 909, 911, 913, 915, 917, 919, 921, 923, 925, 927, 929, 931, 933, 935, 937, 939, 941, 943, 945, 947, 949, 951, 953, 955, 957, 959, 961, 963, 965, 967, 969, 971, 973, 975, 977, 979, 981, 983, 985, 987, 989, 991, 993, 995, 997, 999, 1001, 1003, 1005, 1007, 1009, 1011, 1013, 1015, 1017, 1019, 1021, 1023, 1025, 1027, 1029, 1031, 1033, 1035, 1037, 1039, 1041, 1043, 1045, 1047, 1049, 1051, 1053, 1055, 1057, 1059, 1061, 1063, 1065, 1067, 1069, 1071, 1073, 1075, 1077, 1079, 1081, 1083, 1085, 1087, 1089, 1091, 1093, 1095, 1097, 1099, 1101, 1103, 1105, 1107, 1109, 1111, 1113, 1115, 1117, 1119, 1121, 1123, 1125, 1127, 1129, 1131, 1133, 1135, 1137, 1139, 1141, 1143, 1145, 1147, 1149, 1151, 1153, 1155, 1157, 1159, 1161, 1163, 1165, 1167, 1169, 1171, 1173, 1175, 1177, 1179, 1181, 1183, 1185, 1187, 1189, 1191, 1193, 1195, 1197, 1199, 1201, 1203, 1205, 1207, 1209, 1211, 1213, 1215, 1217, 1219, 1221, 1223, 1225, 1227, 1229, 1231, 1233, 1235, 1237, 1239, 1241, 1243, 1245, 1247, 1249, 1251, 1253, 1255, 1257, 1259, 1261, 1263, 1265, 1267, 1269, 1271, 1273, 1275, 1277, 1279, 1281, 1283, 1285, 1287, 1289, 1291, 1293, 1295, 1297, 1299, 1301, 1303, 1305, 1307, 1309, 1311, 1313, 1315, 1317, 1319, 1321, 1323, 1325, 1327, 1329, 1331, 1333, 1335, 1337, 1339, 1341, 1343, 1345, 1347, 1349, 1351, 1353, 1355, 1357, 1359, 1361, 1363, 1365, 1367, 1369, 1371, 1373, 1375, 1377, 1379, 1381, 1383, 1385, 1387, 1389, 1391, 1393, 1395, 1397, 1399, 1401, 1403, 1405, 1407, 1409, 1411, 1413, 1415, 1417, 1419, 1421, 1423, 1425, 1427, 1429, 1431, 1433, 1435, 1437, 1439, 1441, 1443, 1445, 1447, 1449, 1451, 1453, 1455, 1457, 1459, 1461, 1463, 1465, 1467, 1469, 1471, 1473, 1475, 1477, 1479, 1481, 1483, 1485, 1487, 1489, 1491, 1493, 1495, 1497, 1499, 1501, 1503, 1505, 1507, 1509, 1511, 1513, 1515, 1517, 1519, 1521, 1523, 1525, 1527, 1529, 1531, 1533, 1535, 1537, 1539, 1541, 1543, 1545, 1547, 1549, 1551, 1553, 1555, 1557, 1559, 1561, 1563, 1565, 1567, 1569, 1571, 1573, 1575, 1577, 1579, 1581, 1583, 1585, 1587, 1589, 1591, 1593, 1595, 1597, 1599, 1601, 1603, 1605, 1607, 1609, 1611, 1613, 1615, 1617, 1619, 1621, 1623, 1625, 1627, 1629, 1631, 1633, 1635, 1637, 1639, 1641, 1643, 1645, 1647, 1649, 1651, 1653, 1655, 1657, 1659, 1661, 1663, 1665, 1667, 1669, 1671, 1673, 1675, 1677, 1679, 1681, 1683, 1685, 1687, 1689, 1691, 1693, 1695, 1697, 1699, 1701, 1703, 1705, 1707, 1709, 1711, 1713, 1715, 1717, 1719, 1721, 1723, 1725, 1727, 1729, 1731, 1733, 1735, 1737, 1739, 1741, 1743, 1745, 1747, 1749, 1751, 1753, 1755, 1757, 1759, 1761, 1763, 1765, 1767, 1769, 1771, 1773, 1775, 1777, 1779, 1781, 1783, 1785, 1787, 1789, 1791, 1793, 1795, 1797, 1799, 1801, 1803, 1805, 1807, 1809, 1811, 1813, 1815, 1817, 1819, 1821, 1823, 1825, 1827, 1829, 1831, 1833, 1835, 1837, 1839, 1841, 1843, 1845, 1847, 1849, 1851, 1853, 1855, 1857, 1859, 1861, 1863, 1865, 1867, 1869, 1871, 1873, 1875, 1877, 1879, 1881, 1883, 1885, 1887, 1889, 1891, 1893, 1895, 1897, 1899, 1901, 1903, 1905, 1907, 1909, 1911, 1913, 1915, 1917, 1919, 1921, 1923, 1925, 1927, 1929, 1931, 1933, 1935, 1937, 1939, 1941, 1943, 1945, 1947, 1949, 1951, 1953, 1955, 1957, 1959, 1961, 1963, 1965, 1967, 1969, 1971, 1973, 1975, 1977, 1979, 1981, 1983, 1985, 1987, 1989, 1991, 1993, 1995, 1997, 1999, 2001, 2003, 2005, 2007, 2009, 2011, 2013, 2015, 2017, 2019, 2021, 2023, 2025, 2027, 2029, 2031, 2033, 2035, 2037, 2039, 2041, 2043, 2045, 2047, 2049, 2051, 2053, 2055, 2057, 2059, 2061, 2063, 2065, 2067, 2069, 2071, 2073, 2075, 2077, 2079, 2081, 2083, 2085, 2087, 2089, 2091, 2093, 2095, 2097, 2099, 2101, 2103, 2105, 2107, 2109, 2111, 2113, 2115, 2117, 2119, 2121, 2123, 2125, 2127, 2129, 2131, 2133, 2135, 2137, 2139, 2141, 2143, 2145, 2147, 2149, 2151, 2153, 2155, 2157, 2159, 2161, 2163, 2165, 2167, 2169, 2171, 2173, 2175, 2177, 2179, 2181, 2183, 2185, 2187, 2189, 2191, 2193, 2195, 2197, 2199, 2201, 2203, 2205, 2207, 2209, 2211, 2213, 2215, 2217, 2219, 2221, 2223, 2225, 2227, 2229, 2231, 2233, 2235, 2237, 2239, 2241, 2243, 2245, 2247, 2249, 2251, 2253, 2255, 2257, 2259, 2261, 2263, 2265, 2267, 2269, 2271, 2273, 2275, 2277, 2279, 2281, 2283, 2285, 2287, 2289, 2291, 2293, 2295, 2297, 2299, 2301, 2303, 2305, 2307, 2309, 2311, 2313, 2315, 2317, 2319, 2321, 2323, 2325, 2327, 2329, 2331, 2333, 2335, 2337, 2339, 2341, 2343, 2345, 2347, 2349, 2351, 2353, 2355, 2357, 2359, 2361, 2363, 2365, 2367, 2369, 2371, 2373, 2375, 2377, 2379, 2381, 2383, 2385, 2387, 2389, 2391, 2393, 2395, 2397, 2399, 2401, 2403, 2405, 2407, 2409, 2411, 2413, 2415, 2417, 2419, 2421, 2423, 2425, 2427, 2429, 2431, 2433, 2435, 2437, 2439, 2441, 2443, 2445, 2447, 2449, 2451, 2453, 2455, 2457, 2459, 2461, 2463, 2465, 2467, 2469, 2471, 2473, 2475, 2477, 2479, 2481, 2483, 2485, 2487, 2489, 2491, 2493, 2495, 2497, 2499, 2501, 2503, 2505, 2507, 2509, 2511, 2513, 2515, 2517, 2519, 2521, 2523, 2525, 2527, 2529, 2531, 2533, 2535, 2537, 2539, 2541, 2543, 2545, 2547, 2549, 2551, 2553, 2555, 2557, 2559, 2561, 2563, 2565, 2567, 2569, 2571, 2573, 2575, 2577, 2579, 2581, 2583, 2585, 2587, 2589, 2591, 2593, 2595, 2597, 2599, 2601, 2603, 2605, 2607, 2609, 2611, 2613, 2615, 2617, 2619, 2621, 2623, 2625, 2627, 2629, 2631, 2633, 2635, 2637, 2639, 2641, 2643, 2645, 2647, 2649, 2651, 2653, 2655, 2657, 2659, 2661, 2663, 2665, 2667, 2669, 2671, 2673, 2675, 2677, 2679, 2681, 2683, 2685, 2687, 2689, 2691, 2693, 2695, 2697, 2699, 2701, 2703, 2705, 2707, 2709, 2711, 2713, 2715, 2717, 2719, 2721, 2723, 2725, 2727, 2729, 2731, 2733, 2735, 2737, 2739, 2741, 2743, 2745, 2747, 2749, 2751, 2753, 2755, 2757, 2759, 2761, 2763, 2765, 2767, 2769, 2771, 2773, 2775, 2777, 2779, 2781, 2783, 2785, 2787, 2789, 2791, 2793, 2795, 2797, 2799, 2801, 2803, 2805, 2807, 2809, 2811, 2813, 2815, 2817, 2819, 2821, 2823, 2825, 2827, 2829, 2831, 2833, 2835, 2837, 2839, 2841, 2843, 2845, 2847, 2849, 2851, 2853, 2855, 2857, 2859, 2861, 2863, 2865, 2867, 2869, 2871, 2873, 2875, 2877, 2879, 2881, 2883, 2885, 2887, 2889, 2891, 2893, 2895, 2897, 2899, 2901, 2903, 2905, 2907, 2909, 2911, 2913, 2915, 2917, 2919, 2921, 2923, 2925, 2927, 2929, 2931, 2933, 2935, 2937, 2939, 2941, 2943, 2945, 2947, 2949, 2951, 2953, 2955, 2957, 2959, 2961, 2963, 2965, 2967, 2969, 2971, 2973, 2975, 2977, 2979, 2981, 2983, 2985, 2987, 2989, 2991, 2993, 2995, 2997, 2999, 3001, 3003, 3005, 3007, 3009, 3011, 3013, 3015, 3017, 3019, 3021, 3023, 3025, 3027, 3029, 3031, 3033, 3035, 3037, 3039, 3041, 3043, 3045, 3047, 3049, 3051, 3053, 3055, 3057, 3059, 3061, 3063, 3065, 3067, 3069, 3071, 3073, 3075, 3077, 3079, 3081, 3083, 3085, 3087, 3089, 3091, 3093, 3095, 3097, 3099, 3101, 3103, 3105, 3107, 3109, 3111, 3113, 3115, 3117, 3119, 3121, 3123, 3125, 3127, 3129, 3131, 3133, 3135, 3137, 3139, 3141, 3143, 3145, 3147, 3149, 3151, 3153, 3155, 3157, 3159, 3161, 3163, 3165, 3167, 3169, 3171, 3173, 3175, 3177, 3179, 3181, 3183, 3185, 3187, 3189, 3191, 3193, 3195, 3197, 3199, 3201, 3203, 3205, 3207, 3209, 3211, 3213, 3215, 3217, 3219, 3221, 3223, 3225, 3227, 3229, 3231, 3233, 3235, 3237, 3239, 3241, 3243, 3245, 3247, 3249, 3251, 3253, 3255, 3257, 3259, 3261, 3263, 3265, 3267, 3269, 3271, 3273, 3275, 3277, 3279, 3281, 3283, 3285, 3287, 3289, 3291, 3293, 3295, 3297, 3299, 3301, 3303, 3305, 3307, 3309, 3311, 3313, 3315, 3317, 3319, 3321, 3323, 3325, 3327, 3329, 3331, 3333, 3335, 3337, 3339, 3341, 3343, 3345, 3347, 3349, 3351, 3353, 3355, 3357, 3359, 3361, 3363, 3365, 3367, 3369, 3371, 3373, 3375, 3377, 3379, 3381, 3383, 3385, 3387, 3389, 3391, 3393, 3395, 3397, 3399, 3401, 3403, 3405, 3407, 3409, 3411, 3413, 3415, 3417, 3419, 3421, 3423, 3425, 3427, 3429, 3431, 3433, 3435, 3437, 3439, 3441, 3443, 3445, 3447, 3449, 3451, 3453, 3455, 3457, 3459, 3461, 3463, 3465, 3467, 3469, 3471, 3473, 3475, 3477, 3479, 3481, 3483, 3485, 3487, 3489, 3491, 3493, 3495, 3497, 3499, 3501, 3503, 3505, 3507, 3509, 3511, 3513, 3515, 3517, 3519, 3521, 3523, 3525, 3527, 3529, 3531, 3533, 3535, 3537, 3539, 3541, 3543, 3545, 3547, 3549, 3551, 3553, 3555, 3557, 3559, 3561, 3563, 3565, 3567, 3569, 3571, 3573, 3575, 3577, 3579, 3581, 3583, 3585, 3587, 3589, 3591, 3593, 3595, 3597, 3599, 3601, 3603, 3605, 3607, 3609, 3611, 3613, 3615, 3617, 3619, 3621, 3623, 3625, 3627, 3629, 3631, 3633, 3635, 3637, 3639, 3641, 3643, 3645, 3647, 3649, 3651, 3653, 3655, 3657, 3659, 3661, 3663, 3665, 3667, 3669, 3671, 3673, 3675, 3677, 3679, 3681, 3683, 3685, 3687, 3689, 3691, 3693, 3695, 3697, 3699, 3701, 3703, 3705, 3707, 3709, 3711, 3713, 3715, 3717, 3719, 3721, 3723, 3725, 3727, 3729, 3731, 3733, 3735, 3737, 3739, 3741, 3743, 3745, 3747, 3749, 3751, 3753, 3755, 3757, 3759, 3761, 3763, 3765, 3767, 3769, 3771, 3773, 3775, 3777, 3779, 3781, 3783, 3785, 3787, 3789, 3791, 3793, 3795, 3797, 3799, 3801, 3803, 3805, 3807, 3809, 3811, 3813, 3815, 3817, 3819, 3821, 3823, 3825, 3827, 3829, 3831, 3833, 3835, 3837, 3839, 3841, 3843, 3845, 3847, 3849, 3851, 3853, 3855, 3857, 3859, 3861, 3863, 3865, 3867, 3869, 3871, 3873, 3875, 3877, 3879, 3881, 3883, 3885, 3887, 3889, 3891, 3893, 38

1000

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN

3 9015 02044 0502

BUILDING USE ONLY

